This commission originated in the proposition, first, of appropriating $2,250,000, or thereabouts, for a tunnel in New York between the New York Central and Pennsylvania terminals. The Postmaster General advocated the expenditure of this money for the construction of a tunnel to take care of the mail. Your committee had hearings upon that proposition and discovered, first, that the congestion that they anticipated would not occur inside of about three years and that the tunnel could be constructed in one year. In view of the condition of the Treasury, the committee thought it best not to make that appropriation, and especially as there were representatives from the city of New York who maintained that it would not answer the purposes after it was constructed. The president of the Chamber of Commerce of The Bronx maintained that it was not the proper method of handling the mails, but that a belt railroad could carry this mail, as it was principally mail destined out of the city. The hearings disclosed that the committee would be unwarranted in acting upon this proposition without further information, especially as it was not an immediate emergency measure.

The department then recommended that a commission be appointed composed of representatives of the Post Office Department to look into the matter of the tunnel in order that it could determine and report to Congress the necessity, the advisability, and the cost of a tunnel.

Complaint was made to the committee by substantial men and intelligent men that conditions existed in the transportation of the mail in all of the large cities which needed a remedy, that congestion existed, and that present means of transportation were insufficient. It was insisted, for instance, that the space system, whereby the mail is now carried by the railroads, was a mistake, and was the cause of much congestion. It was also plain that the custom of the department in doing away with post-office clerks on the railroads, allowing the mail to be centered at terminals and there distributed, was the cause of congestion and delay of the mails.

The committee heard men who were interested in the restoration of the pneumatic-tube service—not personally interested, many of them, in the service itself as an institution, but business men from the various large cities. They maintained to the committee that the substitution of trucks for pneumatic tubes in these congested cities had resulted not only in a delay of the mail and a congestion of the mail, but in actual extra expense and cost to the Government, the statement of the Postmaster General to the contrary notwithstanding.

Men came before the committee and insisted that these tubes should be reestablished, but your committee did not feel like recommending the reestablishment of them. It did feel, however, that it was the duty of the committee and of the Congress to find out the facts in reference to all of these facilities, and that if we were to have a commission we should instruct that commission to report on all of these subjects.

The Senator from Tennessee says that commissions have repeatedly investigated this subject. Yes, Mr. President; and as repeatedly they have reported in favor of retaining the tubes, with the exception of once, and that was an investigation made by representatives of the Post Office Department. The Hughes Commission, the commission headed by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], all of these commissions investigated and reported favorably upon these tubes; but you will remember that the last time we acted upon the matter we inserted the tube provision in both Houses, and the President vetoed the appropriation bill, because he said he would not stand for the tubes. We therefore eliminated them.

Section 3 of this bill simply provides that the pneumatic-tube machinery may remain in the basements and sub-basements of the post offices, where they will not under any circumstances interfere with the Government's conduct of the mail, but that some of this immense machinery that is now in these basements and not interfering with anybody or anything can remain.

I say to you, Mr. President and Senators, that whatever you do now, this Government is going back to the pneumatic-tube service in some of these large cities. The world has recognized its importance. There is not a large capital city in the world that does not conduct its mail through pneumatic tubes. Those tubes make it possible to remove from the congested streets the trucks that are interfering with traffic and destroying human life.

We make no appropriation for this purpose; but in view of the almost certainty that the tubes will some time be restored, your committee felt that it would be gross extravagance on the part of the Government to order that machinery out, only to be restored at a later day, when in no case was it interfering with the Post Office Department.

Mr. President, in section 9, the one we have under consideration, we provide for an inexpensive and yet for an efficient commission to investigate some of the greatest problems which are affecting the transportation of the mail to-day. If you do not want that information, if you think it is not worth while, very well.

Does the Senate want information in reference to the tunnel for which the Postmaster General asks an appropriation of $2,225,000, when the very people in New York themselves are divided as to its advisability? Does the Senate want any information as to the results of the space system in carrying the mails on the railroads? Does the Senate want information as to the cause of mail congestion in the large cities and throughout the country? If it does, it will vote for section 9.

When that is disposed of, if the Senator from Tennessee still insists that we ought not to keep this machinery in the post offices, but should wantonly destroy property which may and probably will have to be restored, and the Government will have to pay for it, Senators may follow his advice; but, Mr. President, I am not prejudiced on this subject. I recognize that the Post Office Department is, if I may use a slang phrase, "dead against" the pneumatic-tube service.

I know there are some of the owners of the pneumatic tubes who are very much interested personally in their retention. But, sir, having viewed this subject from an unbiased standpoint, having no regard especially for the pneumatic-tube people, knowing not over one or two of them, and being absolutely indifferent as to what may happen to them personally, I am of the opinion, as I think practically every member of the committee is of the opinion, that we ought to create this commission, and that we ought to retain this machinery until the Congress has had time to investigate and act upon it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Do not all the reports show that the cost of transporting the mail through the tubes is greater than the cost of transporting it in any other way?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think they do. I do not think, in the first place, that it is possible to make a clear comparison.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator recall the testimony of Postmaster Carlyle, of Chicago, for instance, when he stated that they could transport the mails which were being transported by tubes at just a little less than one-fourth, or it may be one-fifth, of the cost?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I realize that there has been quite a good deal of testimony on that subject; but I also realize that it is absolutely impossible for the department, certainly for the committee, to determine what the relative costs of the two are, because they are mingled. For instance, take the truck service. We do know that taking into consideration the cost that was made necessary by the purchase of the extra trucks for carrying the mail, added to the expense of carrying it by the trucks themselves, the pay was more than the annual pay that was granted to the tube owners.

But some of the trucks carried more mail than was theretofore carried by the tubes. So it would be unfair for me to say that all the extra expense entailed through carrying the mail by trucks was due to a transfer from the tube system.

But, Mr. President, what I maintain, and what can not be denied, is that the tubes have facilitated the transportation of the mails, and you will go back to them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I recall the testimony, it is overwhelmingly to the effect that the cost will be greatly lessened by the tubes having been removed; that they have had actual experience, actual tests. I know the Senator from Michigan so well that I know at a time like this, when the people are burdened with heavy taxation, he does not want to put any greater burdens upon them than they now have. Surely, it seems to me that the decrease in the expense of carrying the mails is a matter of sufficient importance to make every Senator feel that he ought to have a personal interest in this matter, to protect the interests of our Government.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, does not the Senator know that there is no proposition to expend any money under this section?

Mr. McKELLAR. But under the provisions of this bill, it being known that the President will veto any bill that contains a provision restoring the tube, we are leaving them in statu quo, that some future Congress and perhaps some other President, who does not look at it in the same way, may restore this private industry for private interests, as a leech upon the body politic. That is all it is. We know that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, that argument is not good. We do not propose to purchase the tubes. We do not propose to incur any additional expense. But Congress is called upon to legislate on these subjects, and we are simply asking for information. I am not afraid of the future President or of the future Congress in reference to this matter. I am perfectly willing to trust the next Congress and the next President to act in the light of the facts. That is all we are asking for now. That is what the Senator seems to be afraid of. For some mysterious reason he is afraid to obtain the facts on this disputed subject.

Mr. President, I do not care to dwell longer upon this provision. I think every Senator understands what the committee had in view. It is not a political question. The committee did not rely on politics. We simply have been trying to consider what we believe to be the welfare of the Post Office Department, and we have acted according to our light. I think this is a wholesome, common-sense, businesslike proposition. We create an advisory committee of seven men without compensation, and I say, Mr. President and Senators, if I should be chairman of the commission I would insist that those seven men should be selected by a unanimous vote of the members of the joint committee, and that they should be men such as will command the respect of the country, and so that their report will be worth something to the country when we get it.

If it is adverse to the tubes and if it is adverse to the tunnel, if it is adverse to the space plan of paying for mail carriage, it will receive my support on the floor of the Senate, and it will receive, I believe, the support of the Senate. But are we afraid that it may destroy some of our theories? I am not afraid of it, and I am ready to meet it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator, in connection with his statement relative to political matters, was not this proposition presented by former Senator Bankhead?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; I am very much obliged to the Senator. I made a minute of that. This is a proposition of Senator Bankhead's. It was the last proposition he submitted to our committee. He handed it to me and asked me to present it to the committee, which I did. It did not originate with me; it did not originate with the tube people; it originated with Senator Bankhead, who had great experience and wide familiarity with this particular subject.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator if the records do not show that it was at the suggestion of former Postmaster General Wanamaker that the pneumatic tube was installed, in the first instance, as far back as 1890?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It was. But I have not seen fit to discuss the particular merits of the pneumatic-tube service. I simply know that that is a mooted question and that the business interests of the great cities demand that the service shall be restored. Whether it shall be or not, I do not know. I would not vote to restore it to-day, because I want a little more information as to the comparison between the substitute plan which the Post Office Department has adopted and the tubes themselves. It is for that information I am asking.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I remember very well the debates which have taken place on this question of the tubes and underground transportation of the mails in the great cities. Irrespective of whether we believe the pneumatic tube or a vehicular tunnel is the best method of underground transportation, I think every sensible man must know that the day of rapid and effective surface transportation in a place like the city of New York is gone. It can not be maintained throughout the year with uniform efficiency.

I think there was done a foolish and, indeed, a stupid thing when the tubes were simply wiped out of existence and the people of the city of New York deprived of their service. The people of the city of New York paid for it this last winter. Senators will remember the blizzard which struck the city of Washington and nearly all other cities, and perhaps some of you were in or near the city of New York at that time. What happened? A tremendous storm of wet snow hit the city, which froze as it fell to a depth of at least 12 inches. The city streets were covered with solid ice from 8 to 12 inches thick. The entire trolley system of the city was stopped.

The ice had blocked and completely covered over the trolley slots in the middle of the streets. It was utterly impossible for great mail trucks, or any other kind of trucks, to run upon any schedule of service. As a matter of fact, the conditions were so serious at one time, for the first three or four days, that a portion of the inhabitants of the city were actually threatened with semistarvation, due to the difficulty of surface transportation under those unusual circumstances. It so happens that those conditions occur every now and then in our great cities. I am speaking only of New York. I have no doubt that the same conditions occur in Chicago, Boston, and Philadelphia.

Any person who, when he judges the condensed populations and the congestion of traffic upon streets such as exist in the city of New York, and continues to contend that a motor-truck traveling upon the surface can give reliable and rapid service to the public, whether it be in the distribution of food or in the distribution of mails, simply blinds himself to the inevitable. As the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] says, it is absolutely inevitable that we shall go back to some kind of subsurface transportation.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] said that this kind of subsurface transportation to which he objects was expensive. I forget the figures. I do not know whether it was more expensive sending first-class mail by tube or by trucks. But how does that expense compare with the trouble when, having abolished your underground transportation, you have not any surface transportation at all, and letters can not be moved at all, because the weather conditions are such as to tie up street traffic, and trucks can not move, which was the condition in New York, I think my colleague will bear me out, for several days?

We have to go back to some kind of underground transportation again. We will be forced to go back to some kind of underground transportation. The public will force us to go back. It will not be any corporation or any people having an interest in the restoration of the tubes or the installation of some other means of underground transportation. The public will force us to do it because the public are entitled to service and they will demand it.

Those who live in the great congested cities know perfectly well that you can not have daily uniform efficient service provided by transportation upon the surface of the streets. Every great capital of the world is extending its efforts more and more toward underground transportation. The city of New York would not have gone to the enormous expense in building its subways if the passengers could have been carried on the surface of the streets in trucks or in street cars or in busses. The same difficulty applies to the transportation of mails.

I may say to the Senator from Michigan I have not examined the testimony before the committee, but it seems to me the very fact that the Postmaster General now urges the building of a tunnel under the streets of New York to carry mail is a confession that underground travel is infinitely more reliable than surface travel.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is not any doubt about it, and that proposed tunnel traverses but a short distance, about four-fifths of a mile or something like that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Between the two stations?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Between the two stations, and when they get it between the two, the proposition of delivery in the city involves just about as much trouble as when they started.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I understand it, the tunnel would carry the through mails.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is right.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mails unloaded at the Pennsylvania terminal to go through the city of New York would go through this tunnel to the New York Central or Grand Central terminal and then proceed upon their journey unless I am mistaken, and if I am the Senator will correct me. It has nothing to do with the service to the people of New York.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to his colleague?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. It will move the mails from the Pennsylvania Station to the Grand Central and back again for distribution in localities near those stations, but largely it will be used for the through mails.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Evidently it is proposed to do that, because it is the better way of doing it. Evidently they have made up their minds that surface trucks are not as good as some kind of underground transportation. So I think the committee has done a wise thing in refraining from scrapping, as it were, all the instrumentalities that we have for underground transportation and simply saying for the time being let us wait and see what kind of underground transportation we need, whether the facilities we have still available can be used by the Government, if necessary, or in a modified form; in other words, let us wait and see how this great problem can be solved.

I am in hearty agreement with the Senator from Michigan in his assertion that before long the Congress will once more, as it did on several occasions in spite of the statements of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], determine that the only way to handle traffic in the great congested cities is by some means of underground transportation.

I hope the amendment found in the bill will prevail, so that the people of the city of New York will have some hope of efficient service operative 365 days in the year.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I want to add my testimony as to the advantages of underground service in carrying the mails. My colleague has referred to conditions in the streets of New York during a part of the recent winter. The same condition exists almost every winter for a period of several weeks. This was an unusually difficult winter. As I recall, last winter and the winter before traffic was obstructed to a very great extent. Senators will be surprised, I am sure, when I tell them that for nearly a week we were unable to operate the surface cars on Broadway, that great thoroughfare which is always cleaned by the city authorities as soon as the snow falls.

I have always been in favor of underground tube service. When the subject was up in the House of Representatives when I was a Member of that body, I not only favored its continuance but also urged its extension, and since I have been a Member of this body I have followed the same course. It is true there has been opposition on the part of the Post Office Department, but in the city of New York, where this subject has been investigated by the business men who utilize the service, men who have had contact with it, I have yet to find anyone opposed to the tube service. They have urged it, advocated it, and insisted upon its being kept in effect.

Something was said by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and by my colleague [Mr. WADSWORTH] concerning a proposition of the Post Office Department to construct a tunnel connecting the Pennsylvania Station and the New York Central Station. I do not know whether Senators realize that to-day our important post office in the city of New York is located at the Pennsylvania Station, where a larger amount of mail is handled than in any other post office in the country. This post office is the great distributing station of the metropolis. At the New York Central Station perhaps the second largest post-office establishment in the city is located. These two places are the two great post offices of New York City. For that reason I urge not only that we preserve the machinery for these tubes in the stations where now located, but that we take some affirmative action in the pending bill to provide for this tunnel which the Postmaster General proposes to construct between these two great post offices and railroad terminals. So at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to this bill having that in view. I know the subject has been under consideration by the committee, and perhaps the committee may be willing to accept an amendment providing for construction of such a tunnel. If they are not, I shall offer an amendment which will give a start to the movement.

At the New York Central Station to-day they are erecting a new building, a part of which may be utilized for post-office purposes. If we can at this time provide some legislation giving the Post Office Department authority to arrange this building so that we may utilize the floor that comes in line with the tracks of the railroad, then I think, in the end, we will save a great deal of money to the taxpayers of the country and will be providing for a system of transit between these two great post offices which will be of great benefit not only to the city of New York but the rest of the country as well, because mails from the South and the West go through the city of New York to New England, and the mail from New England to the South and the West does likewise. So I shall offer an amendment for this purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the Senator from New York if he does not think underground transportation is better, that tunnel transportation, leaving aside the question of the tubes for a moment, is better, and does he not think the committee or a subcommittee of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads should go over there and examine conditions; that with the innumerable reports that we have already had from commissions over there that have heretofore been appointed that the businesslike way, the economical way, and the quick way to handle the matter would be for a subcommittee of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads or the entire committee to go over there and look at conditions and, if the tunnel is necessary, have it constructed?

Mr. CALDER. I do think so, and if a motion were made to amend the amendment now under consideration to eliminate the citizens' commission and substitute the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I would vote for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the amendment is not voted down, I shall certainly vote for it.

Mr. CALDER. In discussing the question of traffic on the surface let me suggest to Senators that last year 850 people were killed on the streets of New York City by being run over with vehicles of every sort. Many were killed or injured by post-office trucks running over the streets. I know nothing more important to the traffic of the city of New York, and I assume that the same is true of every crowded city, than to preserve some method of underground transportation for mails, both in the interest of quick transit in fair weather and assurance of transit in weather that is bad during the winter.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, since I have been here as a Member of the Senate and also as a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I have opposed the tube system in those cities. I have agreed with the view of the department that it could more cheaply and quickly handle these mails by surface methods than underground. But I do not believe that that question is involved at present. It is not a question now as to whether the tubes are the best means of transporting mail in those cities, but it is simply a question as to whether the machinery for the tube system shall remain another year in the post offices until the experiment can be thoroughly tried out in surface transportation.

Section 3 of the amendment simply provides that until June 30, 1921, the machinery for this tube service shall remain where it is, and it also says:

> Or until the space occupied by such property or equipment is actually needed for post-office purposes.

The amendment in section 9 further provides for the appointment of a commission to investigate all of these matters. The congestion of business in the large cities and the problem of handling the vastly increased volume of mail deserve the most careful and thorough consideration and a complete investigation as to the best means of relief. I can see no reason, therefore, whatever to oppose this provision for such an investigation and I shall vote against the motion to strike it out.

If this or any other provision in the bill committed us to the expenditure of any money for the tube system or committed the Government or the Congress to the policy of a readoption of that system I would vote against such a proposition, but I can see no reason whatever for opposing a proposition which merely allows the retention in the post offices of those cities for another year of the machinery of the tube system until a full investigation of the whole subject can be made, and Congress can then determine the best method to solve the difficulty.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BECKHAM. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the Senator's position, it is that he is opposed to the tube system. It is perfectly manifest that without section 3 the tube system will be abolished, because they will have to move out their machinery, and when they do that the men who own the tubes will go out of business and dispose of their property in such a way as they may see fit, and there will be no more tubes. If the Senator is opposed to it, it seems to me he would be against the provision inserting section 3, because the only effect of a vote in favor of that amendment is to give them a new lease of life for one year, to see if they can not work out this plan or some other plan.

Mr. BECKHAM. Does the Senator see any objection to the machinery of these tubes remaining in place for another year?

Mr. McKELLAR. I certainly do. I do not believe that the machinery ought to be there. I am against the tube system; I think it is an expensive system, that is used principally for the purposes of private interests that have been hounding Congress ever since I have been in it.

The Senator from Kentucky, as I am, is very much in favor of prohibition. Suppose the liquor interests were to come here with an amendment to some bill to leave all their saloons just as they were, to leave all their liquors just as they were, ready to open up at some future time? The Senator is a prohibitionist and he would not vote for a provision like that, I know, and that is the same principle which is involved here. In this case we have determined that the tubes shall go out of business, and this provision is merely to give them a new lease of life; that is all there is in it. If the Senator is in favor of giving the tubes a new lease of life for one year after next July, he will vote in favor of this provision; if he is against the tubes, he will vote against it, and there can not be any other way around.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, I object to the construction which the Senator from Tennessee puts upon my position. I think I have stated it definitely and positively upon this matter, and I think the Senator from Tennessee is very much mistaken in the view which he expresses. I can see no reason why anyone who is opposed to the tube system should object to this provision.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I know how anxious the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is to dispose of the pending measure, and I shall take only a few moments to discuss the question involved in the amendment. In view, however, of the statement made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], for whom I have the highest regard and with whom I very often vote, I wish to say that I have consistently followed the Postmaster General with reference to the mail-tube system. Perhaps that has been because I did not understand the question. I may have been right or I may have been wrong, but I have not changed my position with reference to the tube system. I agree, however, with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] that there can be no harm in permitting this machinery to remain where it is. I certainly do not wish to do an injustice to the men who have made this investment.

I may have been mistaken in my conclusion that the mail-tube system was a faulty one and not a desirable one; but there is one thing which I do know, and that is that it is a mistake for the people of America or for the people anywhere to build great cities. In the first place, we deprive our people of the pure, fresh air they ought to have; and as the Senator from New York has just stated, 800 people were killed by being run over in the streets of New York in one year. Just think of that! I could enumerate a hundred, yes, several hundred, reasons why in America, where we have more than 3,000,000 square miles of splendid country, cities ought not to be built so large as they are. Yet we create such conditions in New York, in Chicago, and in several of our larger cities that it is impossible for all the people doing business in them to live within their borders. There is not sufficient room on top of the surface, but we must put them underground or up in the air in order to transact their business.

It reminds me of the old story, when the people were trying to build the Tower of Babel, and the Almighty himself had to come down and demolish the whole structure. Of course, I hope that will not happen to any of our large cities; but I speak with some emphasis, for I have some feeling about the matter when I see the thousands and thousands of children who are living in these great cities deprived of the fresh air which they ought to have, deprived of the opportunities they would have if they lived in the country or if they lived in the smaller cities or towns of the country.

Look at the situation from an economic standpoint. We ship food products hundreds and thousands of miles to the great terminals, there to be manufactured, and then, after they have been manufactured, ship them back at very great expense to the public, yet we are wondering why we have a condition such as really exists to-day, and are trying to secure a remedy for the high cost of living.

Mr. President, as I said at the outset, were it not for the fact that I do not wish to take up the time, because I know the chairman of the committee is anxious to have the pending bill disposed of, I should like to go into this question somewhat at length, and I believe I could show that it is a mistake to build great cities. However, we have them, and a condition and not a theory confronts us. The question is, What are we going to do for them or what are we going to do with them?

I do not wish it understood that I am in favor of the pneumatic-tube system simply because I intend to vote for this provision of the bill. I believe it is only fair that an investigation should be made. There is nothing so repulsive to me as ignorance. When we have the facts we can act and can transact business in a satisfactory way. I am not an authority on this question. I have simply followed the opinions and reports of the Post Office Department. I am free to admit that I have acted upon the judgment of the department and not upon my own judgment, because I have no expert knowledge as to whether or not these mail tubes are desirable, but I do not want it understood that because I vote for the provision which has been recommended by the Post Office Committee that I am in favor of the mail-tube system.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator says that he is desirous of securing information. I merely wish to say to the Senator that the shelves of the document room are full of reports on this very subject. It has been gone into time and time again. It has been investigated by special commissions and by a number of committees, and has been the subject of reports to this body and to the other House time and time again. The Postmaster General has reported upon it from time to time during a period of several years, and I do not see how we can get very much more information in regard to the pneumatic tubes.

The terminal question is a matter that might be investigated by a committee of this body. I think the appointment of an expensive commission, such as is provided for in this bill, is unnecessary; I do not see any use of it; but I should think the terminal situation may be very well the subject of consideration. It will be noted, however, how ingeniously there is tacked onto this provision a proposal to save the life of the tubes for another year.

The two go together, and that is my principal objection to this provision, namely, that under it the tubes are saved for another year and three months in order to see if some plan can not be worked out for their benefit by some future Congress.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GRONNA. In just a moment. I do not entirely disagree with the Senator from Tennessee, but I think the two propositions go together. They really involve one question, namely, how the mails shall be transported in the great cities. I may be mistaken about that, but that is the way I look at it. I think it is only fair that we should conserve the property of the men who have made this great investment, and I can see no reason why we should prohibit these men from preserving this valuable property. When the report is made perhaps I may change my mind.

The Senator from Tennessee called attention to the fact that several reports have been made. As I understood the chairman of the committee, most of those reports have been favorable to the tube system.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is what I desired to say to the Senator. With one exception, all of the investigations and all of the examinations have been favorable to retaining the tubes.

Mr. GRONNA. That is all I care to say at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a ruling. I am not attempting to bring this matter up, but merely to show a reason for having made the point of order. In the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, May 19, 1917—

The Senate had under consideration H. R. 3971, making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments on account of war expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and

Mr. KENYON offered the following amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following:

"SEC. 6. A commission is hereby created for the purpose of advising the President and Congress as to the need of and plan for a national budget system. The said commission shall be composed of 12 members, to serve without compensation and without expense to the Government, and selected as follows:

"Three members from the Cabinet, designated by the President, and three persons experienced in fiscal methods, to be appointed by the President; three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the Vice President; and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker.

"The said commission shall report a carefully worked out plan for the installation of a national budget system on or before the first day of the next regular session of Congress to the President and to Congress."

Mr. MARTIN. I make a point of order that the amendment is legislation on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he opposes all of section 7?

Mr. McKELLAR. Section 7?

Mr. HENDERSON. The former section 9.

Mr. McKELLAR. I oppose it in its present form. I do not think it ought to be adopted. As I stated a while ago, my own judgment is that having commissions investigate and report on matters of this kind is not the best way and is not the most efficient way and is not the most economical way to go about it. After all, the matter has come to Congress and, as a matter of fact, the committee or a subcommittee of the committee ought to go to New York and examine that situation themselves and see what is the best method of providing for it. If it were confined to a tunnel, I would have no objection; but when you put into it the question of tubes I am wholly opposed to it, and that question is inseparably connected with this amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then, as I understand the Senator, his principal objection is to subdivision (3) on line 4 of page 30, which provides for the pneumatic-tube investigation?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true, because it is coupled up with section 3 on page 26, which allows the tubes and tube machinery to remain until June 30, 1921. It shows what the real purpose of this provision is. It is to give the tubes another chance.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will ask the Senator if section 3, on page 26, does not fully protect the Post Office Department? Is not the Government fully protected under it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, no; quite the contrary. It just gives an opportunity to the tube company to come back at any time within 15 months.

Mr. HENDERSON. It gives them the right to remain there until June 30, 1921, "or until the space occupied by such property or equipment is actually needed for post-office purposes."

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, of course; and it is just a question of whether or not the Senator is in favor of the tube system. If he is in favor of the tube system, he ought to vote for this amendment. It is perfectly plain. If he is against the tube system, he ought to vote against this amendment, because without it the tubes will go by the board, so to speak.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not at all. I can not agree with the Senator from Tennessee in that statement. I may be against the installation of the pneumatic-tube system later on, but I believe in giving these people the same right that I would ask for under like circumstances and conditions. The Post Office Department has already caused this company to remove from the post-office buildings whatever equipment was taking up any of the space needed by the Post Office Department. I understand that they have removed a good deal of their equipment and a good deal of their machinery, and that at the present time the Post Office Department has all the room and space needed to carry on the business.

Why should we call upon anybody to scrap this property when the Senator knows that this is still an open, mooted question? The Senate of the United States about a year ago went on record as favoring the pneumatic-tube system, and it was put in the Post Office appropriation bill. It is true that it was vetoed by the President, but this body is on record as favoring it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it is probably going on record again as favoring it; I think so.

Mr. HENDERSON. But the mere fact that we vote for the creation of this commission does not mean that a Senator voting for it is in favor of the pneumatic-tube system. It is simply, as I consider it, a question of fair play and just treatment. I believe that the Government is fully protected, and that section 3 as well as section 7, creating the commission, should be adopted.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, formerly I went to New York quite often, but during the last few years I have only been there a time or two. The last time I was there I want to assure my friend from Tennessee that the surface transportation was about obsolete. A friend invited me to dinner, and I tried to get there myself on a surface car, and I came very near missing that nice treat.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. DIAL. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was due to an unprecedented snow storm, was it not?

Mr. DIAL. Oh, no; it was before the snow.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, whenever it was, it was due to some trouble on the streets. Would the Senator say that men should quit walking on the surface of the streets and should quit having cars on the surface of the streets because they are interfered with occasionally? Then I want to ask the Senator, further, whether his visit was before prohibition went into effect or afterwards? [Laughter.]

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, that requires some explanation, and it is not necessary to go into that. [Laughter.]

There is no question in the world that it is necessary to have better facilities there. My information was that they were thinking of taking up the surface street railway on Broadway, as it was so absolutely congested that they could not get along at all.

I listened to the testimony here before the committee, and I can not see any other way than to have subways between those two stations. That is what they need, and that is what they will have to come to. I can see no harm in leaving the tubes in there until they decide upon some better method, because it will not cost the Government anything to leave them there.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, it seems to me that the committee amendment ought not to prevail.

As I understand, the Post Office Department has said that this tube system is antiquated, that it is archaic, that it is obsolete, that it is expensive, and that the present Postmaster General will not employ it even if provision of law and appropriation be made therefor. That is the condition that confronts the country. He has said that this system only carries one sort of mail, and that the vehicles that can be purchased for a nominal consideration, relatively, so far as buying the tubes are concerned, will carry all kinds and classes of mail, whereas this system carries only one kind; and if we leave these tubes where they are now, it will be solely for the purpose of furnishing the owners thereof a possible purchaser in the Government. They are not expected to be used for anything else.

The Government has progressed beyond this system of mail delivery; it can not be used. The Post Office Department says it is not worth while, and the President has gone so far as to veto a bill that carried a provision for its continuation. It seems that the country has pretty well made up its mind, and that the Post Office Department and the whole executive department are agreed about the matter. Leaving this provision in the bill simply improves the position of the owners of this property—who have been paid several times over, in large rentals, for its construction—and gives them one more opportunity to sell to the Government a useless, archaic, abandoned, and worthless system for the distribution of the mails.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that, after all, the question is reduced to one of progress, and whether or not we are going to recognize existing conditions that we can not change, no matter what action we may take.

Whether or not we ought to have had a city anywhere the size of New York, we have New York, we have Philadelphia, we have Boston, and we have Chicago, and we must deal with them justly. After all, as I look at it, it is only a question of progress. Every student must admit that in these overcrowded cities the streets can not carry the traffic. It is a physical impossibility. Business of all kinds must go, as one Senator said, up in the air or down in the ground, and still there is the greatest congestion left on the streets.

Quite a number of years ago, long before I came to Congress, Congress authorized the construction of these pneumatic tubes. They constitute an underground method of carrying the mails. The present Postmaster General is opposed to their use. The principal objection I have to them is that they are not owned by the Government of the United States. I believe the Government ought to own the facilities for carrying the mails, and ought to own these tubes; and I should think, not being an expert in the matter, that the Government ought to extend them very greatly, not only in the cities where they are but in other cities, and probably eventually in the country.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] seem to go on the theory that these tubes have been condemned and put out of business; but, Mr. President, the majority of the testimony is in their favor. They have been approved by the House of Representatives; they have been approved by the Senate; they have been approved by a large number of investigations made by committees and commissions, with one exception; but the President and the Postmaster General are opposed to their further use, and hence the bill was vetoed.

To be fair, it seems to me, to be just, we ought to realize that even the Postmaster General, after he has had the tubes put out of commission for a year, and has been carrying the mail on the streets, has come to the conclusion that he must have some underground method of carrying the mails in the great city of New York; and, of course, he could not very well come back to the tubes, after he had taken the stand that he did, without acknowledging that he was wrong, and he is not that kind of a man; so he proposes a tunnel. Perhaps that is better than the tubes. I do not know. I do not know enough about the subject to know. It may be that it will be finally developed that the Postmaster General's suggestion of a tunnel is the best way; but the very fact that he makes the suggestion brings him on the side of Congress and all these commissions and committees that have investigated the subject and have come to the conclusion that some other method of transporting the mails in the great cities must be had; that they must be taken off of the city streets, from the surface of the ground.

This provision in the bill proposes that an investigation be made of the various methods suggested to try to find out, if possible, what the best method of carrying the mails may be and to report to Congress. The Senator from Tennessee would have no objection to that provision if it eliminated the tubes from all possible contest in that controversy. Now, Mr. President, why do that? After the committees of both the House and the Senate, after thorough investigation, have reported in favor of the tubes, why not, as long as it does not cost anything, permit them to remain and be in the contest? Why narrow it down? Why should we be so vicious against the tubes? Why not give their owners an opportunity to be in on this investigation? Why exclude one thing and include another method?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit me, not only the Post Office Department and the owners of the tubes, but the public are parties in interest.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator. That is a very good suggestion. After all, it is the public that we ought to represent, and that we are trying to represent. The public wants the best method. The Senator from Tennessee says, "I do not care what method you have, if you will just throw out the tubes and not investigate them," when, in every investigation that has ever been made of the tubes, the tubes have come out on top.

Mr. President, I did not follow the suggestion of the Postmaster General last year on the tubes. In the first place, I am not an expert. In the next place, I am not on the committee, and I never was on any of these commissions; but I have read thousands of pages of testimony in regard to this matter, and last year, as much as my limited time would permit me, I went into the subject and I came to the conclusion that the fight of the Postmaster General on the tubes was almost malicious.

I became prejudiced against the stand that he was taking. He was unfair, and it seems to me, with all due respect, that the position taken by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is unfair. For some reason or other they want this machinery thrown out. It is no good for anything else, as I understand it. It is down in the subbasement of the post office at New York City, not hurting anybody. If upon a full investigation it should be decided that we wanted to continue the use of the tubes, and I would not be surprised if that would be the result, then we or somebody would have to install them anew, and by permitting them to remain there in the basement until the question is decided that expense would be saved, if we adopt this amendment.

I remember, Mr. President, quite a good many years ago there was a debate in regard to these tubes which took place in the House of Representatives. There was a Member of the House from one of the great cities, for whom I had a great deal of respect, a very able man, and I considered him very fair, and I was influenced a good deal in my vote at that time by what he said. I had not had an opportunity to investigate the subject fully. He made a very convincing argument in favor of the continuation of the tubes, and they were continued. But he became a member of Burleson's administration later; he was appointed a postmaster in one of the great cities, where some of these tubes are, and he was an opponent at once of the tubes.

He followed his chief. He came before a committee of Congress and testified against the tubes, and wanted to throw them out in the street. Of course, he might have changed his mind in the meantime, but when I read his testimony, and the testimony of a good many other men whom the Postmaster General had selected, I could not help thinking that it was just a little bit queer that everybody who was under the influence or control or power of the Postmaster General was against them even though before that he had been most heartily in favor of them.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask the Senator might it not have been possible and even reasonable for a man who had thought this was a good system for the transportation of the mail before, when he got to be a postmaster and used it, to find that it was worthless and not desirable?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I said that was possible; he may have had an honest change of heart; but it seemed queer to me. He was not the only one. There were several others who testified, some of them experts, who changed their minds when they got under the influence of a great, big, powerful administrative official like the Postmaster General, under whom they had to serve. It always seemed just a little queer to me that they would all change the same way.

Mr. President, I became impressed a year ago, when the tube question was up, that while I thought there were a good many things about the tubes that could be improved, and if properly developed would be improved, they were the most advanced way of carrying the mail that had been discovered or invented, doing it expeditiously, and avoiding any possible congestion on the streets. We will have to come to something of that kind. We must go underground in the big cities, or suffer, not only in the cities but in the entire country, the damage that always comes from a cessation of the mail.

It is not a question only for those who live in the cities, but even if it were, those of us who live in the country must at least be fair and just when we have no particular interest in the matter. But, after all, the whole country is interested in it. A great deal of the mail—the great bulk of it, probably—that is tied up between the New York Central station and the Pennsylvania station comes from the East to go through the country, some of it clear across the country, and with less than a mile between the two stations the congestion on the streets is such that it is sometimes delayed for days. A storm absolutely ties it up, and in the finest weather it is always delayed, and the congestion is getting worse all the time.

It seems to me, therefore, that we should take any step that looks to a solution of the problem on a fair and an honest basis, letting every system be taken into consideration. This one system is condemned by some people. It is suggested by others that it is the best system in the world.

Now comes the question of a tunnel in competition with it. It seems to me that we ought to take that into consideration. There may be some other method of doing it still better than either one of them. But whether we do it to-day or not, some day it will have to be done. It is bound to come. It will not be confined to New York City. As sure as the world progresses, the method of transportation, particularly of the mails, must be improved. It does not require an expert to see and to know that now. For the last two or three years it has been susceptible of wonderful improvement.

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask that the committee amendment incorporating section 3, which was passed over, be now stated.

The SECRETARY. The committee amendment passed over was, on page 26, after line 7, to insert:

SEC. 3. That the property and equipment of the pneumatic-tube companies in the post-office buildings in New York, N. Y.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Boston, Mass.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Chicago, Ill.; and St. Louis, Mo., may remain where now located until June 30, 1921, or until the space occupied by such property or equipment is actually needed for post-office purposes: Provided, That no liability or expense shall be incurred by the Government hereunder.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that the next committee amendment which was passed over may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment which was passed over.

The next committee amendment passed over was, on page 15, after line 5, to insert:

For the purchase of such aeroplanes as may be necessary to establish, operate, and maintain an aeroplane mail service between New York, N. Y., and San Francisco, Calif., via Chicago, Ill., and Omaha, Nebr.; for the operation and maintenance of such aeroplanes, including stations, equipment, tools, and machinery, and other necessary incidental expenses; and for such personnel as may be necessary therefor, $1,415,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] desired to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. DIAL. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then, without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the amendment will be considered as pending.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, on Saturday last I offered an amendment to the committee amendment to extend the mail route from New York to Atlanta, and asked that the sum of $800,000 be appropriated for that purpose. I now desire to make an unusual request. I desire to cut that amount down to $625,000, and to modify my amendment to that extent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, we have in the bill as reported by the committee a recommendation for a transcontinental airplane mail route from New York to San Francisco. I think that is very proper. At the same time the Post Office Department has recommended five other airplane routes, one of those routes being from New York to Atlanta, and it is that route for which I propose to provide by adding this amendment.

To be perfectly candid with the Senate, when I first heard about the airplane mail service I did not have much faith or confidence in it; I thought an expenditure for that purpose would be throwing away the money of the Government on an unnecessary experiment; but after the hearings in the committee, I am thoroughly satisfied that the postal authorities ought to be encouraged in the extension of this service. They have been making wonderful progress toward economy, efficiency, and expedition in the carrying of the mails.

My object in offering the amendment is to spread airplane mail routes over different sections of the country. At present there is one running from Washington to New York, and the department states that greater efficiency may be accomplished by establishing a longer route.

If this bill should pass it will also contain authority to the Post Office officials to make private contracts for carrying the mails in any section of the United States.

I have gathered some facts, Mr. President, which possibly may interest the Senate. The effect on the mail situation on the Atlantic seaboard of the extension of the New York-Washington air mail route from Washington south to Atlanta will be far reaching and of remarkable benefit to New York City and the commercial centers of the New England States.

With such an extension mail dispatched between 1.45 p. m. and midnight in practically every important office in the New England States, as well as New York City and up-State cities as far north as Syracuse, will be advanced for delivery in practically every important city on the southern Atlantic seaboard to Key West and its connection with Habana and west through the Gulf States as far as New Orleans, with connections at the Gulf ports to Central America, by from 5 to 21 hours.

As I have stated, at first I thought that this service should be extended to Boston, but the department is not prepared to carry it from New York to Boston. Letters mailed in the New England States in the afternoon or early at night will reach New York by the time the mail plane leaves there the next morning. The mail from the New England States and from New York up-State cities will be taken off the trains arriving in New York City between 4.45 a. m. and 5.30 a. m. and dispatched south by aeroplane, leaving at 6.30 a. m. This mail is scheduled to arrive at Atlanta by 6 p. m., mail deliveries being made en route at such junction points as Washington, D. C., Richmond, Va., Raleigh, N. C., and Columbia, S. C.

The arrival at Atlanta allows ample leeway for the New England and New York aeroplane mail to connect with the principal night trains out of that city for Nashville, Tenn.; Birmingham, Ala.; Jackson, Miss.; New Orleans, La.; Savannah, Ga.; Augusta, Ga.; Mobile, Ala.; and Jacksonville, Fla.

I have here a schedule, Mr. President, which shows that from New York to Atlanta the distance is 850 miles by the air mail route, and the time consumed is 10 hours and 43 minutes, whereas the rail mileage is 891 miles, and the time consumed is 26 hours and 15 minutes.

Northbound, the air mail leaving Atlanta at 5 a. m. will take mail from the night trains arriving at Atlanta from the Southern States before 4 a. m., and deliver this mail in New York City, New York up-State cities, and all the principal cities in the New England States by from 14 to 16 hours over the train schedules.

The details of this expeditious mail movement between the New England States, New York City, and New York up-State cities with the South Atlantic seaboard and the Gulf States are shown on the schedule to which I have referred. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read it all, but it is very comprehensive. It shows that the establishment of the air mail service will decrease the time of mail carriage from 14 to 16 hours.

I have some figures here in regard to the cost of the system which are very interesting.

I have been very much impressed with the efficiency of the Post Office Department. I must say that if there is one department of the Government which tries to economize and at the same time give good service, in my opinion it is the Post Office Department. I thought at first that the airplane service involved a useless expenditure, but I find the facts are otherwise and that it is now about self-sustaining. The annual operating cost of the line from New York to Atlanta will be $455,946, which, however, includes interest on investment and depreciation. Deducting the amount of $50,880 for interest and depreciation leaves a cash operating cost of $405,066. To this sum should be added, for equipping fields and rebuilding salvaged De Haviland planes, the sum of $168,000. This makes a total of $573,066, which Congress will have to appropriate for equipment and one year's operation of the route between New York and Atlanta.

It is proposed, should Congress make the appropriation, to operate the service with twin De Haviland planes, the following being an itemized estimate of the cost of this service:

Twin De Havilands.

Distance, one way	miles	850
Distance, round trip	do	1,700
Total annual flying, including ferrying and test work, miles		563,400
Total annual flying, including ferrying and test work, hours		7,277
1. General overhead, at 6¼ cents per mile		$36.621
2. Rent, light, heat, phone, and water, 3 fields, at $564		1,692
3. Trucks and upkeep, 3 fields, at $325		975
4. 6 per cent interest on 12 planes, at $25,000, and tools, trucks, etc., $80,000		14,880
5. Depreciation, 6 planes in air daily, at 33⅓ per cent, and improvements, at 10 per cent		36,000
6. Field force, 3 fields, at $14,500, and 1 superintendent and clerks, at $4,500		48,000
7. 12 pilots, at $4,000		48,000
8. Gasoline, 350,900 gallons, at 30 cents		105,270
9. Oil, 24,014 gallons, at 60 cents		14,408
10. Replacements, at 20 per cent		16,800
11. Miscellaneous field expenses, 3 fields, at $3,600 per year		10,800

12. Wireless, 4 stations, at $18,625	$74,500
13. Emergency, for forced landings and other unforeseen expenses	48,000
Gross annual operation cost	455,946
Less interest, depreciation, etc	50,880
Cash operation expense	405,066
Cost of 12 planes	168,000
Appropriation for equipment and one year's operation	573,066

As has been stated, the gross annual cost of the service, including interest and depreciation, will be $455,946, and the amount of car space and clerical hire that the department will be able to discontinue on the day of the installation of this service would be $331,894, without counting overhead or depreciation in the operation of the Railway Mail Service, which is the amount of saving immediately in sight, and which saving will probably be still further increased when the service is once inaugurated.

This would leave a net cost of $124,000 for this route in the event it were not possible to make further savings, and for this sum there would be expedited annually from the South, East, and Gulf States to New England, New York City, and New York up-State cities, as well as to Washington and points between Washington and Atlanta, and from New England, New York, Washington, and so forth, to the Southern States, a total of 75,120,000 letters, besides salvaging and putting into practical use in a valuable civic function a vast amount of surplus war air equipment.

Mr. President, the Government has a considerable number of these airplanes on hand, and it has turned a good many of them over to the Post Office Department. The figures here are too long to go into in detail, but the service has been wonderfully economical and efficient. They have trained men, and these machines would help carry light packages. We are talking of extending this system of airplane service by the Navy and also by the Army, and I think it would be well to have an independent system under the Post Office Department. Then we could get at comparisons as to the cost of the different lines. It would be very valuable, indeed, to have some competition, as it were. A great many of these planes would go to waste if not used, and they could be used here; and in the opinion of the Post Office officials not only could this service be made self-sustaining, but it would soon be made profitable.

It is important to advertise this mail service in our country. We know what other nations are doing. By running this route down here we will touch a territory that has a good climate, and where these planes can be operated every day in the year. Something was said to the effect that they could be operated on the transcontinental route every day in the year, but I think that is a mistake. They have already operated them to Chicago, and they can continue to do that. A large number of the population and a large part of the wealth of this country are between Atlanta and New York, and we would get our mail here in Washington both ways much earlier than we would otherwise. So I hope that this amendment will go in. I think the department is entitled to have a fair show and a fair hearing and an opportunity to experiment, and I think there should be no objection to this amendment going in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. DIAL. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Therefore the vote will first be taken upon the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. The Senator from Louisiana the other day proposed an amendment. Does he offer it now?

Mr. GAY. I offer it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 15, line 9, it is proposed to strike out the words "Chicago, Ill., and Omaha, Nebr.," and to insert in lieu thereof "Philadelphia, Washington, Atlanta, New Orleans, Houston, and Los Angeles."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is not estimated for and not reported by the committee.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, my amendment is simply an amendment to the committee amendment, and I believe is in order. Indeed, it does not contemplate any new item in the bill, and it only changes the route that has been proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was it estimated for by the department?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. GAY. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. We can possibly arrange this matter satisfactorily to the Senator from Louisiana. As a matter of information, I was told by the Post Office Department that if this bill passes there are good prospects of carrying the mail from St. Louis to New Orleans by contract let to individuals, and that under the surplus carried over from the last appropriation they have enough money on hand to extend the line from Chicago to St. Louis. Therefore I think the object of my friend from Louisiana could be accomplished in some other way.

Mr. GAY. I will say, in reply to the Senator from South Carolina, that I think it is only a question of a short time when we will have routes in all sections of this country, and I have no doubt that there will be a route from Chicago to New Orleans. It is the logical place to have one. But in connection with the point that has been raised by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], I simply want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this does not bring any new matter into the bill, and, as I explained to the Senate a few days ago, my amendment is to have a route where airplanes will be able to travel the whole year around, and not go through a section of the country where it is likely that they could be used only a few months of the year.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, my amendment was estimated on by the department.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, no estimate was presented to the committee by the Post Office Department for such a route as that proposed by the Senator from Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that any appropriation is asked for in this amendment. It simply strikes out the name of one of the cities and substitutes another name.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, as I understand, the object that the Senator has in mind is simply to change this route as he has directed it, and that the same appropriation shall carry it; but, as the Chair states, he does not complete his amendment. There is no estimate for this. We know nothing about what it will cost to complete this route as the Senator from Louisiana proposes it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair ask the chairman of the committee if the item in the bill was estimated for by the department—the language submitted?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The item in the bill was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. On page 15, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

> For the purchase of such aeroplanes as may be necessary to establish, operate, and maintain an aeroplane mail service between New York, N. Y., and Atlanta, Ga.; for the operation and maintenance of such aeroplanes, including stations, equipment, tools, and machinery, and other necessary incidental expenses; and for such personnel as may be necessary therefor, $625,000.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, when this question of making an appropriation for the continuation of an aerial mail service this year first came up in the subcommittee, I confess that I was not favorably impressed by the idea that it was an economical, practical success. However, in view of the fact that the department was in possession of necessary airplane equipment, and had accomplished some good work, in that they had put two motors into one machine where one had been used before, and in that way were getting better service and higher duty, adding to the stability and reducing the risk to the operators of the machines, my next feeling was that experiments should be continued along practical lines. The arguments of the department officials, supported by those of the leading representative of the Army, for a transcontinental route, finally won me over to the conclusion that the plan for the committee to recommend would be one long route which would give service under all conditions, against all possible impediments of climate and altitude, and at the same time develop most useful information for the purposes of our Army.

The mileage that had been estimated for by the Post Office Department totaled, as I recall it, 2,630 miles from New York to San Francisco, as against 2,660 miles figured from New York to Omaha, Minneapolis to St. Louis, Pittsburgh to Kansas City, and New York to Atlanta by way of Washington, and Cleveland via Toledo to Detroit. This one transcontinental route gives practically the same mileage that has been estimated for five routes by the Post Office Department, at a cost of about one-half as much to equip and operate. The planes that are now being used, by the installation of the double engines as against the single motor, will have a carrying capacity of some 1,500 pounds of mail, and that promises further economy in operation, as against the carriage of some 400 to 500 pounds of first-class mail per plane, which is necessarily expensive.

The hearings before the committee were very extended, and all phases of the question were gone into most carefully. It seemed to be the consensus of opinion of the subcommittee, and it certainly was their feeling, that we should continue along experimental lines, so far as the operation of planes by the Post Office Department was concerned, and that the best all-around experience might be had by the adoption of the one transcontinental route, aside from which there is a provision in the bill which makes it possible for the Post Office Department to enter into negotiations with private owners of an airplane route for carrying the mails from Key West to Habana, Cuba, which service no doubt can be performed at about the same figure as that which it is now costing the department for handling that mail. There is another provision in the bill which will allow the Post Office Department to make other contracts with commercial concerns for the carriage of mails, and I feel that the committee has been right in limiting its recommendation for expenditure by the Post Office Department to the one transcontinental route from New York to San Francisco. Therefore I can not support the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the proposal made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] has merit. But the question before the Senate is now, in my judgment, to first establish by absolute demonstration the success of what might be called the trunk route, stretching across the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It will make a demonstration which will forever put at rest any criticism that might be made, either from the practical airplane point of view or from the business point of view, of the carrying of mail by airplane. Apart from the fact that a great deal of time will be saved, there are much more important considerations, such as the practice given to the men in the operation of airplanes, without which they will lose their knowledge of an art absolutely necessary in modern warfare.

I have a telegram from the Second Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Praeger, in which he says:

> Post Office appropriation estimate includes $1,000,000—
> Actually $1,415,000—
> for transcontinental line Atlantic to Pacific.
> This would put mail leaving New York Monday morning in San Francisco Wednesday noon. Can start service within four months after Congress makes appropriation available.

There is a saving of nearly two days, therefore, in the transportation of mail from the Atlantic to the Pacific, which in itself is of inestimable value to men engaged in mercantile pursuits and for trans-Pacific connections. It will bring the Orient nearer New York.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. Does not the Senator think that the routing of the mail by airplane through the Capital of the Nation would be of great advertising value? We all favor the recommended route; no one objects to it. I favor that route myself. It is perfectly proper.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I also favor the Senator's route. I favor the extension of the ramifications of this service to all parts of the country. But the question before us now is merely as to the time when this service shall be inaugurated. If we demonstrate the success of the trunk line, necessarily and inevitably the branch lines will be established. So everything depends upon the initial experiment. I do not know that it is advertisement we are looking for; it is service, and it is really immaterial over which route the airplane service is directed. But it so happens that the department and the committee have, I understand, without dissent, agreed upon a route which is practically now established, and over which last year, you will recall, the airmen flew in their hazardous enterprise in competition with one another for speed.

The system is now actually in operation between New York and Chicago, and already preparations have been made for a station at Omaha, where there is a landing ground, and all that is necessary, then, from Omaha is to extend to Reno and from Reno to San Francisco.

The mail service performed would cover approximately 1,500 pounds of letters, or 60,000 letters each day each way. Westbound, the service would leave New York City at 5 a. m. and arrive at Reno, Nev., about 8 p. m. of the second day. On the morning of the third day the plane would leave Reno at daybreak and place the mail in the San Francisco post office before 10 o'clock in the morning for distribution.

Under that schedule there is the other, but I think a minor, consideration, that the service might even be made in time substantially self-sustaining. So it really involves nothing in the long run but the initial expense of establishing the service, and then it is not beyond expectation that the service will support itself.

I sympathize with the gentlemen who desire that this service shall be extended to different sections of the country, but I submit that in order that they might establish such service in the various sections of the country it is important that the experiment made between the Atlantic and the Pacific shall be first demonstrated under conditions which, hard as they are, are necessary for experimental purposes. If we choose the easiest route, which would also be the longest route, it would not be demonstrated under what conditions of weather, over what character of territory, a plane could safely be directed. But here we have great stretches of prairie, as well as great mountain ranges, and the fliers have to successfully rise over the mountains, as was partially demonstrated in the race last year; and in order to avoid the disturbances of the air they rise to higher altitudes, where there are no such disturbances. If the airman can meet these conditions, then indeed if he succeeds he is a trained airman, whereas otherwise he might be merely a summer soldier.

Before I sit down I desire to pay a tribute to the men who have not only served in the air, in a work which is perilous, carrying the mails, but those who have served by rail and those who have served by foot in distributing mail matter to the men and women of this country at their doorsteps, the most welcome visitor in the morning. Under all conditions of weather, uninterruptedly, they make their way from post office to home and shop; but I understand there is no question before the Senate now as to recognizing in some substantial way, by an increase of pay, the services of those men. Why? Because the committee is awaiting a report. Let us speed it.

There is a classification commission that has this matter in charge, and I trust that the classification commission will act with promptness, for who gives promptly gives twice. These men are patiently and without unseemly demonstration waiting for this recognition, and I do not believe that there are any more worthy servants of the Government.

I feel that I can safely predict that an increase of pay and a betterment of working conditions will in a very short time be voted by a majority of this body, and I shall do everything necessary to expedite that much-needed reform. Can we not take action calling for the report?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, as I understand the facts in the case, the Post Office Department has recommended the route proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]. It also recommends the route proposed by the committee. In the opinion of the Post Office Department, which has had the matter in charge, and thinks it has passed beyond the experimental stage, this is one of the important routes that should be established.

I do not believe the Senator from Michigan wants to be sectional in his views; but why this route, recommended as strongly by the department as the route across the Rocky Mountains, was left out, I can not understand. I think the Senate, if we are going to establish one route, ought to accept the recommendation of the Post Office Department as to both routes, so that there shall be no discrimination, no sectionalism. Let us try them out as the department recommended. I hope, Mr. President, that the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, we must be practical in this matter. A situation now confronts us that we all view with some concern. The House refused absolutely to make any appropriation for the aerial mail service. The recommendations made by the Post Office Department covered not only the route from Washington to Atlanta, but a number of other routes, one from New York to San Francisco; Pittsburgh to Kansas City, Twin Cities, Minneapolis and St. Paul; St. Louis via Chicago and Cleveland to Detroit.

An estimate was made of what the department wanted and according to the figures I have hastily prepared, if we adopted the recommendations as made by the Post Office Department for aerial mail service in the United States, it would take over $4,000,000.

The distance, as I have computed it, from New York to San Francisco by an air route, would be 2,630 miles. Take the proposed route as recommended by the department, and we have the New York-Washington route, 200 miles; and we have the Washington-Atlanta route, 650 miles.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the New York to Atlanta route takes in Washington.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am giving it from New York to Washington, then from Washington to Atlanta. The mileage from New York to Washington is, as I stated, 200 miles; from Washington to Atlanta, 650 miles; from St. Louis to the Twin Cities, 600 miles; from Pittsburgh to Kansas City, 850 miles; from Detroit to Cleveland, 360 miles; making a total of 2,660 miles.

We have in the route proposed and recommended by the committee, New York to San Francisco, 2,630 miles, as compared with a mileage of 2,660 miles on all the other routes recommended by the department.

The cost of those routes would be, from New York to Omaha, which is 1,150 miles, $531,931; from Omaha to San Francisco, 1,480 miles, $1,097,900; or a total of $1,629,831 from New York to San Francisco. The committee recommends $1,415,000 for this service, believing it ample to take care of this route for the next year.

Now, Mr. President, the route from New York to Chicago has been installed, and the first mail service began on May 15, 1919.

Mr. OVERMAN. Have they not had a route from Washington to New York?

Mr. HENDERSON. I was referring to the route from New York to Chicago. The route from Washington to New York, or New York to Washington, began just a year before, on May 15, 1918.

The aerial mail service will be in operation between Chicago and Omaha perhaps within the next six weeks. The reason the committee saw fit to designate New York, Chicago, and Omaha, was, first, because of the established route now between New York and Chicago, and, second, because of the route that will soon be in operation between Chicago and Omaha. From Omaha to San Francisco the route will be between such points as the Postmaster General may determine.

In this connection, however, I believe that the Post Office Department should cooperate with the War Department in designating that route, because this appropriation, if Congress does make it, is not solely to serve the public but also to have in existence an organization that can readily be turned over to the military authorities in case of need for military purposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is not that a strong argument in favor of the establishment of all these routes? There has been asked an appropriation of $15,000,000 for air service. If you organize all these routes and get these fliers and planes we will have thorough preparation in case of war again. Does not the same argument the Senator is making apply to all the other routes as well as this?

Mr. HENDERSON. If I thought we could get them all I would be in favor of the pending amendment, but I doubt if we can get more than one. The question is, Which one should be adopted, which one must we take? I am not opposed to the route from Washington to Atlanta. I hope to see it in existence some day, but I doubt the advisability of the Senate at this time asking for more than one route. What route should we adopt? What route should we select?

Gen. Mitchell was before the committee, and his testimony is very interesting. I asked him if the Congress should decide it would adopt one of the recommendations made by the Post Office Department for aerial mail routes, which one he favored. His reply was: "The longest one—that is, from New York to San Francisco—absolutely and unquestionably." I asked the same question of Mr. Praeger, who is in charge of the aerial mail service. His answer was to the same effect. As the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] has said, we encounter the plains and the mountains from New York to San Francisco which we would not encounter to such an extent in a route from New York to Atlanta or from Atlanta to New Orleans and through Texas.

Mr. President, there is no subject before the Congress to-day of more vital importance to our national security and defense than that of the aerial mail service. Events of the last three years have demonstrated the need of developing and improving this branch of the military service, both as an offensive and defensive weapon. In what other way or by what other means could we best carry on this work than through the Post Office Department? There are three reasons for starting this service:

First. Service to the public.

Second. Keeps up an organization that could readily be turned over to the military authorities in time of need for military purpose.

Third. It would tend to stimulate and encourage commercial development and enterprise in this industry.

The first legislation to be enacted by the Congress for an aerial mail service was approved March 3, 1917. The Postmaster General was authorized "to expend not exceeding $100,000 for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of aeroplanes between such points as he may determine." Acting under this authority the Postmaster General established an aerial mail service between Washington and New York. The first flight with United States mail between these two points started on May 15, 1918. A similar provision with a like appropriation was carried in the Post Office appropriation bill, approved July 2, 1918. The Post Office appropriation bill approved February 28, 1919, carried an appropriation of $850,500. On May 15, 1919, the route between New York and Chicago was opened and the first mails carried on that day. Since then, and from that appropriation, preparation is going ahead for the extension of the New York to Chicago route from Chicago to Omaha. The Washington to New York and the New York to Chicago routes are the only routes in actual operation to-day. With this progress already made and under way, it seemed highly advisable to both the subcommittee and later the full Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that there should be only one route, and that route from New York to San Francisco via Chicago and Omaha.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to get this clear in my mind. The Senator, I understand, is coupling two things together, military service and the mail service. The Senator hopes by this transcontinental route to perfect and have in operation, in case of any threatened war, a service that would be available in the route between the Atlantic and the Pacific. That has been recommended by the War Department.

The next argument is that the different conditions of air can be demonstrated. Do I understand the Senator now to take the ground that, so far as the Atlantic seaboard is concerned, from New York to Atlanta the air conditions are sufficiently demonstrated that it does not need any experimentation to know what will be the condition in going from New York to Atlanta?

Mr. HENDERSON. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Therefore, barring the military element in it, it is necessary to establish an experimental line from New York to Atlanta or from Boston to Atlanta or from the Canadian possessions down to Key West, and it is just as necessary to experiment there and ascertain air conditions as it is going across the continent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope in time that condition will come about, but we can not get them all, and that is the trouble. The question is, Which one of these routes should we now adopt—the New York to Atlanta or New York to San Francisco?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, to complete the inquiry I am making, the experiment, so far as the San Francisco-New York route is concerned, when once demonstrated would be of absolutely no benefit to the people who reside between New York and Atlanta?

Mr. HENDERSON. It will be of inestimable value——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I just asked the Senator that a moment ago,

Mr. HENDERSON. For national security and defense, to show that we can connect the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards by airplane service in a very short time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I was unfortunate in the statement of my proposition, then. It was that aside from demonstrating the military practicability, so far as any air conditions between New York and Atlanta are concerned, the experiment from New York to San Francisco would be of no benefit to those people down there; in other words, you would have to explore the air conditions between New York and Atlanta under some subsequent appropriation, if you do not do it now, and the only benefit that would accrue to them would be the national benefit of knowing that we could successfully maintain a military airplane route from San Francisco to New York. So far as any commercial domestic use was concerned, it would be of no benefit to us at all.

Mr. HENDERSON. The air conditions in the Sierra Nevada Mountains would be of little practical value or benefit to the people at Atlanta, no more so than the air conditions at Atlanta would be of value or benefit to the people in California. But the question is, If you are going to establish a service of this kind at all, which is the best route to select now for this experiment, the route that will bring into play all these conditions or a short route, which has only a part of them? In my opinion, the long route would show more than all the rest put together. You encounter in the long route all the altitudes, all conditions of climate, and all the temperatures that prevail in the United States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is exactly the point at issue. If the air has to be experimented with to find out what are the conditions through which a successful route may be maintained, if every section of the country must be experimented with, then the experiment in one section does not demonstrate successfully what may be done in another section. If we are going to establish airplane routes for the purpose of carrying mail and accommodating the commercial and domestic uses of the people, I maintain that through all the principal sections of our country we should establish at the same time experimental routes, because if we establish one from New York to San Francisco and it is admitted that air conditions there may differ radically from air conditions along the Atlantic seaboard, we have spent $1,500,000 to demonstrate the benefit to one section of the country without its helping in the least to solve the problem that exists in another section of the country.

If the route from New York to San Francisco determined the condition of the higher altitudes or the lower altitudes, and once that is established and proven practicable it could then be applied to all the country, it would be a matter of indifference to me as to where you establish it so long as you demonstrate the practicability of that length of service through the air; but when you have spent this vast sum of money and only proven it is practicable for that route, and have left the balance of the country yet to be experimented with, I claim that it is a discrimination that is unjust.

If you are going to experiment as to the practicability of using this money for the benefit of all the people, experiment in the air that is above the principal settled parts of the country; but if you do it on the basis that you want this in order to demonstrate a route to connect our military forces on the western shore with those on the eastern shore, of course that is an argument. But when you couple with it the fact that you want to test whether you can go over the Rocky Mountains, to go through a high altitude from east to west, and prove nothing in the route from north to south, then you have used all the people's money for an experimental benefit in one section to the exclusion of other sections, and have to wait for later appropriation to experiment in other sections.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that it can not all be done at once. We can not establish all these routes. They must be taken up one by one. The expense must be considered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This seems to me—aside from the military feature, which I grant—to be going exactly contrary to all experiments. If I recall rightly, the first experimentation of overseas flight was made somewhere in 1910 or 1911, when a Frenchman flew across the English Channel. It was a very short experiment, it was a short test, but he was hailed with delight because he had flown across the English Channel. Subsequently they tried a little longer flight, and ultimately the longest flight. Experimentation generally takes the shortest route to demonstrate the feasibility and practicability with the least expenditure of money. Here the committee is aiming to work over the longest route possible to demonstrate——

Mr. HENDERSON. Because of the military features connected with it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So far as the military features are concerned, this is the Post Office Department. We are working under the service of the Post Office Department for the people generally.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would not that demonstrate what the military could do and would we not have in existence an organization that could be turned over at almost a moment's notice to the military authorities?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I admit that part of the argument, and if you are going into military demonstration I should imagine that the War Department would have perhaps more to do with it than the Post Office Department.

It may be very well to curtail some expense, but the duty of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is to demonstrate the feasibility in certain air conditions for carrying the mails of the people of this country, and we have air conditions north and south that are different from air conditions east and west. If we are going to spend $1,400,000 experimenting with the air conditions for carrying the mail, then, if you want to cooperate with the War Department, there should be brought in a proper appropriation from the War Department to cooperate with the mail service, to expend on experimenting in that route, but not take the Post Office Department to demonstrate one route to the exclusion of all other sections of the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. The money comes out of the same Treasury, does it not?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Of course, but you are not the War Department.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to his colleague?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask if this question is involved: Is not the War Department interested in the constant training of aviators? If we have to appropriate money for training aviators exclusively and not use them in the Post Office Department, it would be what you might term a total loss—that is, it would be an expenditure without an asset. We use them in the Post Office Department and there are returns from the service equal to the expenditures or nearly so. The question, from a military standpoint, is where these aviators shall be trained, just as it is a question as to where soldiers shall be trained. If soldiers were taught to fight solely on flat ground all the time, they would not be equal in certain emergencies to soldiers who had been taught to fight and march in timberland and in mountains.

Coming from New York to Atlanta you go through quite a uniform country. The training is over that character of country. In going from New York to San Francisco every four or five hundred miles is an entirely different character of country. The altitude is changing and the temperature is changing. When you go over the Rocky Mountains you go into a very cold climate, you are met by storms and erratic winds; then you go back down lower through the intermountain country and into a desert country where there is dry, hot atmosphere in the summer time and exceedingly cold in the wintertime. Then you strike the Sierra Nevada Mountains, where again you go to an extremely high altitude, but in entirely different conditions from those you experienced in the Rocky Mountain section. In the Rocky Mountain section it is dry. In the Sierra Nevada section you are in snowstorms a large part of the winter. You go within an hour from an altitude of from 10,000 to 12,000 or 15,000 feet in snow to the Pacific coast, where you have almost a summer temperature. It is that opportunity for training aviators that, in my opinion, appeals most strongly to the military.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If we want to experiment for military purposes and to develop a military airplane route from San Francisco to New York, that is another proposition. The people of the country are interested in rapid mail service, and all the people have a right to participate in the results of that experimentation. If the air conditions differ radically east and west from those north and south, I maintain that it is not a fair proposition to the people of this country, because in connection with the military service you want to demonstrate its military value, that you should deny one part of the people of this country mail experimentation because the military feature needs to be developed somewhere else.

I have no objection to these experiments for military purposes. It may be right and proper; but I do maintain that if you are going to experiment for the purpose of serving the people with mails that you should try the air conditions that are peculiar to the different sections of the country under this appropriation, even if it is for a short distance, in order when we get to the point where the empirical feature of this service is passed and it becomes a practical fact that we may intelligently appropriate sufficient money to extend the service through the sections where it has been proven to be practicable.

Here, however, there is no such pretense made. It is said that we propose to carry it north and south, where the air conditions differ very radically from the air conditions elsewhere, but vast sums of money are to be spent not for the purpose of demonstrating the practicability of the air service to people living in different climatic conditions but to demonstrate to a particular section of the country its value in a combination of military and mail purposes.

I do not pretend to say that the military feature is not essential, but it does seem to me that if we are going to experiment in order to prove the feasibility of furnishing the people of this country with airplane mail service, each section of the country is entitled to its benefit. Experimenting in one section does not prove its feasibility for the entire country. What right have you to come and ask for an appropriation of a million dollars to carry the mail by airplane from Washington to Atlanta when doing so does not prove anything as to the feasibility of carrying the mail from Washington to the New England States? The New England people have a right to say, "If you are going to give us all equal facilities, when you establish an experimental route south, then establish one north and one east and one west, and let us demonstrate the conditions under which it will become feasible for us all. Why spend all the money in operating an air route in one section of the country which does not prove its feasibility for another section of the country?"

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from South Carolina supported the bills for the last two years making appropriations for the aerial mail service. Did he not support the bill, which was the first one introduced here, appropriating $100,000 to carry the mail by airplane from Washington to New York?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; with the understanding that in carrying it from Washington to New York it was demonstrating the feasibility of the service for every section of the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. We have demonstrated by that service that we can carry it a short distance, and we are now simply asking for an appropriation to demonstrate that we can carry it a longer distance over the mountains of the West and across the plains; in fact, across the entire continent; and it seems to me that it is perfectly proper for the committee to report in favor of such a route after two years of experimentation on shorter routes in the East.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The first question which I asked the Senator was if demonstrations from the east to the west had proved anything as to the north and south. According to the reports before the committee, they have not done so; that a route through one section does not prove what are the air conditions through another section or what the cost or feasibility of such a route might be; that each route has to be mapped out separately. Any airplane man will tell you that the conditions of the air vary in different sections of the country. Now it is proposed to spend all the money in one section. I can understand why the Senator from Nevada desires that done, and why the Senator from California desires it done. It is like the fox who lost his tail, who said it was a splendid thing for all foxes to be without tails. This airplane route is to run through your section of the country, therefore it is a good thing.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield.

Mr. PHELAN. I am sure the Senator from South Carolina does not mean to make this a sectional question.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; that is what I am trying to keep Senators from doing.

Mr. PHELAN. I think we all concede that it is quite practicable to navigate an airship from Washington to Atlanta, because the atmospheric conditions over that route have been to a large extent tested by the great service which was rendered last year by the brave men who entered into competition in flying over the more difficult route from New York to San Francisco. I may say there was considerable loss of life, but those men were of such heroic mold that they were willing to make the trial in order to demonstrate the great fact that American enterprise could overcome all difficulties. However, in the actual mail service between New York and Chicago it is a remarkable thing that so far for the present fiscal year only one life has been lost.

The great advantage of the air mail service is conceded. The planes are scheduled to run 80 miles an hour, but they will actually run 100 miles an hour. The distance and time between New York and San Francisco is of such great importance, as compared to the distance and time between Washington and Atlanta, that the Senator from South Carolina generously would say, of course, that it is a very much greater thing to cut down two days in carrying mail on a five-day rail service than in cutting it down a few hours in a two days' service.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. PHELAN. Let me continue. If we have but one service—and under the appropriation recommended that is all that is provided for—removing from consideration the experimental features, would it not be better, as a matter of public benefit, to cut down the time between the Atlantic and Pacific and its connections than to cut it down between the nearer sections of the country? When California was admitted into the Union in 1850 the good people there, eager to enter the Union of States, as the Senator may remember, had to wait six weeks in order to be informed by the pony express that they were a part of this great country. The railroad has cut that down, and now the air service is going to cut it down further. It is in the way of progress. "Westward the course of empire takes its way."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The argument of the Senator in favor of eliminating the vast distances of this country by improved methods of communication and transportation is a correct argument, but he has admitted that the demonstration along the Atlantic seaboard is now complete. Therefore, as it is about 800 miles from New York to Atlanta, the intervening distance being thickly populated and embracing one of the oldest parts of the country, where a vast volume of business is carried on, if the committee are willing now to appropriate to establish an air mail service in this already demonstrated field, I am perfectly willing, then, to vote for the experimental route from San Francisco to New York; but if every dollar available for air service is going to be absorbed by an experimental service that does not help me, and if I have got to wait for any service until that experiment proves a success or a failure, I think I shall have to demur.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I should like——

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has the floor.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the Senator is mistaken in attempting to assume that there was any sectional question before the committee or in the minds of any member of the committee in the consideration of this matter. When Mr. Praeger was before the committee I asked him this question:

> Do I understand you to say that if any additions were made the one of prime importance would be the addition of the route from Omaha to San Francisco?
> Mr. PRAEGER. Yes.

I will explain to the Senator that the reason we went into this matter was because the House refused to consider any mail service by aeroplane and made no appropriation at all for such service. The question in the minds of the committee was, Could we get this service for the three reasons stated, namely, to serve the public, to demonstrate its value for military purposes and for commercial uses? I later asked Mr. Praeger——

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HENDERSON. Just as soon as I finish my statement I will yield. I asked Mr. Praeger this question:

> But suppose Congress says that they will put in these new lines that you refer to and not the line from Omaha to San Francisco, or that they will put in the line from Omaha to San Francisco and not the others?
> Mr. PRAEGER. With us the preference would be, if you are going to spend the money on only one extension, to spend it on the run from Omaha to San Francisco, because you get a double value there—you get the military value as well as the postal value.

Mr. President, it was under those conditions, after considering the matter fully, that we decided to ask for the route from New York to San Francisco, and not because Atlanta was in the South and San Francisco was in the West; that was not the reason at all. I hope some day to see the service extended to Atlanta and to New Orleans and all through the South, and I think the day is coming when that will be an established fact.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I shall not argue that question——

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield first to the senior Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me, I merely wish to make a brief statement and then I will be through with this argument, temporarily at least. It seems to me that accidents upon this section of line have occurred so frequently, so successively—and successfully, I might say—that we are a little inclined to believe that they are not altogether accidental. All of this work, it seems to me, has been done entirely north of the Potomac. That may be on account of the thick population; it may be on account of the conveniences there present which make it desirable to carry on the work there, but down in our section there has been no experiment made; no such service has been intimated. There is an air mail service between

Chicago and New York, which are the great cities of this country, and possibly between those places it was advisable to demonstrate its practicability; but now that there is a proposition to extend the air mail service, all the money is proposed to be absorbed to demonstrate its value for military and mail purposes in going across the continent east and west, still leaving the north and south out of consideration. The Senator disclaims any sectional idea, and I would not have even intimated it had it not been such a common thing that it looks like a perpetuation of the same old proposition.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am going to vote for the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina because I am so heartily in favor of the air mail service that I am willing to extend it; but I hope nothing that will be said here to-day will in any wise jeopardize the amendment which has been offered by the committee.

I desire at this point to quote the amendment proposed by the committee. It is as follows:

For the purchase of such aeroplanes as may be necessary to establish, operate, and maintain an aeroplane mail service between New York, N. Y., and San Francisco, Calif., via Chicago, Ill., and Omaha, Nebr.; for the operation and maintenance of such aeroplanes, including stations, equipment, tools, and machinery, and other necessary incidental expenses; and for such personnel as may be necessary therefor, $1,415,000.

I take a great deal of pride in that amendment. Three years ago, in 1917, I fought here to obtain an appropriation of $100,000 to establish an experimental route between Washington and New York. After a very vigorous fight that appropriation was made and the experiment undertaken, with the most splendid results. The next year a like sum was appropriated to continue that route, and last year that sum was increased to $850,000—an enormous increase—for the purpose of establishing a line between New York, Cleveland, Ohio, and Chicago. In every stage of its development the service has been a most marked success. At first a great deal more postage was charged for letters carried by airplane than for letters sent in the ordinary way, but since that time they have made such a success of this service that the postage has been reduced to the ordinary 2-cent letter rate, and, despite that reduction of postage, the service is paying for itself every day.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. That is a most remarkable statement. Why would it not follow that we ought to cut out of this bill the entire appropriation for the railroad mail service, carry all the mail by aeroplane, and have all the mail between distant points transported in one day without any additional cost?

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will think about that for just a few moments, he will find that that would be wholly impractical at this time. This service has got to grow just like any other service. We had to establish railroads before we established the railroad mail.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but we have got through with the railroads now. We have already demonstrated, judging from what the Senator says, that we can carry the mail by airplane and make money out of it. Now, we can not do that on the railroads. There is always a deficit, and it seems to me that is a solution of this proposition—just to have them carry it all by airplane.

Mr. McKELLAR. We hope that wherever first-class mail has to be transported for long distances that it can be done at a very early time. The growth of the aeroplane-mail system has been something remarkable. This bill, as it is reported, increases the appropriation to $1,415,000, and the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, if adopted, would mean a further increase.

I am for this system of mail transportation. I have long believed in it. I believe it is practicable. I do not think it is in the experimental stage any longer. What can be done has been already demonstrated, and I want to read very briefly from this report as to what has been done. It is a startling proposition as to what has been accomplished by the airplane service. I quote from a recent report of the Postmaster General.

In the first place—

The air mail service of the United States is the only practical commercial aeroplane service in the world. No service in foreign countries compares with it in magnitude, in continuous dependability, and in benefits to commerce.

Now, listen to this:

Its record of performance during the fiscal year of 1919 was 96.54 per cent, and this record was obtained with more than 30 per cent of the trips made in rain, fog, mists, or other conditions of poor visibility. The operation of the service by months for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, is given in the accompanying table.

When it was first started it was not believed that it could be made continuous. Some days the fliers did not want to fly, but the Post Office Department has managed that so that the fliers now fly every day. The airplane carries the mail nearly as regularly as a train, practically, and there has been but one fatality during the last year, something very unusual and very remarkable.

Now, I want to call attention to another matter. I want to show what will be the advantage of continuing this route to California. Of course, it ought to be continued to California. This is not a sectional question. It is just a question of which route you are going to take first. I imagine that the next route will be either the one along the Atlantic seaboard or down the Mississippi Valley. It must be extended. I very much desire a route down the Mississippi Valley, from Chicago, by way of Memphis, to New Orleans. The necessities of commerce and the desirability of having quick mail service are going to force an extension of this air mail service. It is going to force it on the part of Congress whether we are in favor of it or not. It is going through. This is one of the things that have been demonstrated by the experience of the Post Office Department.

Now, I want to describe very briefly the New York-Cleveland route:

The air distance from New York to Cleveland is 410 miles and the time of transit is from 4½ to 5 hours. The rail distance is 620 miles and the time of transit from 13 hours and 5 minutes to 17 hours and 20 minutes. On this leg of the journey letters at the rate of 5,000,000 a year are carried westbound, and at Cleveland the Chicago gateway mail is placed on New York Central train No. 35, resulting in expedition of the mail to the Middle West States by 16 hours and to the Pacific coast by 24 hours.

Under the operation of this line that we have already established there is a saving of 24 hours' time to the Pacific coast, which of itself is of immense value, and that, too, without costing the Government anything, because the income from the service pays for it at 2 cents an ounce or fraction thereof.

Eastbound the plane bound from Cleveland to New York takes approximately 14,000 letters daily from the train that left Chicago at 11 p. m. the night before and delivers these letters in New York in time for the afternoon carrier trips, thereby effecting a saving of 16 hours in delivery in New York City. Had these letters continued on their train they would not have reached New York until the following morning.

The air-line distance between Cleveland and Chicago is 325 miles and the time of transit is about 3½ hours. The distance by rail is 340 miles and the time of transit 6 hours and 55 minutes to 10 hours and 30 minutes. On the leg from Cleveland to Chicago westbound letters at the rate of approximately 5,000,000 a year are taken from train No. 19, which left New York at 5.31 o'clock in the afternoon before, and are deposited in the post office at Chicago usually about 1 o'clock in the afternoon in time for all city carriers. This effects a saving of 16 hours in the delivery of the letters in Chicago, as train No. 19 would not reach that city in time to make delivery until the following morning. Eastbound from Chicago approximately 5,000,000 letters a year are carried to Cleveland, where the Twentieth Century train is overtaken, resulting in the mail being delivered in New York City at 9.40 the following morning, the gain in delivery of the mail in New York City and the New England States being 16 hours.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would give us the amount of mail that is carried daily between any two of these points.

Mr. McKELLAR. Five million a year divided by 365 would give the approximate amount.

Mr. NORRIS. Five million letters?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does that leave any to be carried between those cities by train in the old way?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that I am informed by the officer who has charge of this matter that substantially all of the first-class letter mail ready for mailing at the time the airplane leaves is now being taken from New York to Chicago by airplane. The airplane takes the greater bulk of it; and, mind you, there are two legs to that journey. When it gets to Cleveland it is deposited on a train and taken over there, and they make such connections as will save about 16 hours' time.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senate committee, therefore, reduced the appropriation and the number of railway mail clerks?

Mr. McKELLAR. They figure that they pay the railroads less for space. As the Senator knows, we have the space system now, and we pay the railroads less, so that this service is self-supporting.

Mr. NORRIS. For instance, from New York to Chicago, or say from Washington to New York, how many pounds of mail are carried on each trip?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will give the Senator, from this report, some knowledge as to what is done:

On the three routes as now established, shown by chart which follows, there are in the air daily eight aeroplanes, each with a capacity of from 14,000 to 16,000 letters. These eight planes fly an aggregate of 1,906 miles each day, carrying at the rate of more than 30,000,000 letters per year. On each of the three routes the mail is advanced 16 hours in each direction, and in the case of mail destined for the Pacific coast the advance in delivery is 24 hours.

The cost of operation of the air mail service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, was $166,402.52, and the revenue from the sale of special rate aeroplane stamps was $194,831.50. The cost of operation includes depreciation at the rate of 33⅓ per cent, which the operations of the service so far indicates to be ample, and an interest on investment charge of 6 per cent.

I want to call the Senator's attention to another proposition, and that is the benefit that this department is doing the air service generally. It is a strange thing that with all the immense amount of money that has been appropriated by Congress for air service, the most valuable service with the smallest appropriation has been obtained in the Post Office Department.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. KIRBY. I understand that on these mail routes that have been established, the postage has been reduced to the ordinary rate of 2 cents per ounce. Is that what the Senator understands?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; that is true.

Mr. KIRBY. Would the Senator infer from that that the public, who were charged a greater rate than that at first, and would not patronize the service sufficiently to make it self-sustaining, did not think it was worth the price?

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not say that, because it made more than it cost before the rate was reduced.

Mr. KIRBY. Then, why did they reduce it?

Mr. McKELLAR. They did not want to make money out of it. It is not the purpose to make money out of any branch of the Postal Service. The object is to give the service and not to make money out of it; and the rate was reduced for that purpose, and for the further reason of experimentation, and because the aeroplanes did not get a sufficient load at the higher rate. When the lower rate was established so much mail was then carried by aeroplane that the department was enabled to reduce the space and pay of the railroads carrying mail. It was to ascertain what could be accomplished.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate, further, in this connection, to this report:

The principal mechanical development during the year was the salvaging of a large number of Army war planes rendered surplus to the Army on the conclusion of the war. Another development was the creation by American aeronautical engineers and the air mail staff of the Post Office Department of distinctive mail-carrying planes with from three-fourths of a ton to two tons letter capacity. With these planes in operation during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the department, by reason of the quantity of mail carried and the speed of the plane, will save in car distribution space twice the amount of the cost of the air mail service.

I will not read further from this report, but I merely desire to say that I am very anxious to have an airplane route established down the Mississippi Valley. I should like it, above all things. Memphis, my home, would be on such a route. I know that it is just a question of time when it will be established. I have not the slightest doubt of it. I should like to have it established this year, but I do not believe that we can do it all at once, and I am not going to offer an amendment for it at this time. I should like to do so. I am gratified that the committee, or a majority of the committee, have done as much as they have at this time for aeroplane service. They have increased the appropriation from $850,000 to $1,415,000, a very gratifying increase. It will be a valuable thing for the people of this country. It will be a great thing for the people of the Pacific coast; and the only experiment about extending the line to the Pacific coast is the ability of these planes to cross the mountains—certain mountains in Nevada and other far Western States. Now, I have no doubt about their having no difficulty about this. It was supposed that we could not run these planes regularly to New York when they were first started. Why, they run daily without trouble and without difficulty, so that it is no longer an experiment. When we establish this route it is perfectly obvious that with this large saving in time, with this perfection, almost, in the regularity of the delivery of mail, the service must be extended to our whole country.

I am going to vote for the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina because I have not any doubt about the desirability of the extension of this service.

Other members of the committee seem to have doubts about it. I have never had any doubt but that airplanes could be used for the purpose of expediting our mail system. It has been a great success. It is a great honor and a great credit to the inventive genius of our own country. It is a great credit to the Post Office Department. We ought to build it up; we ought to add to it; we ought to make it more effective, in my judgment. I am just as strong for it as I was three years ago, when some Senators on this floor tried so hard to defeat the first appropriation for the service.

I feel that it is for the best interests of our country, and I hope the committee amendment will be agreed to. I hope the amendment of my good friend on the committee, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], will be agreed to also. But I hope that no man who believes in the extension of this service, whether in one part of the country or another, will fail to vote for the amendment as it is, because if we can not get what we want, let us get the best we can, and in that way build up our common country.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I was on the Post Office Committee when this first appropriation was included, and I made a vigorous fight for it both on the committee and here in the Senate. I am satisfied that this is an economical and effective way of keeping an air service for use in time of emergency or war. It has been proven a success. It is not an experiment to run it from New York to San Francisco, as the run from New York to Washington has proven a success.

As I understand the amendment, if adopted it will eliminate the route that is now in force between Washington and New York and simply put in a new route from New York to San Francisco.

I can not understand why the committee should come here and destroy a route that exists from New York to the Capital of this Nation—Washington—and start on another experiment. When you have a route that has proved a success, why abolish it? I understand that unless the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] prevails the route that now goes from Washington to New York will be eliminated. That is true, is it not?

Mr. DIAL. That is correct.

Mr. SWANSON. All the Senator's amendment asks is to continue this route to Atlanta. Let us see what this proposition is. There are over 2,000 miles to be included. It has proven to be a success. It is simply a question of what section you will put it in.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, there seems to be some misapprehension in the Senate about these two routes. The one from New York to San Francisco has already been adopted. That was reported by the committee and it has already passed the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand that, but it seems to me it is but just and proper that we should have about 400 miles of this service in the Southern section of the country. It has been adopted, 2,000 miles to go from east to west. It will pay its own way from Atlanta to New York; it does not cost the Government anything, and all they ask is that one of the first routes that was recommended be extended down there. If we had appropriated enough money, it would have been one of the first routes put in—that is, from Atlanta to Washington and from Washington to New York.

You have your route from Washington to New York, and it is only a proposition to extend it 400 miles in the South, in the most populous portion of the South, in a portion of the South which deals continuously in a commercial and financial way with New York. It is similar to any facility to business that already exists and is debarred on account of the slowness of present facilities. It seems to me to simply give 400 miles out of 2,000 miles and extend it to the South, on a route which will pay its own way, besides a small route from Washington to New York, is not asking very much, and that it is but right and proper that this amendment should be included, especially as it costs the Government nothing and simply is an extension of service which has proven a success.

It is not a venture. It has paid its own way; it is not costing the Government anything. The only question is, Shall we extend this facility to people in a section that is connected commercially and financially with New York?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that we ought to be able now, with the information we have, to solve this problem satisfactorily to everybody. I had supposed that really the only excuse for this service in the Post Office Department was to keep up an airplane organization for the military branch of our Government; that they thought that while they were perfecting themselves in the use of the airplane they might do some good in the carrying of mail, and that the carrying of the mail was only an incident connected with military preparation.

I realize the importance of the service. I realize, Mr. President, that it is probably in its infancy. It may be that airplanes will be as thick as automobiles in the course of time.

But I was afraid of it at this time because of the financial condition with which our country is confronted, and I doubted the wisdom now of appropriating any money in the Post Office appropriation bill to carry it on. However, all that has been dissipated. We have learned now that it is profitable, that the airplane business of carrying the mail makes money. They had to reduce the postage in order to keep the Post Office Department from getting too much money. It pays its own way. There is not any expense connected with it. Why haggle, then, about putting in a new route? Why not put them in everywhere?

Mr. President, think of the saving we could make! We could discharge from employment practically all the employees in the Railway Mail Service. In the very next paragraph we appropriate a lot of money for paying railroads for carrying the mail, and for paying superintendents, a lot of whom get $3,250 each. It makes a total of $37,000,000. As that business is not profitable, we can save that now by carrying all the mail by airplane. I suggest to Senators who want to add to these routes that the thing we ought to do is to strike out the next paragraph and save that $37,000,000 and then provide for the establishment of airplane routes everywhere, and appropriate the income from the airplanes to pay the expenses of operating the airplanes. Nobody will object to that.

Hence you can get your amendment agreed to with that kind of a proposition; you can take it down to Atlanta; you can take it to Birmingham, and New Orleans, and Minneapolis, and every other place. All we need is a little amendment appropriating the income that comes from the airplanes to pay the expenses of operating the airplanes. Then strike out the next paragraph and save the United States Government $37,000,000 and get all the mail delivered a week or two sooner than it is now by doing it, and at the same time we will train an immense army of two or three million expert airplane operators.

In this way we will have the whole question solved. If we had not decreased the letter postage from 3 cents to 2, we could have paid the bonded indebtedness of the United States in the next two or three years by this operation. It is simple. There is not any difficulty about it. So let us go on and do what has been suggested. The idea here is, "You will get an airplane in your country; I have not any in mine. I have to have one in mine." It looks like what I have read of sometimes, a sort of log-rolling proposition. But I do not suppose it is. However, the solution of it is so easy that we can avoid all criticism of that kind. I make that suggestion, not only as to this amendment, but it seems to me we ought to have a general amendment instructing the Postmaster General to establish an unlimited number of routes, to carry all the mail by airplane, and appropriate the money that the airplanes make for the purpose of paying the expenses of the airplanes. Thus we will have solved the whole question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of course, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] shows the ridiculousness of some of the arguments that have been made here this afternoon, and what he has said is perfectly legitimate, because everyone knows that the carrying of the mail by airplane is not a profitable enterprise. I know there have been lots of statements made here to the effect that we were paying our way with it. We called upon the man who has charge of it, Mr. Praeger. Instead of carrying all the first-class mail, as the Senator from Tennessee stated, and as he believed, evidently, or he would not have stated it——

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not say that it carried all the mail.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understood the Senator to say that all the first-class letter mail on these routes, between these places, was carried by airplane. About 2 per cent, sometimes as much as 25 per cent, under certain conditions, is carried.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to ask him in regard to the speed. Is it not true that all mail by airplane must be made up before the airplane starts?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And that takes some time? It will take just as much time, will it not, to make up the mail as it would to make it up on the train?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It has to be made up.

Mr. NORRIS. And if it were carried on the train, it would just be dumped in and be distributed en route. So when we talk about speed, we ought to at least take into consideration the fact that all the mail must be made up, that it can not be distributed on the way; and when it reaches its destination, it takes longer to deliver it to the post office, where it must be distributed, than would be the case if it came in on a train.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It must be made up before it is delivered to the plane. It must be carried out to the field where the plane happens to be, where it starts, and must be delivered from the plane back to the post office. I am not complaining of the real, legitimate benefits which are being demonstrated through the airplane operation. I do not want to minimize them. But it is perfect folly, Mr. President, to make statements that are so without the record, so clearly at variance with the facts, that their only result can be to deceive the public into believing that this matter has been made such a demonstrated success that we could do what the Senator says we ought to do—establish routes everywhere to carry the mail.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will yield to the Senator in a moment.

The following occurred in the hearing of Second Assistant Postmaster General Praeger:

> The CHAIRMAN. Do you contemplate finally developing this service so as to carry all this mail?
> Mr. PRAEGER. It can not be done. The aeroplane, as far as any living man can now say, can never compete economically with any other general mode of transportation. It can always compete for certain highly developed traffic. The aeroplane to-day can carry a revenue load of only about 25 per cent of the weight of the machine. You must furnish motive power to a delicate machine for three-fourths of the deadweight of the machine; the other fourth is your revenue load. The greatest advance and the nearest approach to economical conditions have been made in the planes that the Thomas-Morse people are building for us, which are the most advanced planes in the world, I should say.

I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the statement was made a moment ago that early in the history of our experimentation with airplanes the postage rates were raised for the air routes, and that afterwards those rates were reduced because it was not the policy of the Government to make profits out of carrying mail. I take it, from the statement just made by the Senator from Michigan, he would not accept that conclusion. What was the reason for the reduction of the rates?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The reduction was made, as I understand it, in order to get some mail to carry in the planes, in order that people might patronize the planes for carrying mail. Only certain people who had a desire to be peculiar, or who had some other reason actuating them, took advantage of the airplanes when they were charging an immense price for carrying a letter.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me ask the chairman of the committee another question. I take it that the Post Office Department ought to be able to state the account with respect to this mode of transportation. Of course, if it is true that they have made money, they ought to be able to show it. If it is true that they have lost money, they ought to be able to show it. I ask the Senator whether it has been demonstrated to the committee what was the gain or loss; and if so, what amount?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That has been very difficult information to obtain. I think the department is absolutely frank in making the statement of what has been done, but from the very nature of things we can not make a just comparison of the cost of carrying letters by aeroplane and by railroad, because some of the very mail taken out of the cars that they have mentioned here has been paid for in the railroad cars and transferred to the aeroplane service and paid for again there.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, the department, with its long years of experience, ought to be able to determine the cost per letter in the matter of transportation. I take it that the Post Office Department had to buy or lease these airplanes, and they know what salaries they have to pay their operators, they know what gasoline must be used in transporting them, and they know what the repairs are. So it would seem to me that if they would consider what the average cost of transportation of a letter is by the usual route, they ought to be able to arrive pretty definitely at the amount of loss or gain.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The department make a very fair estimate, as fair as can be made, and I am taking it for granted that what they have told us about it is the facts. They even make an estimate for overhead expenses to some extent.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will yield, I can give those figures.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not want to yield to have all those figures put in the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has asked the question and I would like to answer the question which the Senator from Ohio asked.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have answered that question, too, but I am willing to yield if it does not take too long.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is very short.

Senator STERLING. Do you recall now what the saving is, Mr. Praeger?
Mr. PRAEGER. Yes, sir. Take our present route New York to Washington. The cost of the service would be $120,000. The saving in car space and distribution is $162,000.
The cost of the service extended to Omaha—just the one line New York to Omaha—should be $575,920.
The saving on car space and clerical hire would be $811,430.

That is the way they figure. They figure it in the way of saving in car space, which they now rent from the railroads.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me ask the Senator, in the figures given by them, have they figured the cost of the airplanes?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, they figured that out before.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not want to occupy much more time, because I am very anxious to get through with the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator pardon me? The Senator from Tennessee has referred to the cost as given, and also in answer to my question said they figured in the cost of the airplanes. Is that the understanding of the Senator from Michigan about it?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is. They put in the figures there and make an estimate of the saving that they are going to make in car space, which is purely an estimate and which can not be computed accurately, because only a portion of the mail is taken out of any car. The car has to run on just the same, and, as Mr. Praeger himself says, it is not thinkable that you can use the airplane to carry all the mail.

The object of this is to make a demonstration, as I said the other day, not only for carrying mail but for commercial purposes and for the benefit of the Army. They have made a commendable showing. I am willing to give them credit for all that they have done, but now the department have recommended in their order five projects. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has referred to the third project. The first one which the department recommends is the one from coast to coast, the second from Pittsburgh to Kansas City, and the third is from New York by way of Washington to Atlanta.

There are these five projects which reach into various sections of the country and which possibly touch our local pride. As I said the other day, one of them goes from Detroit, in my State, down to Toledo and Cleveland. The department would like to have that established and so would our people like to have it established, but the question with me is, the House having made no appropriation for this project at all, appropriating absolutely not a cent to continue the air mail service, with the Treasury in the condition it is in at the present time, what shall we do?

It is not a question as to this service being a money-making venture. The sooner you get that out of your mind the better it will be. It is not a money-making venture. The question is whether or not we want to take out of the Treasury at this time more than the committee has recommended for this experiment, because I still maintain it is an experiment.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but I have not been able to give this branch of the subject very much attention. The Senator a moment ago said that they reduced the rates on airplane service to the usual postal rates, and that that was done in order to get something to carry. Then, I take it that the inference which the Senator from Michigan would have us draw from that statement is that from a commercial standpoint it has not yet been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the patrons of the office that it is commercially profitable.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think it has been demonstrated that it is commercially profitable. I do not think it could be expected that they could do that in the length of time it has been operated. It has made some advancement and been worth while for a demonstration in flying. But, I repeat, the question before the Senate is whether we want to introduce into the bill a proposition which involves so many things as to make a demonstration as complete as can be made during the next year of the value of the service, or whether we ought to take in all these projects that local pride and desire demand. I think we ought to either cut it all out, as the House has done, or else adopt this one great project and let the department make the demonstration under it.

I want to see it tried, because I believe it comprehends practically all the elements that ought to be accounted in aircraft as a commercial proposition. I do not want to stop there. If you put in the third proposition that the department recommends—namely, the one before the Senate now—how are we going to answer the people who live on the line between Pittsburgh and Kansas City; the people who live between St. Louis, Chicago, and the Twin Cities; and the people who live along the line from Detroit to Toledo and Cleveland? I do not think we ought to contend for any selfish local interests in reference to this matter. If you want to make this experiment for another year, here is your opportunity on as large a scale as I feel we ought to enter upon in the present condition of the Treasury.

So I hoped that we might be content with the proposition the committee has recommended and see if we can not get it adopted by the House. The House would not adopt anything originally, and I do not know that we can hold this in the bill; but if you put more on I can promise you right now that there will not be anything done for the aircraft service during the coming year, because not only in the House but in the Senate there are a great many men who believe that we ought not further to experiment with this enterprise.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to refer to one matter only. The question was raised about the amount of mail carried. My recollection is, though I have not been able to find the statement, that Mr. Praeger stated that the aeroplane leaving New York took all the mail that had accumulated at that time. Of course, it could not carry all the mail, but all the first-class letter mail that was accumulated. For instance, if the airplane left at 9 o'clock, the accumulation was taken in that plane and carried. What proportion that bears to all the mail going out of New York City I am not prepared to say, and I do not make that statement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The department tried to take all the first-class letter mail out of some particular car that they wanted?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; out of the general office at New York at the time of the leaving of the plane.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the statement I made to-day.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, no. The planes carry, as the Senator says, 5,000,000 letters in a year. In New York they carry 25,000,000 first-class letters a day through the tubes, and here is an airplane supposed to carry 5,000,000 letters in a year.

Mr. McKELLAR. The report of the Postmaster General says 30,000,000 a year.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There are 25,000,000 letters a day that go through the tubes alone.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, so far as being self-sustaining is concerned, I submitted in what I said previously the figures obtained from the department, which showed that it was practically self-sustaining now, and they feel satisfied, therefore, that it will soon be absolutely self-sustaining. I submitted that information to the Senate because I thought it might be of interest to them. I would state also that the testimony before the committee showed that 90 per cent of the schedule trips are accomplished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL].

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators.

Mr. GORE entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of the absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. HALE, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. MOSES, Mr. BRANDEGEE, and Mr. STANLEY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL].

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and to which I call the attention of the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, at his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may propose, to loan to any State of the Union, when so requested by the highway department of the State, 5-ton and 10-ton Artillery tractors which are retained and not distributed under the act approved March 15, 1920, for use in highway construction by the highway department of such State: Provided, That all expenses for repairs and upkeep of tractors so loaned and the expenses of loading and freight shall be paid by the State, both in transfer to the State and the return to the Army.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, we have in the law a provision for turning over to the States certain trucks and other war machinery in aid of good roads. This is a proposition to loan, where the department can do so, certain trucks or tractors that may be in the possession of the Government.

I have had no opportunity to consider the matter nor has the committee; but for the purpose of expediting things I am going to consent, so far as I can, to the adoption of that amendment, in order that it may go to conference, with the assurance to the Senator from Virginia that if we find there are any sufficient reasons why this provision should not be incorporated in the bill I shall not feel bound to maintain it in conference. Therefore I shall not object under those conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I understand that the committee amendments have all been disposed of.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They have.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, section 2 of this bill provides for certain increases in the pay of the employees of the post offices, and I intend in a few minutes to offer an amendment which will increase the compensation of each officer and employee and clerk in the department $100 for the ensuing year.

I recognize the fact that this means a good deal of expense. This bill was not called before the Senate until Saturday morning. I have not had the time to go into all of the details that are necessary, and, frankly, the amendment is perhaps subject to a point of order if Senators insist upon raising it; but I think the merits of this proposition are so great that they ought to appeal to the Senate in the interest of the public service.

I have taken some little time to go into this matter somewhat. I know more about it as it relates to my own State than perhaps as it relates to other States; but let me give you a very few figures for the purpose of showing the necessity of doing something for the Postal Service, if you are going to keep it upon a high plane of efficiency.

In the city of Steubenville during the last year, with a total pay roll of 35, they had 18 resignations because of the insufficiency of the pay.

In the city of Youngstown they had 108 resignations for the same reason.

In the city of Dayton they had 156 resignations during the last year, or 63.15 per cent of the total number of men in that office.

In the city of Akron, with probably 200,000 population, they had during the last year 515 resignations—67 regular clerks, 46 regular carriers, 268 temporary clerks, and 134 temporary carriers. This information comes to me at my request by letter from a post-office inspector who is now in charge of that office as postmaster.

In the city of Dayton the conditions are such that I am afraid the service is going to be entirely disrupted if something is not done, and that very soon; and my belief is that if, at this particular time, we should grant this increase of $100 to each of these men, it would encourage them to go on with their work until such a time as the Congress of the United States can adopt some classification system and readjust the wages paid.

Again, I want to say that I have here a letter which was written to me by the postmaster. It came in answer to a letter I wrote to him, asking for information. This postmaster is one of the best postmasters in the United States, and he has gradually risen from the lowest ranks in that particular post office until he has become postmaster, and one of the best postmasters Dayton has ever had. Though I realize that the Senate desires to adjourn, I think it will be well worth the while of Senators to listen to what he has to say on this subject.

There are several paragraphs of the letter that I will not read, because they are in part personal and in part confidential. I will show them to any Senator, however, who desires to see the whole of the letter, if he does so desire.

I believe you will agree with me that one can not exist on patriotism alone, and unfair treatment on the part of the Government tends to make socialists and Bolshevists out of some of our very best citizens. The situation in Dayton is deplorable, and is gradually but surely growing worse. Some few years ago the salaries of post-office employees averaged perhaps about 20 per cent above the ordinary worker. To-day the reverse is absolutely true. The policemen and firemen of Dayton receive $1,500 annually, and while on probation they receive $1,440; yet a post-office clerk or carrier receives but $1,000 entrance salary.

We have employed here 222 men. From April 1, 1919, to the present time we have had 156 separations from the service. Is there a man on earth that would maintain that the service here, under such conditions, could even approach the word efficiency? Something must be done, and done quickly.

When I first became postmaster I was besieged with applications from young men of integrity and capacity for a position in the office. To-day I am compelled to beg men to take the examination; and here is a point I desire to impress upon you:

Our best-paid clerks and carriers receive $1,500 plus a bonus of $150. Divide this by 2, the purchasing power of a dollar, and you have $825. Is it any wonder the boys are galling under this treatment? Let me cite the rural carriers of this city, who average $1,750 per annum. Owing to the high cost of everything essential to the upkeep of their autos, it costs approximately $750 per annum for this item. This leaves a balance of $1,000 per annum. Divide that by 2 and you have the munificent salary of $500. I sit in awe as I write you these facts, surprised to the point of consternation that we have even one rural carrier under these circumstances. One of these boys told me about a month since that he had to draw on his savings to the extent of $600 last year in order to get along, and he is a man who has none of the common habits of men, such as smoking, etc.

I hope you will excuse me for writing you this sermon, as it were, but I am so wrapped up in this matter that I feel as if I could convert any unbiased mind to my way of thinking. I will give you in a nutshell my judgment as to the bonus that should obtain if we are to have anything like fair service until the readjustment period arrives; and I would not have you think that the amount given is, in my judgment, adequate to meet all the needs of the service. The rural carriers should have, in addition to any existing bonuses, $500 additional allowance for equipment expenses—this is very low—and every employee in the service, from ordinary clerk to the superintendent of mails, inclusive, a $500 bonus on the basic salary, provided that no employee should receive more than the assistant postmaster.

This would give a clerk or carrier entering the service $1,500 for the first year, inasmuch as his basic salary at present is $1,000. A clerk in the higher or $1,500 grade would receive $2,000 after five years' service. I still insist that these figures must be divided by 2, in order to adequately express the wages received. Therefore, in the first instance, a clerk would receive $750, and in the second $1,000. I appeal to your good judgment in the belief that I have not overstated these facts.

Again, the superintendents and foremen should also be entitled to this $500 bonus on their basic salaries. I have men working in this office at a basic salary of $1,600 to $2,500, inclusive, that would not have the slightest trouble in obtaining at a number of places, at the very lowest, $1,000 more than they are receiving here. I could cite several specific cases. However, I have faith that you will believe my statement. These men are staying here for the reason that they do not desire to quit under fire. Several of them have expressed themselves in no uncertain terms to me that if the post-office situation at Dayton was to straighten out they would leave the service. I would not have you understand that all the boys would leave. Many of them have intended this work for their life work. They have been in the service anywhere from 10 to 25 years; but I say, without fear of contradiction and with intimate knowledge as to their ability and constructive ideas, that they would have no trouble whatever in procuring a place much more lucrative than the present work.

I have men here with five to eight children who work from six to eight hours in other places in order that they can eke out an existence. I appeal to your judgment, is this a good proposition? As you well know, in all large post offices the bulk of the mail is deposited from 5 to 8 p. m. This causes us to bring a majority of our clerks on duty from about 3 in the afternoon to 11.30 at night. These hours are not so enticing to a man that has a family; and some of these men, as before stated, work from four to six hours at other places before coming to the office. In other words, the cream is taken out of them before they appear for duty.

Mr. President, I feel very greatly disturbed about this situation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. The thought occurs to me that a condition such as is outlined in the letter the Senator has just read can not be very well remedied by an increase in salary of $100 a year. The condition is one which would require doubling the present salary, if it is as bad as the gentleman outlines it. It will be a mere aggravation to give a man $100 a year more than he is getting now, and when what he is getting now is so low.

Mr. POMERENE. There is one feature of this letter I am afraid the Senator did not observe. The writer is speaking of the bonus of $500, in addition to the basic salary. In the bill which was passed a year or more ago we provided for certain increases, provided for an increase of $240 in certain salaries and a much less increase as to others. Then later, in November, we provided for another increase during the current fiscal year, and those increases have been continued by section 2 of this bill. The purpose of the amendment which I shall offer is to add $100 to those increases.

I do this at this particular time, in this particular way, and for this particular amount, because I want to keep within what may be regarded as a reasonable compensation. We have been promised—and I have no doubt that later Congress will attempt to take up—some bill relating to reclassification and readjustment of salaries. I hope that may be done. But I know how disconcerting the situation is in cities like Dayton, Canton, Youngstown, and Akron, to say nothing of larger cities, like Cleveland, Toledo, Columbus, and Cincinnati.

Mr. THOMAS. I think it will continue, Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. It probably will.

Mr. THOMAS. After the Senator's amendment has been adopted, if it shall be adopted. There are other reasons. The demand for help in private lines of employment and the compensation paid is so much in excess of what is being received by these postal employees, and the private employment is so much more attractive, that men and women are leaving Government employment. I do not blame them for it. We have been, as the Senator says, making increases of the compensation for the last three or four years, each time for the purpose of relieving the situation, which, however, continues as it was before, only to a more aggravated degree. I am satisfied that with this addition of $100, when the next bill comes in here the same situation will be presented and a demand will be made for another increase.

Mr. POMERENE. That may be true, but these continuous demands are in large part due to the fact that conditions have been continuing to grow worse, so far as the cost of living is concerned. Let us see what the position of the Congress is. We took over the railroads. Very large increases were made, averaging 20 per cent or more. Most of the increases were justified. There were very grave and very serious mistakes made when it came to the classification of those employees. In the different manufacturing plants, including the shipyards, while they were engaged in war work, there were readjustment boards, which were constantly increasing the wages which were paid to the employees in those yards and factories. But we have made in the Government service very meager increases. It is true that one was made about a year ago, providing for the bonus for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and we added to that somewhat last November, and if we had not added to it at that time I am satisfied the Postal Service in the large industrial centers would have been very much worse than it has been. Now, if you are going to let this matter drift along, without listening to the appeals of these men, many of whom have to go outside of the service in order to earn sufficient for the maintenance of their families, I do not know what is going to happen. Section 2, I believe, was adopted on Saturday. Am I right about that?

Mr. TOWNSEND. We carry over the provisions of the present law as to the bonus.

Mr. POMERENE. That amendment was adopted, and I want to move to reconsider it so that I can present my amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I shall be obliged to make a point of order on it, and it seems to me we ought to save time, if possible. I want to say to the Senator, first, however, that I sympathize entirely with his disposition to increase the compensation of the employees of the Government. But I submit that the Senator himself is doing no real favor to these employees. The question of salaries is a serious one, and is now being considered, and I know that by the 1st of May we are going to be able to get information upon which we can deal with it. If we pass this $100 proposition there will be no more attention paid to the salaries of the employees of the Government; it will be impossible for us to get attention to it. Many of these employees are entitled to much more than $100 a year increase.

Some of them will not be entitled to any more; but by granting a flat $100 increase you simply perpetuate the inequalities and injustices which now exist in the Post Office Department.

So I hope the Senator will be content and let us rest on this until we get the report of the commission. Then I can assure him that if we are not going to get it I shall join with him in trying to get an increase which will adequately compensate these people. But I repeat, Mr. President, that I shall feel obliged, under the conditions, to make a point of order on the amendment. I think the point of order will lie, and therefore I do not think it would pay us to reconsider votes that have already been taken. I would be glad to have that question passed upon.

Mr. POMERENE. May I send the amendment which I intend to propose to the desk and have it read for the information of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio move to reconsider the vote?

Mr. POMERENE. I did ask unanimous consent to reconsider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I object.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will not the Senator get a tentative understanding as to whether it would go out on a point of order?

Mr. POMERENE. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Very well.

Mr. POMERENE. Then I will discuss it further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

And that each officer, employee, and clerk who were entitled to receive the additional compensation provided for in said House joint resolution 151 and to whom said compensation is under the pending bill continued for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, shall receive a further increase of compensation of $100.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Let me say further to the Senator, does he not know that that reaches only the men who are receiving $2,500 or less? Some of the most serious things we have to meet with to-day are as to those who are getting more than that salary.

Mr. POMERENE. This applies to every man who received the increase under the joint resolution.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is right.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize that there are a number of the higher paid clerks and supervisory officers who ought to receive increases, and that this does not provide for them; but if I can not help 10, I want to help 9.

Mr. President, I am going to be frank enough with the Chair, as well as with the chairman of the committee, to say that I think a point of order will lie against this amendment at this time; but I have been in hopes that the chairman would not raise that point of order. I suggested, in opening my remarks, that I hoped the point would not be raised. I do not share the Senator's views when he says that if it is adopted it will prevent any further action on the part of Congress for the benefit of these employees. It applies to post-office employees alone. I think there must be a readjustment all along the line, so far as practically all the employees of the Government are concerned.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But no other committee has any jurisdiction over the salaries of the post-office employees.

Mr. POMERENE. Under our rules, technically that is true, I suppose. If the Senator intends to insist upon his point, I am helpless now; but it is to some degree gratifying to have the assurance of the Senator that if nothing is done prior to May 1, he will take up this matter later.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I want to be understood as saying that if the joint commission does not report to Congress by May, so that we can have that information upon which we can legislate, I shall be perfectly willing to go on and do the best we can, as a committee, to put these salaries approximately where they belong.

Mr. POMERENE. This matter has been brought home to me with such force, by conditions as they exist in my own State, that I feel I would be derelict in my duty if I did not on every possible appropriate occasion, at least, bring the matter up to the end that we may do justice to these men. It is true that years ago we had no trouble to get men for the Postal Service, because, as the writer of one of these letters said, some years ago the compensation was perhaps 20 per cent better in the Postal Service than it was for similar service in other walks of life. Then, too, there was the promise of a life job. That remains, but under present conditions the pay which these men get is 20 per cent or more less than they could get in private life.

This is all I care to say, except that I hope the Senator will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. I just heard read at the desk the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, and I should like to ask him if the amendment will take care of the third and fourth class postmasters.

Mr. POMERENE. It takes care of all the employees, clerks, and carriers, who were beneficiaries under the House joint resolution which passed some time in October, 1919. That includes postmasters at offices of the third class. I am not able to answer specifically as to the fourth class.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw his motion to reconsider?

Mr. POMERENE. No; I do not withdraw it. I want the Senate to act upon it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator understand that that is the only way by which he can get a ruling on his amendment?

Mr. POMERENE. No; I think I could present it as a separate section to the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Why does not the Senator do that? It is subject to a point of order which I am obliged to make for the reasons I have already given. It seems to me that we ought not to take any further time with it.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize, if the Senator insists on his point of order, that there is nothing to be gained by reconsidering.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio withdraws his motion to reconsider.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The READING CLERK. On page 12, after line 25, after the numerals "$60,000,000," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter in addition to the holidays enumerated in the act of July 28, 1916, making appropriations for the Postal Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, postmasters may observe as holidays such other days as the President of the United States or the governors of their respective States may set apart as fast or thanksgiving days, or that may be specially designated as holidays by proclamation of the governors or by the statutes of the States in which their offices are located.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I make a point of order that that is legislation and not in order on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am going to offer the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk. I want to say in respect to it that the purpose of it is to enforce the terms of the eight-hour law. There are certain clerks and postal employees who are required to work overtime, so that the force and effect of the eight-hour day as to those clerks is destroyed. Especially at such a time as this, when clerks are scarce and employees are difficult to be found, naturally the department officials require that men shall serve overtime at small pay. The amendment which I now send to the Secretary's desk to be read merely provides that a penalty shall be placed upon such action by the department by paying them time and a half for overtime.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 10, line 25, after the word "grades," insert:

Provided, That hereafter services in excess of eight hours a day required of clerks and special clerks in first and second class post offices, letter carriers in the City Delivery Service, and railway postal clerks assigned to terminal railway post offices or transfer service shall be compensated at a rate 50 per cent higher than the compensation of said employees as fixed by law.

Mr. TOWNSEND. With the general principle of that amendment I am in hearty accord. We have, however, in this bill appropriated for 5,000 additional clerks. We have the assurance of the Postmaster General that he is not going to work clerks overtime when substitutes can be obtained. I have the assurance that that promise is going to be maintained. This also in a measure involves compensation and expenditures on the part of the Government, and until the whole question is determined as a result of the conference I do not feel that we ought to take it up now. Therefore I make a point of order that this is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, early in the day when we were discussing the question of directing the Postmaster General not to interfere with the machinery stored in the post offices in the larger cities of the country that was part of the tube systems recently discontinued I stated that it was my purpose to offer an amendment providing for the construction of a tunnel connecting the post office at the Grand Central Station in New York with the post office at the Pennsylvania Station. I said then that the postal station in operation in the Pennsylvania Station is by far the largest in the country, and the amount of mail carried between these two points is greater by far than between any other two points in the United States.

In view of the fact that the Senate has just authorized the appointment of a commission to investigate our whole Postal Service and particularly this question of the service in New York, I am not going to introduce this amendment, but I do propose in a moment or two to present one which has the same ultimate purpose in mind.

A few months ago a board was appointed by the War Department, at the request of the Postmaster General, composed of Army engineers, who were directed to investigate this subject. They thoroughly inquired into it and have strongly urged that the tunnel be built. The Postmaster General has, both by letter and through the Assistant Postmaster General's appearance before the Post Office Committee, advocated the building of the tunnel immediately. From my own knowledge of New York City—and I think I know as much about it and its postal needs as anyone in this body—I feel certain that this tunnel is necessary for the proper conduct of the postal business of both the city and the Nation.

I have in my hand a copy of the report of the engineers, and among other things they say:

We are of the opinion that if the work is to be done that it be started at once, due to the fact that the plans for the transformer station of the New York Central Railroad which is to be located at Forty-third Street and Lexington Avenue, are already approved, and, as the post office is to occupy the entire first floor of this station, it has been suggested by the railroad authorities that as the mail terminal is to occupy an area below the substation floor that both projects should proceed at the same time to facilitate the proper union of construction.

The amendment I propose offering simply authorizes the appropriation of $200,000 to be used for providing the necessary equipment in connection with the building now being constructed at the Grand Central Station which is to be used for postal purposes. The tunnel will ultimately be constructed and unless this amendment is passed to-day the building in question will be completed and the facilities necessary for equipping the terminal will be left undone and then when the tunnel is finally constructed the work will have to be done all over again. This amendment will save doing the work twice.

I present the amendment and hope the Senator from Michigan will accept it.

The READING CLERK. On page 13, between lines 17 and 18, insert:

For legal, engineering and terminal work preliminary to the establishment of mail tunnel services between the Grand Central Post Office Station and the main post office or Pennsylvania Terminal Post Office, in New York City, N. Y., $200,000 is hereby made available, and shall be paid from the unexpended balances of appropriations made for the Postal Service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919: Provided, That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to obtain such local rights or franchises as may be necessary, and to prepare detailed plans, specifications, estimates of cost, and secure proposals for the construction and equipment of a mail tunnel, adequate in dimensions and carrying capacity for the present and future needs of the service, which proposals shall be submitted to Congress on or before March 4, 1921; and, in case he should deem it expedient and in the interest of the Postal Service, the Postmaster General is further authorized to contract for the construction of one tunnel terminal as recommended by the board of Army Engineers, submitted by Col. Edward Burr and Col. W. C. Langfitt, January 21, 1920, provided the aggregate amount of the contracts and the sums authorized to be expended hereunder shall not exceed the total amount herein made available.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of course, this is in reference to the New York tunnel, which the committee considered and did not propose to appropriate for. The Senate has already adopted a provision creating a commission to investigate this very question. This is an appropriation neither estimated for by the department nor reported on by the standing committee. I therefore make the point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, to be added as a new section to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Montana proposes to add as a new section to the bill the following:

SEC. —. That hereafter the civil-service laws shall not apply to any person in the classified civil service who is a member of an organization of employees in the service of the Government which is affiliated with or pays dues to an outside organization which attempts, or avows its purpose to attempt, to control or influence the election of any Federal or State official.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MYERS. I offer another amendment, to be added to the bill as a new section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any employee under the classified civil service who is a member of an organization of Government employees affiliated with an outside organization.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I make the same point of order on that amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to be heard a moment on the point of order. This is not general legislation, but is a limitation on the expenditure of money appropriated by the bill; and under the rules of the Senate, as I understand, a limitation of that kind is never out of order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on several occasions in the past I have made points of order against similar amendments to the military appropriation bill and once to the naval bill, and the point of order was always overruled. The amendments then pending affected the expenditure of the appropriation in the payment of bonuses and regarding the use of stop watches and other methods of timing or determining the efficiency of labor. If those amendments were not subject to the point of order, certainly the one offered by the Senator from Montana is not.

Mr. MYERS. I think clearly the point of order in this case is not well taken. The amendment simply provides a limitation on the expenditure of money to be appropriated by the bill, and the unvarying practice of the Senate, I believe, has been to hold that such amendments are not subject to a point of order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is the Senator from Montana able to point to some rule of the Senate which recognizes the principle which he has announced?

Mr. MYERS. I do not need to point to any rule recognizing it. There is no rule against it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I make the point of order against the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to have the Senator from Michigan point to some rule against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he believes the rule invoked that this is a limitation upon the appropriation renders the amendment not subject to the point of order. The Chair remembers that the rule has heretofore been invoked and applied.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, merely for the RECORD I wish to say that the rule invoked by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is not a rule of the Senate, but is a rule of the House of Representatives. Any amendment which proposes a reduction of an appropriation in an appropriation bill in the other House, no matter whether it is general legislation or not, is exempt from a point of order, though an amendment proposing an increase is subject to a point of order. However, I do not know of any rule of the Senate similar to that rule of the other House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Utah that the Chair does not recall that it is a rule of the Senate, but the Chair does recall the fact that the holding of the Presiding Officer in similar cases has been as stated by the Chair.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the amendment in the case of the naval appropriation bill referred to by the Senator from Colorado——

Mr. THOMAS. And also in the case of the Army appropriation bill——

Mr. SMOOT. And also to the Army appropriation bill, related simply to the employees in a certain branch of the service.

Mr. THOMAS. That does not may any difference, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. And it was held that it was not general legislation.

Mr. THOMAS. This also refers to employees in a certain branch of the Government, for instance, the Post Office Department. I recall that once in a similar case I appealed from the ruling of the Chair, and the Senate sustained the Chair. I can not tell the Senator just when that was, but, as I recall, the decision was based on the proposition that the amendment imposed a limitation upon the method of expending the money appropriated.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I contend that this is not general legislation, but is merely a limitation upon the manner of expenditure of the money sought to be appropriated. I do not think I need to cite any rule supporting it. If it is subject to a point of order, the rule making it out of order should be cited by the Senator making the point of order. I do not think any such rule can be cited.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have always believed that Government employees should organize for the purpose of their own mutual benefit, but I have continually advised against their affiliating with any outside organization. Senators may remember that as chairman of a subcommittee of the District of Columbia Committee I reported the bills increasing the pay of policemen and firemen of the District, and in those bills I recommended forbidding, under penalty of dismissal, any men employed in those departments from affiliating with any outside organization. They were the peace officers of the city and could owe, in my opinion, loyalty to the Government only.

Until seven years ago the postal employees—I speak of the clerks and letter carriers particularly—had organizations of their own, entirely separate from any outside connection. After the present administration, however, had been in power a short time the employees of the Post Office Department insisted that they were unable to deal collectively with the Postmaster General, and through his treatment of them they were forced to affiliate with the American Federation of Labor. Personally, I do not believe that the change in their policy has helped them very much. I know that some of their members agree to that statement. But, Mr. President, despite the fact that they have this outside connection, I feel that it is fair to say that no men in the Government employ have been more loyal to the service than the post-office employees of the United States. A day or two ago I was discussing with some of these splendid men the work their organization was doing. I was informed that during the past month the city letter carriers alone had paid upward of $50,000 in sick and death benefits to their members and their families.

From my knowledge of the service I am certain that the fact that these men were organized, that they took pride in their association, that they were loyal to it as well as the service, has had more to do with the spirit that has pervaded the Postal Service during these recent difficult years than any other thing. The organization has kept the spirit up. In my opinion, had it not been for the fact that these men were joined together for a common purpose the Postal Service would have broken down in many cities of the country. The postal employees have been suffering many hardships of late, when the cost of living has increased 100 per cent in the past four years and their pay has been increased but about 30 per cent. As an evidence of the splendid service these men have been rendering, may I call your attention to the work that has been done by them in connection with the sale of war-savings stamps. It was brought home to me that in Brooklyn, where I live, 20 postal carriers in that city during recent months have sold over $1,280,000 worth of these stamps, and one of the men sold $255,000 worth. They vied with each other in their efforts to serve. If there is any group of organized public servants in this country who are more dependable, I would like to know them.

Mr. President, I would be glad, when the opportunity offers itself, to have the Senate take up the question of enacting legislation forbidding all Government employees belonging to any outside organization. I believe, however, in view of the fact that in many parts of the country, through lack of sufficient compensation, this service is so badly shattered, that it would be inviting disaster if we just picked out the postal employees of the country and enacted legislation of this character affecting them solely. For the reasons I have stated, I trust that the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] will not be agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, this amendment would not prevent postal employees from having their own associations amongst themselves for the advancement of their interests; it is not aimed at that at all.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, this question was considered by the committee and there was a general feeling on the part of the committee that something of this kind ought to be done. There was a showing, but without both sides being heard, that the workings of the department were somewhat embarrassed not by the organization of the employees, but by reason of their affiliation with outside organizations. I discovered, however, that the House would not cooperate with any action the Senate might take in reference to this subject, and I did not want it to go out, and I do not want it to go out now, as having been decided upon its merits. I think it is a subject that ought to have the consideration of the Congress, as to what the policy of the United States is going to be, not only in reference to its employees in connection with the Post Office Department, but as to employees connected with all the other departments.

I should dislike very much to have this amendment adopted with a handful of Senators present—not nearly a quorum—knowing that it would actually suffer defeat in conference. I should dislike to have it disposed of in that way, but I do think, if matters continue as they have been going on for some time, it will be the duty of the Congress to act upon this subject. It ought, however, to act in the open; it ought to act only after full consideration, after both sides have had an opportunity to be heard.

So I sincerely hope that in view of the small attendance here this afternoon this question will not be decided in the affirmative. I am sorry it came up at all, because, I repeat, it is a subject of such importance that it ought to have careful and serious consideration by a majority of both Houses of Congress. I hope that the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it is not my intention to discuss the merits of this amendment at the present time. I sympathize with the desire of the chairman of the committee to dispose of the bill as soon as possible, and I am satisfied that an amendment of such importance as this, as the chairman has said, is one which should command a larger attendance than that which we can depend upon to-night. It is my purpose to discuss the merits of the proposition in connection with the retirement bill, which is now the unfinished business of the Senate. My purpose in rising now is merely to express my sympathy with the object of the amendment. I think that it presents a proposition that is of the utmost importance, and one which the Government in its own defense will be required sooner or later to consider and to consider favorably.

As the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has said, no one, at least so far as this amendment goes, desires for a moment to prevent organizations of employees, independently of the American Federation of Labor, which may make for good fellowship, for improvement in morals and standing, and for all of the elements which may be evolved from within large associations. The fact is—and I will merely make this observation and then take my seat—the fact is, as we know, that now the American Federation of Labor is engaged in an organized, boldly announced purpose to control the next election; to retire from public office every Member of Congress of either House who has not yielded to the extreme demands of that organization. It is well known that the branches of the American Federation of Labor which include the employees of the Government are engaged in the same propaganda and acting under the orders and by the direction of the main organization, and that part of the moneys which are received for their employment is being used for political purposes.

The Senator from Montana the other day, in discussing the same proposition in connection with another bill, called attention to the announcement of certain organizations of employees in this city of their purpose to keep close watch of the record of every man in the Senate and in the House, and inform their associates all over the country of those records.

I have no objection to that; a man who is afraid of his record does not deserve to come back here; but the organized purpose is, unquestionably, to intimidate and to compel favorable action in regard to matters in which these associations are directly interested, under the threat, expressed or implied, of political extinction. That being the case, the time has come when the Congress should meet this question and take it into consideration and act accordingly. Consequently, I hope it will be the subject of early and full consideration. As I have said, I do not intend to detain the Senate here this evening for the purpose of going into the merits of the matter.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that my reason for offering the amendment is that I think Congress ought to say whether or not it is going to meet the threat to which the Senator from Colorado has referred, and I thought this as good a time as any for Congress to say what it is going to do about that threat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that the Secretary be authorized to renumber the sections of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that is done without a formal order.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to reoffer my amendment, on page 27, about 1-cent drop letters, section 6, as reported by the committee.

I want to say that directly after I took my seat in the Senate I offered a bill for 1-cent drop-letter postage. The bill was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I made a few efforts to get it reported out, but the majority of the committee continued the bill. I understand that similar bills were introduced in the House by Mr. MADDEN that have not been reported out. When this bill came up we voted to report it here by a majority vote of those present.

I desire to say that it seems to me that it is awfully important to try to get this country back to a normal condition. Before the war the provision that I am now trying to have enacted was the law in this country. The Post Office Department recommended it strongly before the committee. They said it would reduce the revenues something like $15,000,000 per year, but that that would soon be made up by increased business. I have proved that by figures taken from the statistics in regard to the reduction from 3-cent to 2-cent postage. That has been made up, and more than made up, and the department wants the people of the country to receive the benefit of this reduction. Now, I want the people to know who is to blame for this bill not being enacted into law. I can not understand how anyone will object to it.

On March 26 I received the following letter:

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POST OFFICE CLERKS,
AFFILIATED WITH THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., March 26, 1920.

Hon. NATHANIEL B. DIAL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Your attention is respectfully invited to the inclosed protest against a reduction in first-class postage rates, as contemplated by section 6 of the postal appropriation bill, submitted by the official representatives of the National Association of Letter Carriers, the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, the Railway Mail Association, and the National Federation of Rural Carriers.

Very truly, yours,

THOS. F. FLAHERTY,
Secretary-Treasurer, National Federation of Post Office Clerks.

Now, Mr. President, they issued this circular which they sent to me, and I presume they sent it to the other Senators:

PROTEST AGAINST CURTAILMENT OF POSTAL REVENUES.

To Members of the United States Senate:

Section 6 (page 27) of the postal appropriation bill, now waiting action by the Senate, proposes a reduction in postage rates on first-class mail intended for local delivery to 1 cent an ounce. In our judgment this legislation is unwise and should be defeated for the following reasons:

(1) As a matter of sound public policy, postage rates should be so fixed as to provide adequate revenue to cover the operating expenses of an efficient and satisfactory service. Existing postage rates will not do this. In a period of mounting prices these rates have experienced little change. A feverish effort has been made to squeeze postal expenditures within the limits of inadequate postal revenues resulting in a serious impairment of service efficiency and overburdened service workers. Despite the enforcement of this sweeping retrenchment program, a postal deficit, conservatively estimated at $30,000,000, seems certain for the current fiscal year. Nor does this estimate include additional millions due the railroads for increased mail transportation charges.

The Post Office Department had estimated that it would be about $15,000,000 instead of $30,000,000, as these people claim here. Now, they send out this kind of propaganda:

Now it is proposed to reduce postage on "drop" letters, thereby curtailing postal revenues by at least $25,000,000 and creating an ultimate postal deficit of staggering proportions.

(2) Nothing but an urgent public necessity or a widespread public demand for the extension of service facilities should at the present time warrant this proposed $25,000,000 curtailment of the earning capacity of the Postal Service. Neither of these conditions exist. Instead this proposed reduction will chiefly benefit a few larger users of the mail, but the general public will pay by reason of declining service efficiency due to lessened revenues.

(3) Furthermore, the principal costs of handling first-class mail, regardless of destination, are clerical and carrier costs. In comparison, the transportation costs of first-class mail are negligible. Whatever justification exists for a reduction in "drop" letter postage applies with equal force to all first-class mail. To impose a $25,000,000 burden on the general public for the benefit of a small group of postal patrons is indefensible.

(4) There is no public demand for reduced postage rates. There is a demand for an improved service. An incalculable loss is daily inflicted upon the Nation through the present uncertain service, and cheapened postage rates will only mean further demoralization. A penurious postal policy is the most expensive economy conceivable.

(5) The Postal Service holds out little attraction for competent workers. This is the primary reason for its present inefficiency. Rural routes have been abandoned, city delivery uncertain and less frequent, Railway Mail Service disorganized to the point of demoralization, clerical forces sadly depleted, and the entire Postal Service shamefully undermanned. Wage standards are too low and working conditions too irksome to hold experienced employees or induce new ones to enter. Higher wage standards are imperative. The entire question of postal salaries is now before a commission created by the Sixty-fifth Congress, and, pending their report, this proposed reduction in postal revenues appears untimely and certain to further cripple an already depressed service.

We trust that these representations will appeal to you as a convincing statement of the facts in the case and that you will readily perceive the danger threatening the entire Postal Service by this legislation.

Yours, very respectfully,

National Association of Letter Carriers, Edward J. Gainor, president; Edw. J. Cantwell, secretary, Kenois Building, Washington, D. C.

National Federation of Post Office Clerks, Gilbert E. Hyatt, president; Thos. F. Flaherty, secretary-treasurer, American Federation of Labor Building, Washington, D. C.

Railway Mail Association, Edward J. Ryan, president; W. M. Collins, industrial secretary, Colorado Building, Washington, D. C.

Mr. President, to that I replied very briefly. I said:

MARCH 26, 1920.

Mr. THOMAS F. FLAHERTY,
Secretary-Treasurer National Federation of Post Office Clerks,
Room 400, American Federation of Labor Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have yours of the 26th with inclosure.

I desire to state that I am a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and introduced the bill referred to. Furthermore, I was on the subcommittee which helped frame the bill, and therefore I am reasonably familiar with all of its contents. Besides this, I desire to state that neither your facts nor figures are borne out by statements from the highest authority in the land. I know of my own knowledge that letters are being delivered by hand, whereas if the rate were reduced they would be sent through the mail. The proper estimated deficit would soon be overcome by increased business. There is no known reason why it should cost as much to deliver a letter in Washington, mailed here, as it would one mailed here to be delivered in San Francisco. The people are entitled to this reduction and should have it at the earliest possible date. This is not only my opinion but it is the opinion of the man I consider the best posted in the United States.

I want to state to you that I am a friend of the post-office employees and have looked after their interests consistently since I have been here and expect to continue to do so, but it seems to me it would be well for you to let the committee take its course after all parties have had an opportunity to be heard. I have frequently heard it stated that your organization is opposed to this legislation because it would perhaps entail a little more work. It would be hard for me to believe this statement, and I hope such insinuations are a slander upon the patriotism and industry of the postal employees of this country. I assure you that it will afford me pleasure to do whatever I can to protect the interests not only of your colaborers but all the Government employees in a proper, legitimate, and conservative way.

Yours, truly, N. B. DIAL.

Mr. President, I am a little bit tired of outside interference with legislation. The committees here do their work arduously, give hearings to everybody interested, and then we get this kind of propaganda. I do not know whether anybody is influenced by this or not, but it only came in a day or two before the vote on Saturday; and I want to say that it will be humiliating if we can not act here like independent men, if we have got to be swayed—I do not suppose anybody here would be swayed—by this kind of propaganda.

I say that it is unbecoming for the employees to come in here and try to intermeddle with legislation. If I thought that I could not come here and other Senators could not come here and legislate independently, I would advise them all to go home and put on a "Mother Hubbard," and help sew buttons on the children's clothes, and darn their socks, and sweep the back yard, and perform work belonging to the feminine gender, and old ladies at that. We ought to go on and legislate here for the business interests of the country. The business people of this country have stood by the postal employees, and they are entitled to this reduction in postage, and it is a strange thing to me that we can not get down here and try to get things back to a normal basis. Letters by the thousand are now carried and delivered by hand. I know that bank employees deliver them around, and the business interests of our population are penalized unnecessarily.

Mr. President, I know that it is in the discretion of the Senate to pass this legislation if it wants to, or to strike it out, I presume, under the rule; but I assure the Senate that I think it is time we let the United States at large know that we are legislating in a businesslike way for business people, and on a basis that is just to everybody.

I do not know whether the chairman of the committee wants a vote on this matter to-night or not. I want to reoffer my amendment about the air route to Atlanta. I do not care to suggest the absence of a quorum, but I hope he will put these two votes over until to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from South Carolina state his amendment?

Mr. DIAL. Yes, sir. I reoffer section 6 as printed on page 27 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 27, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 6. That the rate of postage on all mail matter of the first class deposited in any post office for delivery within the delivery district of such post office shall be 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, this amendment is one that was reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. In the Committee of the Whole some Member of the Senate made the point of order that it was general legislation, and the provision went out under that objection. The Senator from South Carolina now moves to reinsert it. It is not in the bill; and if it was subject to the point of order then, it is still subject to a point of order in the Senate.

Inasmuch as the Senators who opposed the provision are not here, I am obliged to make the point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained. The bill is still in the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to reoffer my amendment for the mail air route from New York to Atlanta.

I have no desire to delay the Senate, and I am only going to appeal to the fair-mindedness of the Senate. If they should establish that route, it would benefit not only the South, the section in which I live—and I try not to be sectional; what I advocate here, I advocate for the general good of the country—but it would benefit the great country north of New York. It would benefit New York wonderfully, in that it would get the southern mail quicker. There is a tremendous amount of business done between here and New York, between Richmond and New York, and between North Carolina and South Carolina points and Atlanta. It would also quicken up the delivery of the mail from New Orleans, and from Florida, and from Habana, and from the West.

So, in fairness to everybody—I know I could demand a quorum, but I am not going to do that—I think this amendment ought to go in the bill. It certainly ought to go to conference, and let us see what could be accomplished in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 15, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of such aeroplanes as may be necessary to establish, operate, and maintain an aeroplane mail service between New York, N. Y., and Atlanta, Ga.; for the operation and maintenance of such aeroplanes, including stations, equipment, tools, and machinery, and other necessary incidental expenses; and for such personnel as may be necessary therefor, $625,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 30, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 29, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we would approach Thee in the spirit which possessed the Master in the Garden of Gethsemane—nevertheless not my will, but Thine be done. Thou hast disclosed Thy will in the life and precepts of the Master; yet a howling mob cried out for His blood. Turned over to them, they crucified Him; yet His was the victory.

We pray for peace and are compelled to prepare for war against the howling mob which would deprive us of our life, our property, our sacred rights.

If the world would do Thy will, ninety-nine per cent of the evils which infest it would pass away. We pray for harmony, but bad men are creating discord. We pray for happiness, and sorrow fills the world. Help us to live, and love, and dwell with Thee in peace, harmony, and good will to all mankind, guided by right, and truth, and justice, that Thy will may be done in us. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the governor of the State of Washington announcing the ratification by the legislature of that State of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, on March 25, as shown on page 4820 of the RECORD of that date, I made certain observations concerning the postmaster situation at Nashville, Tenn., and quoted certain letters of the Postmaster General. This morning I received a letter from the Postmaster General, dated March 26, asking that certain civil-service regulations be placed in the RECORD and that certain letters from the Postmaster General, dated March 8 and March 12, 1920, to the Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, Member of Congress from that district, be so inserted. In fairness to both the Secretary and Mr. BYRNS, both of whom I admire personally, it should be said that the quotation made in my remarks came from Mr. Harry S. Berry, commander of the American Legion of Tennessee, from the national executive committee of the American Legion and not from Mr. BYRNS. They both have trouble enough over the situation without the addition of a personal element to it.

I ask unanimous consent that, in accordance with the request of the Postmaster General, I may extend my remarks by inserting the matter referred to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The communications are as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C. March 26, 1920.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: In reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday I observed that you inserted in the RECORD the Executive order of March 31, 1917, relating to the appointment of postmasters at presidential offices, but that the requirements for eligibility under the order were not inserted. I am therefore inclosing a copy of the requirements, from which it will be observed that—

"Applicants for the position of postmaster at an office of the first class must have reached their thirtieth birthday, and for postmaster at an office of the second class their twenty-fifth birthday, on the date of making oath to the application. Those who have passed their sixty-fifth birthday are not eligible for any office."

As you inserted only parts of the two letters written by the Postmaster General to Representative BYRNS of Tennessee in regard to the appointment of a postmaster for the office at Nashville, Tenn., I am taking the liberty of inclosing copies of the entire letters. I will greatly appreciate it if you will insert these letters and the requirements for eligibles under the Executive order in the RECORD, so that all of the facts may be before the Congress.

Sincerely, yours,

A. S. BURLESON.

MARCH 12, 1920.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BYRNS: I have your letter of the 10th instant, with further reference to the appointment of a postmaster for the Nashville, Tenn., office.

Replying to your statement that the department's ruling regarding the ineligibility of Mr. Webster, a candidate for postmaster at Nashville, was highly technical, and that you understand an amended application dated January 26, 1920, was submitted with Mr. Webster's papers. I have to advise you that no such application has been submitted to the department. The papers submitted by the Civil Service Commission contained Mr. Webster's application, sworn to before a notary public on December 27, 1919, attached to which was a typewritten statement made by him under date of January 12, 1920, before he reached the age of 30, which he said was intended as a supplement to his application of December 27, and which contained information in regard to his business qualifications and did not refer to his age.

Mr. Webster's application shows that he was discharged from military service on January 3, 1919. The date of the regular examination for postmaster at Nashville was September 16, 1919. This would seem to indicate clearly that Mr. Webster was not prohibited from making his application in September because of absence on military duty. Notwithstanding the fact that he had been out of the Army for several months and apparently could have made application for the regular examination, he did not do so until December 27.

The Department is governed in the appointment of new postmasters at presidential offices by the Executive order of March 31, 1917, and the regulations issued thereunder, which were approved by the President, and the order and regulations fix minimum and maximum ages of applicants for offices of the first class, to which Nashville belongs. The act of July 11, 1919, providing that preference be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, etc., was certainly not intended to apply to appointments of postmasters at presidential offices, such postmasters not being under the classified civil service. The department, however, feels, as stated before, that candidates for such appointments should be given the benefit of the preference statute, provided they meet the requirements established by the regulations and are qualified, but does not believe that the regulations should be nullified in order that soldier applicants may be eligible for the examination. It is appropriate to call attention to the fact that when the Executive order of March 31, 1917, and the regulations thereunder were issued the rules of the Civil Service Commission then in effect waived the age requirements of applicants for appointment in the classified service who had been honorably discharged from the military or naval service for disability incurred in the line of duty. It must be evident, therefore, that it was intended to establish definite age requirements for these unclassified positions. If the age limitations should be waived as in the classified service, it would be necessary to appoint as postmaster at such an office as Nashville a veteran of the recent war who had passed his twenty-first birthday, or, for instance, a veteran of the Civil War who had reached his seventieth or even eightieth birthyday, provided he met the other requirements and attained a rating of 65 in the examination. I think you will agree with me that such appointments for large offices would not be in the interest of good postal service. I am also advised by the First Assistant that when the representatives of the American Legion called on him he pointed out to them the necessity of any soldier applicant meeting the requirements prescribed for the position.

Referring to that part of your letter which states that because of the department's decision in this case and the requirement of the Executive order that the name of the highest qualified eligible shall be submitted to the President for appointment you are unable to understand why the department submitted the name of Mr. Webster, I have to say that the department did not submit Mr. Webster's name to the President for appointment, but submitted for approval by the President the name of the highest eligible, Mr. McCabe, and a full statement of the conditions relative to Mr. Webster and his application. This was done because of the fact that the Civil Service Commission had disregarded the age limitation in his case and submitted his name as eligible for appointment; also in order that the President might have all the facts before him in his decision on the case.

Under all the circumstances it can not be claimed that the department decided the case on a technicality, and it is believed that the course followed in the Nashville case is the only proper one to follow. It was treated just as any other similar case would have been handled.

Very truly, yours,

A. S. BURLESON.

MARCH 8, 1920.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BYRNS: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of March 5, 1920, setting forth inquiries contained in a letter addressed to you by the executive officer of the American Legion relative to the recent nomination of the postmaster at Nashville, Tenn., and the following replies are submitted for your information:

1. Question. The act of July 11, 1919, directs that preference shall be given to the employment of honorably discharged soldiers in clerical and other positions in the executive branch of the Government. Does the Post Office Department construe this law to apply to appointments of postmasters in the first, second, and third class?

Answer. The provision of the act of July 11, 1919, referred to is a part of the act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes. It is incorporated in an item relating to the Civil Service Commission and undoubtedly applies only to positions within the classified civil service; and in the judgment of this department it does not apply to the appointment of postmasters at first, second, and third class post offices. After the law was enacted, the department, on its own initiative, took it up with the President and the Civil Service Commission and urged that applicants for the position of postmaster at presidential post offices be given the benefit of the preference law, which was done; and where veterans meet the requirements for the position and make an average 65 per cent they are placed at the head of the list and given preference in making the appointment.

2. Question. The Civil Service Commission, in an official publication, has stated that "persons entitled to preference under this act will be released from all age limitations" and further that "the commission may, with the approval of the proper appointing officer, change the regulations or existing age limits for entrance to the examinations under these rules; but persons preferred under the act of July 11, 1919, may be examined without regard to age." The commission permitted Mr. R. C. Webster to make application a few days before he reached the age of 30 on the assumption that he would reach the age of 30 years before a report could possibly be made to the Post Office Department. As a matter of fact, he did reach the age of 30 years before his papers were filed with the department, and in addition thereto he had amended his application by a sworn statement as to his age. Does this amended application, in the form of a sworn statement, appear in the record as certified by the Civil Service Commission and were these facts given consideration when the Post Office Department submitted a recommendation to the White House.

Answer. The official publication of the Civil Service Commission referred to relates solely to the positions within the classified civil service. The Executive order issued by the President on March 31, 1917, and the necessary requirements prescribed thereunder for the various positions were issued after the usual preference regulations of the Civil Service Commission issued under previous statutes. The announcement of the examination for the position of postmaster at Nashville stated, "This is not an examination under the civil service act and rules, but is held under an Executive order of March 31, 1917, which reads as follows." It also states, "Applicants for the position of first-class postmasters must have reached their thirtieth birthday on the date of making oath to the application, and must be in good physical condition." The application of Mr. Webster states that he was born on January 20, 1890, and that he was 29 years of age his last birthday, and the oath to the application was made on December 27, 1919, or prior to the time that he reached the age of 30; and in the opinion of the department he was ineligible. The fact that he reached the age of 30 before a report reached the Post Office Department would not affect the case, as the requirement as set forth plainly states that he must have reached the age of 30 on the date of making oath to the application. The amended application, in the form of a sworn statement, referred to, was not filed with the department, but had it been it could not have been given consideration, as we would have been compelled to consider his original application.

3. Question. The Executive order of the President issued on March 31, 1917, provides in substance that upon a vacancy in a post office of the first, second, or third class, this vacancy shall be certified to the Civil Service Commission, which will forthwith hold an open competitive examination, certifying the result thereof to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President the name of the highest qualified eligible for appointment to fill such vacancy. Has there been any amendment made by the President to this Executive order, and if not, will you please advise me why the name of two eligibles were submitted to the President?

Answer. The order and requirement thereunder have not been amended by the President, with the exception that we are now giving the benefit of the preference statute to veterans where they meet all other rquirements by considering them for appointment if they make a rating of 65 per cent. Mr. McCabe attained a rating higher than that of Mr. Webster, and as Mr. Webster did not meet the requirements it would not be necessary to give his name consideration; but in order to give him every possible consideration a memorandum covering the facts was submitted to the President before the nomination was made.

4. Question. The Executive order referred to makes no reference to age, except to fix the maximum age for those who shall apply. There is no restriction upon the application of one who has not reached the age of 30 years. Does the Post Office Department construe the regulations to mean that an applicant must have reached the age of 30 years at the time of his application, rather than at the time his name is actually sent to the Senate for confirmation?

Answer. This statement is no doubt made in error, as the requirements prescribed by the President fix the minimum age which an applicant must have attained on the day of making oath to his application, and this has been strictly adhered to. Prior to the time that the Nashville case was considered a vacancy occurred in the post office at Morgantown, W. Va., through the death of the postmaster. He had a son who was a veteran who desired to take the examination, and upon inquiry it was ascertained that he had not reached the age of 30, and so he was advised that he was not eligible for the position, Morgantown being a first-class office.

5. Question. If this be the construction given to the regulation, why was Mr. Webster denied the preference given to soldier, inasmuch as he had reached the age of 30 years before his papers were forwarded to the Post Office Department by the Civil Service Commission for consideration and had actually amended his application in order to clearly bring himself within any possible construction that might be made of the regulation in question?

Answer. Mr. Webster must have had before him the notice of the examination, which states fully that applicants must have reached the age of 30 at the time of making oath to the applications.

6. Question. Mr. Webster had received official notice to the effect that he was the highest eligible for appointment to the vacancy at Nashville. Did not this entitle him to have his name alone presented to the President under the Executive order referred to, inasmuch as there could be no possible objection to his character and standing?

Answer. Mr. Webster could not have been the highest eligible, as he did not attain as high a rating as Mr. McCabe, and could only have been the highest eligible had he been given the benefit of the preference statute. As he did not meet the requirements set forth above, in the judgment of the department he was not eligible; and, as stated before, in order that he might be given further consideration, his name was submitted to the President.

The Executive order referred to prescribes the manner in which the President shall select a person for nomination as postmaster, provided he meets the requirements specified under the order. The department has shown every consideration possible to veterans, and has submitted to the President the names of a number of them for the nomination as postmaster when they were certified as entitled to preference, although they did not attain the highest rating, but it is necessary that veterans to be appointed to these positions must meet the requirements specified under the order.

Thanking you for an opportunity to answer the inquiries made of you, I am

Very sincerely,

———— ————,
Postmaster General.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C.

INFORMATION REGARDING POSTMASTER POSITIONS FILLED THROUGH NOMINATION BY THE PRESIDENT FOR CONFIRMATION BY THE SENATE.

Under the civil-service law positions which are filled through nomination by the President for confirmation by the Senate are not included in the competitive classified service. Positions of postmaster at first, second, and third class post offices are filled in this manner. For such positions, however, examinations are held by the Civil Service Commission, at the request of the Postmaster General, under an Executive order of March 31, 1917, which reads as follows:

"Hereafter when a vacancy occurs in the position of postmaster at any office of the first, second, or third class as the result of death, resignation, removal, or on the recommendation of the First Assistant Postmaster General, approved by the Postmaster General, to the effect that the efficiency or needs of the service requires that a change shall be made, the Postmaster General shall certify the fact to the Civil Service Commission, which shall forthwith hold an open competitive examination to test the fitness of applicants to fill such vacancy, and when such examination has been held and the papers in connection therewith have been rated the said commission shall certify the result thereof to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President the name of the highest qualified eligible for appointment to fill such vacancy unless it is established that the character or residence of such applicant disqualifies him for appointment. No person who has passed his sixty-fifth birthday shall be given the examination herein provided for."

Persons appointed as a result of an examination held in accordance with the foregoing Executive order will not thereby attain a competitive civil-service status, and will not thereby become eligible for a position in the competitive classified service.

GENERAL REQUIREMENTS.

To be eligible for examination for a position as postmaster at an office of the first, second, or third class an applicant must be a citizen of the United States, must actually reside within the delivery of the office for which the application is made, must have so resided at the time the vacancy occurred, must be in good physical condition, and must meet the age requirement hereinafter specified.

In examinations in which the competitors are assembled in an examination room for a written examination as hereinafter specified applicants must submit to the examiner on the day of the examination their photographs, taken within two years, securely pasted in the space provided on the admission cards sent them after their applications are filed. In examinations in which the competitors are not assembled for a written examination the photographs must be forwarded with the applications. Group photographs or proofs will not be accepted.

Persons who meet the requirements and desire examination may obtain the necessary forms from the office where the vacancy exists or from the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C., after the examination has been announced. Applications must be properly executed and filed with the commission in Washington in time to arrange for the examination.

EXAMINATION FOR OFFICES HAVING ANNUAL COMPENSATION ABOVE $2,400.

Subjects.	Weights.
1. Education	20
2. Business training and experience	80
Total	100

In addition to the full and detailed information called for by questions 21 and 23 of the application (Form 2241), the applicants are required to furnish the following in connection with each responsible position held by them:

(a) The number of persons under their supervision.

(b) The character of the business done by the person, firm, or corporation.

For offices paying more than $6,000 a year the applicants must show that for at least seven years they have held responsible positions in which the principal duties involved the management of business affairs, such positions as those of president, general manager, general superintendent, or assistant general superintendent, requiring active charge of firms, corporations, businesses, or offices, and such positions in different branches of the Postal Service.

For offices paying over $4,000, up to and including $6,000 a year, the applicants must show that for at least five years they have held responsible positions in which the principal duties involved the management of business affairs, such positions as those of president, general manager, general superintendent, or assistant general superintendent, requiring the active charge of firms, corporations, or offices, and such positions in the different branches of the Postal Service.

For offices paying over $2,400, up to and including $4,000 a year, applicants must show that for at least three years they have held responsible positions in which the principal duties involved the management of business affairs and the direction and supervision of employees, including such position in the different branches of the Postal Service.

Statements as to education and experience are subject to verification.

Applicants for the position of postmaster at an office of the first class must have reached their thirtieth birthday, and for postmaster at an office of the second class, their twenty-fifth birthday, on the date of making oath to the application. Those who have passed their sixty-fifth birthday are not eligible for any office.

METHOD OF RATING EXAMINATIONS FOR OFFICES HAVING ANNUAL COMPENSATION ABOVE $2,400.

In examinations for offices having annual compensation above $2,400, the rating on the educational qualifications of the applicant will be determined from the information furnished in answer to Question 21 of the application, as follows, and upon corroborative information:

"Question 21. With respect to both your general and technical or professional education, state fully and in detail the names and locations of the schools or colleges you have attended and the courses of study pursued by you in each, naming any degree or degrees received by you, date conferred, and the institution by which conferred. If you have pursued any postgraduate courses of study, state fully what studies and when, where, and for what length of time they were pursued." (The answer to this question should be accurate and complete.)

The rating on business training and experience will be determined by the character and extent of the business training and experience of the applicant as shown, first, by his answer to Question 23 of the application, which reads as follows:

"Question 23. State fully and in detail all the practical experience you have had in the profession, occupation, or business in which you seek employment, or in professions or occupations of a similar character or of a character to fit you for the position sought. State (a) when, giving dates, (b) where, and (c) by whom you were employed; (d) the salary or compensation received; (e) the specific nature of your duties in each case. (The answer to this question should be accurate and complete.) If there are any branches of a profession or occupation in which you regard yourself as especially expert, state what branches."

And, second, by a careful personal investigation of each applicant by representatives of the Civil Service Commission, one of whom is to be selected by the commission from the Post Office Department, such representatives to make report of their investigation direct to the commission. The investigation and report should cover two purposes, namely, first, full inquiry as to each candidate's suitability for the office by reason of his character and personal characteristics, this part of the inquiry to be noncompetitive and not considered in the rating of the candidate, but if he is found unsuitable by the commission as a result of such inquiry he, of course, will not be declared eligible; the second purpose of the investigation should be the same careful personal inquiry from persons best qualified to know of the business qualifications, ability, and experience of each candidate, the report of such inquiry to be confined to findings of facts and to be made a part of the evidence and record upon which the commission rates the candidate.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

JOHN C. PUGH.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

House resolution 504.

Resolved, That there be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, $1,000 to John C. Pugh for extra and expert services to the Committee on Naval Affairs during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-sixth Congress as assistant clerk to said committee.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this rather unusual resolution is prompted by the effort to compensate an employee of the Committee on Naval Affairs, made necessary by the inexperience in technical knowledge of new employees on that committee in bringing out their bills that have just lately passed the House. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], informs me that it was his intention to temporarily retain the employees of the Committee on Naval Affairs as they were in the last Congress, but the unfortunate death of the clerk of that committee and the transfer of another, an assistant clerk, made this impossible, and they were without experienced technical clerical help. The recipient of the amount named in this resolution worked extra time and many nights—sometimes all night—I am told, in going over this bill for the Commitee on Naval Affairs, and I am informed by the chairman that this action has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I believe it passed our committee unanimously.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. There is not the expenditure involved in this resolution that is indicated on the face of the resolution. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has not employed a messenger, which he is authorized to do, for some eight or nine months, and there has been a saving of $835 in that—at least so I am informed by him—so that the actual expenditure involved is only $165. I am told he is a man who had knowledge of the situation and saved in duplication and in pruning in the bill $100,000,000. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman how much this employee, Mr. Pugh, is now receiving as a regular salary?

Mr. IRELAND. Well, I am not positive, but I think it is $1,800 a year in his present position.

Mr. BLANTON. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] informs me that Mr. Pugh is now drawing $3,000 per annum from the Committee on Appropriations; and if we allow him this $1,000 for the few days' extra work he did for the Naval Affairs Committee he will be receiving $4,000, when many other committee clerks receive only $2,500 per annum.

Mr. IRELAND. That is a matter of computation; yes.

Mr. BLANTON. He occupies just what position now?

Mr. IRELAND. I believe he is one of the clerks to the Committee on Appropriations. He left the Committee on Naval Affairs to accept that position at a larger salary than he was receiving. I think that is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, the Committee on Naval Affairs has a clerk at $2,500, Mr. William M. Coffin, who with his $240 bonus receives $2,740?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes; I believe that is right.

Mr. BLANTON. And it has an assistant clerk, Mr. Frank A. Byron, at $1,500 per annum, which with his bonus of $240 lets him draw $1,740 per annum?

Mr. IRELAND. I think that is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. How many other employees have they besides the clerk and assistant?

Mr. IRELAND. I think they have a clerk and an assistant clerk, a messenger who has not been employed, and I can not recall positively whether there are others or not.

Mr. BLANTON. As a matter of fact this committee also has a janitor, William H. Carter, who draws $1,000 which, with his $240 bonus, makes him draw $1,240 per annum. Has this committee a second assistant clerk?

Mr. IRELAND. Well, that is my impression; but I am not positive.

Mr. BLANTON. The second assistant clerk receives what salary?

Mr. IRELAND. I am uninformed.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet having a clerk at $2,500 plus his $240 bonus a year, and an assistant clerk at $1,500 plus his $240 bonus a year, and a janitor at $1,000 plus his $240 bonus a year, and possibly another assistant clerk, they are now calling in somebody else to do the work, to wit, Mr. Pugh, who himself draws $3,000 a year, because those three gentlemen have not any experience on that committee, as I understand from the chairman. And we are asked to pay besides this $3,000 Mr. Pugh an extra $1,000 for doing some extra work?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Then it was unfortunate for the people of the country who pay the taxes that the Committee on Naval Affairs had to appoint three men who had no experience.

Mr. IRELAND. Well, it is not always possible. They were just the victims of circumstances.

Mr. BLANTON. Just this one other point——

Mr. IRELAND. They are well qualified, and I do not imagine that the people of the country are going to worry about the expenditure of $165 which resulted in the saving of $100,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Just one other question.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not yet. I have not yielded to the gentleman from Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] has the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has yielded to me for a question, and I refuse to be interrupted by the gentleman from Minnesota for the present.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] yield?

Mr. IRELAND. For a question.

Mr. BLANTON. Since the Naval Affairs Committee, which is one of the big, hard-working committees of the House, has been able for eight and one-half months during this Congress to get along without a messenger provided for them and given them by the Congress, should not that induce the chairman of the Committee on Accounts to be very careful in allowing this messenger service to so many other committees of the House, many of which meet very seldom?

Mr. IRELAND. I am sorry we disagree with the gentleman from Texas, but it was the opinion of the committee that we exercised that care.

Mr. KNUTSON. I wish to make a correction of the statement that has been made. The Naval Affairs Committee has only one assistant clerk, and not two as suggested by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. IRELAND. I am glad to be corrected.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I was very greatly struck by the statement which the gentleman has made that this clerk has saved $100,000,000 in the appropriations. I would advise that we pass him around to the various committees. That was so staggering an announcement that I was almost unable to grasp it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois how this man ever saved $100,000,000?

Mr. IRELAND. I could not go into the detail of the matter.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know; but what makes you say that he did?

Mr. IRELAND. I am simply giving you the statement of the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, who gave it to me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What was the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs doing?

Mr. IRELAND. It is unfortunate that he is not here. He went to attend the funeral of the late Mr. BROWNING and has not returned. I am told that the clerk saved this money by wiping out duplications.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. According to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, this man saved $100,000,000 while the Naval Affairs Committee was sitting around like knots on a log.

Mr. IRELAND. I would not underestimate their ability at all, but their clerical and technical knowledge is not quite that of a clerk who gives all of his time and study to the subject.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The fact about this matter is, it is going to give this man a thousand dollars because the Republican clerk of that committee did not know how to discharge his duties. Is not that true?

Mr. IRELAND. Oh, no. I happen to know that the Republican clerk of that committee is a very competent man, perhaps as competent a man as ever served the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why did he not discharge the duties that this other man discharged, then?

Mr. IRELAND. He had not the technical knowledge that is only gained through years of experience in going over these bills. His judgment was no doubt as good as that of anybody else.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who is this new man?

Mr. IRELAND. The man to be paid is Mr. Pugh.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Where is Mr. Pugh?

Mr. IRELAND. He is now on the Appropriations Committee, I believe.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Was he doing extra work in there?

Mr. IRELAND. All his time was put in in extra hours. I am informed that several nights he worked all night.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. I understand that Mr. Pugh's present employment is really with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. IRELAND. Yes; I am so informed.

Mr. GARD. And this is a proposition to pay him for extra hours in outside work in connection with the work on the Naval Affairs bill?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman said that he had saved $100,000,000.

Mr. IRELAND. I am simply retailing the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. The gentleman knows that my knowledge of the subject is not sufficient to make such a statement independently.

Mr. GARD. I was wondering if the gentleman could advise me if he was selected, because of saving this $100,000,000, by the majority leader in order to help him save a billion?

Mr. IRELAND. I hope you will not hold me responsible for the expressions of the majority leader. That would be a presumptuous assumption to which I dare not aspire. I have a hard enough time in assuming responsibility for my own onion patch.

Mr. PARRISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. I will.

Mr. PARRISH. Is it not a fact that the Naval Affairs Committee was unfortunate in losing their experienced clerk, in that he was taken away by the Appropriations Committee, and that was the reason they found themselves in the unusual dilemma in which they did?

Mr. IRELAND. I am sorry I neglected to state that. That is true, I am sure.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman give me five minutes on this resolution?

Mr. IRELAND. There is no reason for desultory talk on this matter. I move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes on this resolution?

Mr. IRELAND. I move the previous question.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, just a moment. I have asked the gentleman if he would yield me five minutes on this resolution. I oppose it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish to be heard in opposition to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yield me five minutes. By doing so you will save 30 minutes.

Mr. IRELAND. All right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not see how the gentleman can yield after he has moved the previous question.

Mr. BLANTON. He withdrew it.

Mr. WALSH. He has not withdrawn it.

Mr. IRELAND. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. IRELAND. Have I the right to yield after the previous question has been ordered?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has. He can withdraw his request.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has not withdrawn it.

The SPEAKER. It has not been voted on.

Mr. WALSH. It has not been voted on nor withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair assumed that by his withholding it, the gentleman wished to withdraw it. The gentleman did not?

Mr. IRELAND. I withdraw it and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, my talk is going to be more than desultory. I admit that under the Republican régime any talk in this House against any kind of a proposal to appropriate money is, to the Republican Members, desultory. Any speech made here in an attempt to economize and save public money is to them desultory.

I will admit that; but on behalf of 110,000,000 tax-paying people of this Nation I want to call attention to this farce that is going on here now. The Naval Affairs Committee is given a clerk, Mr. William A. Coffin, at $2,500 a year, who also draws a bonus of $240 additional. That clerk is presumed to know what he is presumed to do with regard to his duties on that committee when he is employed. If he does not know how to perform his duties the committee chairman should not have employed him. In addition to this committee clerk, paid $2,740 per annum out of the people's money, the Naval Affairs Committee is given an assistant clerk, Mr. Frank A. Byron, at $1,500, who also draws a $240 bonus. And this Naval Affairs Committee also has a janitor, William H. Carter, who is paid $1,000 per annum, and who in addition to his salary draws a bonus of $240 a year. These three employees are presumed to know how to perform their duties, and if they do not know them the committee made a mistake in appointing them on that committee and in placing them on the Government roll. And yet with all of these facts before the committee, forsooth, because neither the clerk nor the assistant clerk knows how to attend to the duties they are presumed to perform, they call in another Government employee, who is already getting $3,000 per annum from the Appropriations Committee, but paid by the Government of the United States, and now propose to pay him an additional $1,000 for a little extra work; and he, although he is presumed in return for that salary to give his service to this Government, does a little extra work for the Naval Affairs Committee while that committee has a bill before it, and we are called upon by reason of those facts to give him an extra $1,000.

The distinguished chairman of this Committee on Accounts [Mr. IRELAND], who I know at heart to be an economist, yet has to do lots of things that he does not want to do—and he knows it—because they are pushed over on him. As a good Member of this Congress and as an economist he does not like to do a lot of things that he does.

He knows he has to give us the reasons for it, and he comes in here and says this committee clerk, a humble employee of the Government, has saved this Nation $100,000,000. That claim is just about as reasonable and has just as much basis for it as the claim of our great majority leader that he is going to save this Government a billion dollars in appropriations during this Congress. I know he would do it. If it was just left to his view and my view he would be able to do it. If you would just put your great majority leader [Mr. MONDELL] and your chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GOOD] and myself together and give us full authority, that trio would save the Government a billion dollars. But it is not left to us, unfortunately. It is not left to the real economists. These influences that want to spend Government money simply overwhelm the chairman of the Committee on Accounts. They overwhelm the steering committee. They overwhelm the majority leader. They overwhelm the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and they bring in here every other day a proposition to spend extra money, and Members seemingly have to vote for it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 5.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is a dirty trick.

Mr. BLANTON. You come outside and say that, sir; I will convince you that it is not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. KEARNS. Does the gentleman think it fair under all the conditions that——

The SPEAKER. No quorum is present. No business can be transacted without a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has announced that no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

DRAWING OF IRRIGATED HOMESTEAD LANDS.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a short letter from some ex-service men in Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a short letter from some ex-service men. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the letter about?

Mr. REAVIS. The letter relates to certain rules of the Interior Department with reference to filing on lands. I will state that there were two filings in the State of Wyoming recently, one at Torrington and one at Powell. The Interior Department operated under an old rule requiring a certified check to cover the water rental for three years. The rule of the department, as I understand from this letter, is that the certified check must be cashed. The filings at Powell, Wyo., were made immediately after the filings at Torrington. The result was that the money represented by the certified checks could not be returned to these men in time to be of use for the filing at Powell, and consequently they were deprived of the opportunity of filing at the Powell drawing. The request of the letter is that the Secretary of the Interior, in filings hereafter, make an exception to this rule so far as ex-service men are concerned, and return their certified checks immediately after the filing is complete. Most of these boys had practically nothing except the money represented by the certified checks, and when they could not get their money back in time they were deprived of filing at the second drawing.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this an irrigation scheme?

Mr. REAVIS. It has nothing to do with the irrigation scheme, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri, but is merely with reference to getting the money represented by these certified checks back into the hands of the boys without delay.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

HOTEL ROME,
Omaha, Nebr., March 24, 1920.

Hon. C. F. REAVIS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have been delegated by the executive committee of the Douglas Post, American Legion, to bring to the attention of the Nebraska congressional Members complaints and suggestions of ex-service men in regard to drawings of irrigated homestead lands.

The very large number of applicants from among ex-service men warrant, we believe, attention and consideration.

In the recent drawings held at Torrington, Wyo., there were 80 farms, totaling 5,000 acres, thrown open for drawing. Each application had to be accompanied with a cash deposit of $5.10 for each acre of irrigable land, which was to cover the first three years of water rental, amounting in the case of an 80-acre farm to $408. It is a fact that most ex-service men do not have that amount of cash available, and are therefore unable to apply for these farms, no matter how much they may desire to do so. There were 40 applicants for each farm, and although $25,500 covered the first three years' water rental on the entire 5,000 acres, yet there was actually deposited by ex-service men over $1,000,000. We know as a matter of fact that many more men would have filed had not this unnecessary advance deposit been required.

Certified checks deposited on drawings at Torrington on March 5 were not returned in time to be used on land drawings at Powell, Wyo. This was probably due to departmental order requiring cashing of these checks. There surely is no good reason why certified bank checks can not be returned direct. Where there were over 40 applicants for each farm at Torrington there were less than 10 for those at Powell, probably due largely to this delay.

In connection with future irrigated land drawings the following suggestions are offered:

1. That the rules of the Department of the Interior be changed, if possible, so that all ex-service men desiring to may apply for irrigated homesteads without depositing the three years' advance water rental before the drawings, such water rental to be paid by the successful applicant at the time of filing.

2. In connection with soldiers' land-aid bills being now considered it is suggested that the advance water-rental payment be eliminated and in addition long-time loans made with which to finance farming.

3. That legislation be enacted granting long-time loans to be used for improvements and financing of farming both dry and irrigated homesteads by ex-service men.

Yours, very truly,

WM. E. KAVAN,
Chairman Homestead Committee,
Douglas Post, American Legion.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, H. R. 13266, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to correct a ruling which he made on Saturday. While the bill was being read on Saturday afternoon the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] made a point of order against the language "statistical clerk, $1,800," on page 8, line 19, which point of order the Chair sustained. Later on the Chair learned that there is a law authorizing additional clerical hire such as this, and the Chair desires now to change his ruling and to overrule the point of order.

Mr. GARD. When the debate arose on Saturday I understood the Chair to say that the statement sought to be presented by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] was too late.

The CHAIRMAN. It was too late because the point of no quorum had been made, and no business was in order.

Mr. GARD. Is it now intended to allow the gentleman from Minnesota to offer his authority?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has looked up the authority and has discovered that he made a mistake. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Street-cleaning division: Superintendent, $3,000; assistant superintendent, $1,800; chief clerk, $1,400; stenographer and clerk, $1,000; clerks—2 at $1,200 each, 1 $1,100, 1 $1,000, 2 at $720 each; chief inspector, $1,300; inspectors—4 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,100 each; foreman of repairs, $1,200; foremen—1 $1,300, 4 at $1,200 each, 8 at $1,100 each, 1 $1,000, 1 $900; assistant foremen—3 at $900 each, 2 at $720 each; messenger and driver, $600; in all, $44,180.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, in connection with this paragraph there have been very slight increases, I understand, to help meet the present high cost of living here in the city of Washington especially. In that connection and on that subject I want to read the following advertisement that appeared in last week's Burnet Bulletin, published in Burnet, Tex., as follows:

City market price list: Loin steak, 35 cents; round steak, 30 cents; chuck steak, 25 cents; roast, 30 cents; brisket roast, 20 cents; rib, 18 cents; barbecue, 25 cents.

Of course, these prices are by the pound. This is the price list for beef advertised by the city market in Burnet, Burnet County, Tex. If these prices can prevail in Burnet, Tex., where they raise beef, it ought to be very easy for us to ascertain how much improper profit there is on this same class of beef in the city of Washington, in New York, Chicago, in Memphis, Tenn., and at Atlanta, Ga., by figuring the freight rates in that connection.

This ought to demonstrate to us that there is an improper profit when in Washington to-day, if you go to buy a loin steak of the best variety, it will cost you 60 cents a pound, when in Burnet it is advertised for sale for 35 cents a pound, almost half of what it is in Washington. And yet, in and around this city, throughout the country, in the rural precincts, there is much meat raised which can be raised almost as cheaply as it can be around Burnet, Tex. Many animals are slaughtered in and around Washington, D. C., which are raised within 15 miles of Washington.

The question is how long are we going to allow this meat profiteering to continue to exist. The Agriculture Committee has been giving their time and attention for months to an investigation of this question. I do hope that the Agriculture Committee will find some means of properly controlling this one great item in the cost of living—the meat question—because it is absolutely impossible for the workingman to live without meat. He must have meat in order to exist when he is performing his daily labor. It is a question which is not easy, but can be solved, and I hope the Agricultural Department will take proper action. [Applause.]

Free Public Library, including Takoma Park branch: Librarian, $4,000; assistant librarian, $2,000; chief circulating department, $1,760; director of children's work, $1,600; director of reference work, $1,500; children's librarian, $1,200; supervisor of school work, $1,200; librarian's secretary, $1,000; Takoma Park branch librarian, $1,200; chiefs of divisions—order and accessions $1,200, industrial $1,200; reference librarian, $1,200; chief, catalogue department, $1,400; assistants—1 $1,200; 1 in charge of periodicals $1,200, 8 at $1,000 each, 7 (including 1 for the Takoma Park branch) at $900 each, 6 (including 1 for Takoma Park branch) at $780 each; copyist, $780; classifier, $1,000; shelf lister, $1,120; cataloguers—1 $960, 1 $900, 2 at $780 each; stenographers and typewriters—1 $1,100, 1 $1,000; attendants—1 $900, 11 at $780 each; collator, $780; 4 messengers, at $720 each; 10 pages, at $420 each; 4 janitors, at $720 each, 1 of whom shall act as night watchman; janitor of Takoma Park branch, $660; engineer, $1,300; fireman, $720; workman, $600; library guard, $720; 2 cloakroom attendants, at $360 each; 6 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $76,640.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that there has been a very general and somewhat uniform increase of salaries of library employees in this paragraph. I should like to ask the chairman the reason for it. Is it going to apply to the library employees alone, or is it the intent of the District Committee that the salaries of the other employees of the District shall be equalized?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. In answer to the gentleman I will say that this is the public library and not the Congressional Library.

Mr. TILSON. I so understand.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I and many members of the committee have considered that the pay of the employees of this library was too small, and, in fact, below the average pay of the employees throughout the District.

Mr. TILSON. Is it the idea to raise these salaries so as to make them more nearly uniform with the other employees of the District?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; and I will state that these raises are for 61 different salaries, and the total cost is only $8,080. It is very moderate. We have tried to equalize them the best we could.

Mr. TILSON. I recognize the fact that these salaries are unusually small.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; they are small, and our committee tried to keep things down as much as possible. In that connection I wish to say that the full committee and the subcommittee have tried to keep down salaries as much as possible, but they want to raise these salaries somewhat in the library.

Mr. TILSON. These employees will get the $240 bonus in addition while it lasts.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; but I want to say that some of these employees only get a salary of $640 or $720, and that can not be considered, even with a bonus, very large.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for motor vehicles, $36,400. All of said motor vehicles and all other motor vehicles provided for in this act and all horse-drawn carriages and buggies owned by the District of Columbia shall be used only for purposes directly pertaining to the public services of said District, and shall be under the direction and control of the commissioners, who may from time to time alter or change the assignment for use thereof or direct the joint or interchangeable use of any of the same by officials and employees of the District: Provided, That no automobile shall be acquired hereunder, by purchase or exchange, at a cost, including the value of a vehicle exchanged, exceeding $1,500 for one seating four or more persons and $1,200 for one seating less than four persons.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether in connection with the use of automobiles by officials of the District of Columbia any consideration has been given to the manner in which automobiles have been transferred from the War Department to the various other departments of the Government service. I realize that the District of Columbia, in a sense, is a little different from a transfer to the Agricultural Department, but if there is such a tremendous surplus of automobiles, as we have been informed, on hand in the War Department, why is not there a chance to save a few thousand dollars by transferring some of them to the District of Columbia?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is a provision in the bill instructing the commissioners to purchase automobiles and other things from the surplus fund. The gentleman knows that when they purchase them from the surplus the money goes back into the Treasury of the United States under the head of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. TREADWAY. On page 13, line 14 of the bill, there is an authorization for the purchase of six new automobiles.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They are not new; there is only one or two new; they are going to be purchased out of the surplus.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman says there is a provision in the bill which will take care of that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Telephones may be maintained in the residences of the superintendent of the water department, sanitary engineer, chief inspector of the street-cleaning division, assistant superintendent of the street-cleaning division, inspector of plumbing, secretary of the Board of Charities, health officer, assistant health officer, chief of the bureau of preventable diseases, chief engineer of the fire department, superintendent of police, electrical inspector in charge of the fire-alarm system, one fire-alarm operator, and two fire-alarm repair men, under appropriations contained in this act. The commissioners may connect any or all of these telephones to either the system of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. or the telephone system maintained by the District of Columbia, as in their judgment may be most economical to the District.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the necessity for this legislation?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. As I understand, this is put in for the purpose of installation of private telephones or telephones in private houses at public expense. It has been in the bill for some time. It may or may not be subject to a point of order. If the gentleman is disposed to make it, I will not argue it very much.

Mr. WALSH. I can not see how this prevents the putting a private telephone in a house at public expense. It looks to me as though it would entail an expense.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The clerk to the committee informs me that there is a general law preventing it, and this permits it under certain conditions. That is what I am informed the law is. I have never read the law; the item has been in the bill for some time, and I have taken it for granted that this was the law.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman says that this permits it without public expense, but the language of the authorization says that they can connect these phones to either of these systems which, in their judgment, would be most economical for the District.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman will note, this refers to employees apparently, as, for instance, the chief inspector of the street cleaning division, the assistant superintendent of the street cleaning division, and so on. This is so they may be in touch with the department at all times, when, if they had to put them in and were not compelled to they might be out of touch with the commissioners and the department many, many times a day when it is absolutely necessary to get in touch with them. That is one of the reasons.

Mr. WALSH. Then it does entail an expense?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Oh, yes.

Mr. WALSH. And the commissioners select the system and the method which they think is the most economical?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is what they do.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the reservation of the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase and maintenance, hire of livery, of means of transportation for the coroner's office and the morgue, jurors' fees, witness fees, removal of deceased persons, making autopsies, ice, disinfectants, telephone service, and other necessary supplies for the morgue, and the necessary expenses of holding inquests, including stenographic services in taking testimony, and photographing unidentified bodies, $7,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman if there is not a grammatical error in the first line of this paragraph. Should not the word "of" be "or"?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "of" and insert the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 6, strike out the word "of" before the word "means" and insert in lieu thereof the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For advertising notice of taxes in arrears July 1, 1920, as required to be given by act of March 19, 1890, to be reimbursed by a charge of 50 cents for each lot or piece of property advertised, $4,000.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. PLATT: Page 16, after line 24, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"For enforcement of game and fish laws, including expense of feeding birds following snowstorms, $100."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, this little item used to be in the bill—$100 for enforcing the game laws. Why the committee should economize to the extent of $100 in this respect I can not tell.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state to the gentleman that the item was not in the bill, so far as feeding birds is concerned.

Mr. PLATT. That part of it may not have been in.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would say to the gentleman that the people who were before us on this hearing, I believe, said they had never used any part of this money, and that is why the committee struck it out. They had no occasion to use the money for any purpose.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly the game laws should be enforced in the District. There is quite a large covey of quail in the District, and a little of this money—$30 or $40—could be used in feeding birds after the heavy snowstorms. If they do not need to use it, of course, they will not use it. It is a small matter and nothing is saved to amount to anything by leaving it out.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any game left in the District of Columbia outside of possibly a game of poker?

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman would be surprised to know that there are inside of the District of Columbia, by actual count, some 600 quail, and I may be putting that too low, for it may be 6,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Has there been a count of the wild game in the District?

Mr. PLATT. Every once in a while they are shot and sold in the market. I have known people who come down here from New York from time to time and buy quail which they can not buy in New York. Quail are not migratory birds, so that they do not come under the migratory bird law. They are here, and they stay here unless killed in some way.

Mr. BLANTON. In the State where I live they are to an extent migratory, because when storms do away with them in a few years that same territory that has had no quail soon will have plenty of quail.

Mr. PLATT. They are not migratory in the sense of going away in the winter and coming back in the summer. They fly around a bit, but they stay in one neighborhood all of the while, generally speaking. If all of the quail in one neighborhood are killed it would be quite a time before any would get back there, because they do not go from one part of the country to another.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is the gentleman able to inform the House what birds are found in the District of Columbia?

Mr. PLATT. That is a pretty large question. I believe the Audubon Society makes up a list of about 180 or 190 birds that are found in the District of Columbia or flying through the District. I have counted up a list of over a hundred myself.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What birds would be here in the wintertime?

Mr. PLATT. There are about 25 or 30 species of birds here in the winter all of the time. The cardinals, the red birds which you see, are here all winter. They do not migrate. There are several varieties of sparrows besides the house sparrow or the English sparrow—song sparrows and field sparrows—then there are blue jays——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. What is the gentleman's idea with reference to feeding these birds during the snow storms?

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman knows that once in a while there is an ice storm which locks up all of the food on the ground, and the birds can not get at anything. It sometimes kills thousands of them. The police here have been looking after these birds more or less, and through private contributions have sometimes been feeding them.

This item has been in the bill for enforcing the game laws, and if they get the use of a little of it the police could feed the birds at a very little expense and it would be a considerable gain, and it seems to me it is something we might as well do as not.

Mr. WALSH. I did not know but that the item was prompted by the great increase in the cost of living which also affected the birds here, and this would help supply some food for them. I will withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his reservation of the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will withdraw mine.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say a word in justification of the action of the committee, and to say that we have carried this item for some time and none of it has been expended, and the commissioners contend that it is not necessary to expend it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. PLATT) there were—ayes 13, noes 15.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For carrying out the provisions of the act approved March 1, 1899, entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove dangerous or unsafe buildings and parts thereof, and for other purposes," to pay members of the board of survey provided for therein, other than the inspector of buildings, at a compensation of not to exceed $10 for each survey, and to pay the cost of making safe or removing such buildings upon the refusal or neglect of the owners so to do, the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for this purpose for the fiscal year 1913 is reappropriated for the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice this item has to do with the removal of dangerous and unsafe buildings and parts thereof. I wish to call the attention of the House to what may not be altogether an unsafe building in the District of Columbia, but a very unfair one. I refer to the permit granted to the Terminal Taxicab Co. to maintain and construct a garage at the Union Station. That permit was granted in 1913 and is what has been designated by the Subcommittee on the District of Columbia in the hearing on the bill now before it as "a blue-sky garage." It does not exist in point of fact, but simply gives the Terminal Taxicab Co. privileges which are not granted to the ordinary person looking for customers for hire as taxicab drivers do at the Union Station. It is another example of the very unfortunate condition of affairs arising from the deeding of valuable property to a private company by Congress or the District authorities, wherein it has established as a distinct line the curb this side of the depot several yards from the actual line of the Union Depot, and they rent that space in any way they see fit for certain purposes. It is in fact a public space and ought to be so regarded. I commend whoever has the enforcement of this regulation for the removal of dangerous buildings to take up that question of the removal of the permit to construct a garage at the Union Station under the blue sky. This permit has never been exercised other than to secure a monopoly for the Terminal Taxicab Co. at that point, from which the public is excluded and where the public is treated in the manner designated in the words of Mr. Vanderbilt, that being in such strong language that I would not desire to cause it to be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. BRIGGS. How does the Terminal Taxicab Co. happen to get this privilege which is not extended to other people?

Mr. TREADWAY. I have seen the permit to which I have referred for the construction of the garage at that point and it came up in the testimony before this subcommittee that if a person drove up to the front of the Union Station or drove inside of this open-air garage therefore he was liable to trespass. It is an unfortunate condition, but directly, to answer the question of the gentleman from Texas, I do not know how they got such power, but for one I am going some day to find out.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, although I find myself in hearty accord with the gentleman. We are indebted to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] for such enlightenment which he has given us on quite a number of occasions. Almost monthly for some extended period of time we have been regaled here by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts on the proposition that our rights and the rights of the whole people of the United States have been taken away by this taxicab monopoly down at the Union Station, and I agree with him, but he is a member of the distinguished majority party in charge absolutely of the legislation here in the House. Why, only last Saturday the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] likewise offered a dissertation upon this subject and thought that as a matter of convenience the Union Station at Baltimore offers more consideration to its patrons and the public than at the Terminal Station in Washington.

How long are we going to continue letting that state of affairs exist without taking some proper action to remedy it? I was hopeful that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] would take some action for the remedying of this condition.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment, I want to get through with this and then I will yield. We are the guardians of the affairs of this District. For weeks and weeks the District Committee here, headed by the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], has been working on this District bill of which we are guardians. Surely, if there is any place and opportunity for rectifying this trouble it was through this committee and in this particular measure which is now before this committee. If it requires new legislation, the Committee on Rules could have done, just like it did the other day, bring in a rule making the legislation in order to remedy the situation and let the people of the District of Columbia and the people of the United States who come regularly through this Union Station have their rights. I will now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman asked me what I was trying to do to remedy the situation. I would be glad to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BLANTON. Do it in the gentleman's own time and not in my time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Very good.

Mr. BLANTON. Because my time is limited. I approve of what the gentleman has done. I am with him, and I will vote for any proper measure which he will bring in here. In addition to some of the colleagues on his side, I am sure some of the colleagues on this side in sufficient number to pass a proper piece of legislation will help him out on it. I hope he will get the floor and offer to give some immediate relief.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. TREADWAY. At the end of line 11, page 17.

Amendment by Mr. TREADWAY: Line 11, page 17, at end of line 11, insert:

"That the property in the District of Columbia known as the Union Station is hereby declared to be a public utility and subject to all laws, rules, and regulations applicable to public utilities in the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 2. Section 2 of Public 122, an act to provide for a Union Station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved February 3, 1903, is hereby amended in the fourth paragraph thereof by striking out all of said paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"'And for the purposes of said passenger station and terminal, said Terminal Co. is hereby fully authorized and empowered to retain the ownership of such portion of the above-described area as may be used for the railroad tracks of terminals or for the purposes of a station thereon, and that such other land as above described in this section is by this act returned to the ownership of the District of Columbia and hereby becomes subject to all regulations under the Government of the District of Columbia as is applicable to other sections of the city.'

"SEC. 3. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia or any District employees are expressly prohibited from granting to the Terminal Co., or any other corporation, partnership, or individual, any license or permit for the establishment, maintenance, or construction of any garage, building for storage of automobiles, taxicabs, sight-seeing busses or other conveyances; any permit or license heretofore granted is hereby expressly repealed and nullified."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is subject to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I would like to speak on it, but if the gentleman desires to make a point of order I will not do so.

The CHAIRMAN. It is clearly subject to a point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by transposing the words "approved March 1, 1899," in lines 1 and 2, page 17, to the end of line 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: Page 17, lines 1 and 2, transpose the words "approved March 1, 1899," to the end of line 4, page 17.

Mr. WALSH. This is the usual way of quoting other acts, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. So far as I am concerned, I will consent to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Northwest: For paving Harvard Street, Georgia Avenue to Fifth Street, 24 feet wide, $8,400.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment by Mr. OVERSTREET: Page 23, line 4, after the figures "$8,400," insert "northwest: For paving Meridian Place, Sixteenth Street to Brown Street, 24 feet wide, $3,000."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a few remarks concerning this amendment.

I am a member of the District of Columbia Committee, and the people in the neighborhood where this proposed paving is to be done requested me to go before the Subcommittee on Appropriations and ask that an appropriation be carried in the bill for paving this street.

I saw the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], the chairman of the subcommittee, and asked him to go out to that neighborhood in order to look at this street that the citizens out there desire to have paved. He replied that he did not have the time at the moment, but suggested that I see Mr. Kutz, the engineer, and one of the commissioners of the District of Columbia. Mr. Kutz submitted an estimate showing that the cost of this paving would be only $3,000, and I intended to go before the subcommittee with this estimate and ask that an item be inserted in the bill carrying this appropriation for the purpose of paving the remainder of Meridian Place. However, when I went to Mr. DAVIS, the chairman of the subcommittee, he informed me that the bill was about completed and that the committee was ready to report it. I went over the proposed work with him and with Mr. SISSON and one or two other members of the committee, and Mr. DAVIS informed me that he would make no objection to the amendment, and I trust that the members of the committee will vote for it, as the paving is badly needed.

I live out in that neighborhood and have had occasion to see this particular part of the street that the citizens desire to have paved. And I will state to the members of the committee that the balance of Meridian Place has been paved, and this is the end of it, lying between Sixteenth Street and Brown Street, about 100 yards in length and 24 feet wide. On one side of this street is the new apartment house that has been recently built by Harry Wardman, and on the other side there are several nice residences that are just being built, facing Sixteenth Street. And the work is very necessary in that neighborhood. Meridian Place is a very rough, cobblestone street, and is badly in need of being paved. I trust the members of the committee will agree to the amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Has this street ever been paved?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No, sir. It has some rough stones in it, but it has never been paved. There is no sidewalk on either side. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that Mr. Kutz stated he had authority to put down sidewalks, and that will be done, but he has no authority, unless the House gives him authority, to pave the street.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] if the street paving done in the District is paid for by special assessment or special taxation?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The whole of the street? I will state to the gentleman what I understand the assessment permit work is: The resident or owner of property along a street paves one-quarter of the width of the street on each side. That would be one-half of the street. The balance, or the center of the street being one-half, is paid for out of District and Federal funds. Provided, however, a street railway runs through that street, with two tracks upon it, it paves and takes care of the street between tracks and for 2 feet on either side of the outside rails. That is the condition of the law, I think, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Take the pending amendment, proposing to appropriate $3,000 for the paving of Meridian Place for a short distance, which has never been paved. If that money is appropriated now, to be paid out of the Federal Treasury, will the property be assessed to pay back the money?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. As I say, the residents on each side of the street will pay for one-quarter of the width, and those two combined will make one-half. That is reimbursed and goes into the Treasury. Assume the street is 40 feet wide——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Let us assume it is to be paved 24 feet wide, according to this amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. One-quarter of the width of that street would be assessed against the property owners on either side.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, the gentleman says, "One-fourth of the width." I do not know what that means. Let me ask the gentleman a question, to get it clearly in my own mind.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I was trying to give the gentleman information.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand. That is the reason why I wanted to ask another question, to understand better. Does that mean one-fourth of the cost of paving the street?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. One-fourth of the width of the street; and, of course, that means one-fourth of the cost.

Now, if the gentleman will allow me to illustrate, I will gladly do so. Assume that the roadway of the street is 40 feet in width, as is the case with many of the streets. That street is to be paved. We appropriate in the District bill the estimated cost of that paving. In the first instance, that is paid out of the District and Federal revenues. When the matter is finally adjusted the property owners on either side of that street pay one-fourth of the cost of that improvement; both sides would make it one-half. The middle of the street, or one-half of it, comes out of the Treasury. That is the condition.

Now, this being a narrower street, in my judgment the same rule would apply. One-fourth on each side, and the balance of it in the middle coming from the Federal or District Treasury.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I remember when the legislation was enacted.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; the Borland law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not remember specifically the provision about it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit the statement that was made by the commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. OVERSTREET].

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word. I remember having some conversation with the gentleman from Georgia concerning the street, and he has introduced an amendment. I think he perhaps went a little further than I intended he should understand when he stated that I said that I would make no objection. I do not propose individually to make objection now, but I wish to say to the members of the committee as follows: The commissioners estimated for many, many more streets than this committee or this subcommittee has reported to the House. The sum total of all of their estimates was $87,000. The committee spent two days and more in looking over all of the projects suggested by the commissioners; in doing so we selected those which we thought needed the improvement the most. Many, many projects—in fact all the projects that they suggested in their estimates, and many more which they showed us which they had not suggested—certainly needed repair in the District of Columbia; they rode with us and we would discuss every proposition as we came to it, as to the advisability of improving this or omitting that. We did not play favorites, but we tried to seek out and improve the property that needed it the most. That is what we did, and we cut down the estimates of the commissioners from $877,000 to $495,600.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is speaking about improving the property. What property?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I said we cut down the estimates from $877,000 to $495,600.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman said they sought to improve the property that needed it most.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Improve the streets with reference to the property alongside of it.

Again, here is a proposition that your committee took into consideration: Very frequently we found a street that needed improvement very badly, but upon investigation we found that the street was not all built up on either side. It was partially built up on one side or partially on the other. Hence, while we did not make a hard-and-fast rule that the street should be completely built up on both sides, yet we endeavored with the money at our command, as we thought, to improve the streets that would assist the most people living adjacent to the streets and the streets needing the work. Hence we cut down, as I said, the estimates of the appropriation, although we were very liberal.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. As I understand, the gentleman's committee made a personal inspection of these projects?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Every one of them.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Every one that you allowed?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; every one that we allowed, and perhaps 40 or 50 that we did not allow. This committee worked hard, if I say it myself, to discover the most economical and practicable way to expend the money of this Government.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. In last year's bill quite a number of streets were appropriated for. Have those streets been paved?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not all as yet; but nearly all of them are under contract, and on some of them the work is now progressing. We also examined those on these trips to see how far they had progressed.

Mr. TILSON. I notice Euclid Street from University Place to Columbia Road was appropriated for to the extent of $33,000 last year. Euclid Street is now almost impassable in that locality, and there is no sign of its being paved.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not wish to censure the commissioners. They have been pretty busy. But certainly you can not censure Congress, because Congress has appropriated the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want either to make points of order or raise objections to improvements that I think ought to be made in the city of Washington. That has been my course ever since I have been on this committee, and I am going to continue along that line. I do not want to set my individual judgment up against that of the Congress, and now in this case I am going to do as I told my friend I would do when he interviewed me. I said, "I will raise no positive objection to that. We will listen to your statement; and I for one will leave it to the members of this committee to decide as they think proper." And that is what I am going to do in this particular case.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, one moment. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. That is virtually what I understood the gentleman from Minnesota to state to me. I want the Members of the House to understand the same thing. I would like to ask the gentleman this question in addition: Does he not remember that I went to him some two or three weeks ago and asked him to go out and see this street?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is true.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The chairman replied that he was so busy that he could not take the time; but he said, "Go ahead and get your estimate made and submit it to our committee." I went before the commissioner, Col. Kutz, and he made the estimate that I hold in my hand. I intended to go before the subcommittee, as I said in the beginning of my remarks, but the subcommittee had then finished the bill and it was too late. Now, I have come before the House and explained the matter as fully to the House as I could have done to the committee. This street should be paved, because it is the end of Meridian Place. The balance of it has been paved, and this part should be paved.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs—Streets, avenues, and alleys: For current work of repairs of streets, avenues, and alleys, including resurfacing and repairs to asphalt pavements with the same or other not inferior material, and including the maintenance of motor vehicles, and including an allowance of not to exceed $30 per month for an automobile for use for official purposes, $575,000. This appropriation shall be available for repairing pavements of street railways when necessary; the amounts thus expended shall be collected from such railroad companies as provided by section 5 of "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878, and shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation for the fiscal year in which they are collected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question for information. As I understand it, this $495,600 provided for in this bill for street improvements was put in the bill by the committee upon the assumption that the new taxation provision would become a law. That was the case, was it not?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. In helping to draw the bill I have assumed that all the provisions which we have put in it would become law. Otherwise I would not have assisted in putting them in.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee having acted upon that assumption, suppose that when this bill goes to the Senate our friends at the other end of the Capitol see fit to lower the new taxing provision, possibly putting it back to 1½ per cent, and then suppose they hold this bill up for months and months until possibly we are forced through our conferees to accept their action, as has been done sometimes heretofore. Then would the gentleman be in favor of still expending $495,600 on new street improvements, with the tax rate put back to 1½ per cent, in which case much of this expense would be paid by the people of the United States?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say to the gentleman that I would prefer to have the tax rate remain as it is provided in the bill; but I will say further that I am simply the servant of the House, and whatever the House directs me to do I am going to do. If I am a conferee I am going to stand by the House bill until the House of Representatives instructs me to the contrary. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. That is all I wanted to know.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, the District of Columbia has become well known as a haven, a place where men who loathe just taxation may find discriminating relief, a condition of advantage inducing tens of thousands to claim Washington as their homes; naturally they object to changing the main reason which brought them here. There are others here—and they are in the majority—who are proud to do their full duty as real Americans by paying a fair share of cost to conduct the best Government on earth. Big as is our country, there is not room for special privilege anywhere. The right kind of citizens do not want it and are determined that the other kind will not get it. This committee deserves highest commendation for courage which brings here a bill seeking solely to equalize the burden by just taxation. Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress should earnestly support this measure. Citizens of Washington will set the proud example to all world cities by willingness to fully share just taxation in building and maintaining our Capital City with superlative beauty.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, what is the necessity for this provision:

Including an allowance of not to exceed $30 per month for an automobile for use for official purposes—

When we have just authorized the purchase of six new machines? Is this for some member of the commission or some employee who has a machine and are they going to pay him $30 a month for the use of it?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There has been for some time and there is now in this bill an established, uniform amount of $30 a month for maintenance and upkeep of machines owned and officially used by inspectors, and so forth, connected with the District government. They have come before us and asked us to raise that rate, saying it was not sufficient, but owing to a streak of economy we have held them down to $30 a month. They claim that is not sufficient. If the gentleman will look at the District of Columbia appropriation bill for a number of years back he will find that that has been the uniform amount, regardless of the price of gasoline, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH. That does not answer the question I asked. Is this for some employee who owns a car and uses it and gets $30 a month for the use of it?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. He is entitled to the use of a car, and when he uses his own he gets $30 a month for its maintenance and upkeep.

Mr. WALSH. Then, what is the use of buying new machines?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Because I do not suppose that any considerable number of the employees have money sufficient to buy their own cars, and they must use them under the direction of the commission or they can not hold their jobs and do their work.

Mr. WALSH. They will soon get money enough if we are paying at the rate of $30 a month for them. This does not say for maintenance. It says—

An allowance of not to exceed $30 per month for an automobile for use for official purposes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say to the gentleman that it is cheaper to do this where a man owns his car than it is for the District itself to furnish a new car, which will cost between $400 and $500 a year to maintain.

Mr. WALSH. Then, why are we buying six new machines? Why not do it all this way?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We are buying these machines chiefly to supplant horse-drawn vehicles, and we think it is economy to do so. It has been demonstrated to our committee that it is economy to do away with horse-drawn vehicles; that is, it has been demonstrated to our satisfaction. I do not know whether it has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the gentleman from Massachusetts or not.

Mr. WALSH. I have not seen the evidence which was presented to the gentleman's committee.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I know it. The gentleman was not present at the hearings. Where an employee owns a machine, and it is necessary for him to have the use of a machine for official purposes, it is cheaper to pay him $30 a month than to have the Government own it and pay $400 or $500 a year for maintenance.

Mr. WALSH. This costs $360 a year.

I should like to ask the gentleman the further question as to what is the meaning of the language—

This appropriation shall be available for repairing pavements of street railways when necessary; the amounts thus expended shall be collected from such railroad companies as provided by section 5 of "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878, and shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation for the fiscal year in which they are collected.

Does that mean that when the street railway refuses to make these repairs the commissioners can go on and do it?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; they can, and charge it up to the street railway.

Mr. WALSH. And collect it?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. That is what this language is for. I will say that the street railway people of Washington are pretty agreeable gentlemen and they always comply with the requests of the commissioners without being forced to do so.

Mr. WALSH. They ought to be very agreeable. They get everything they ask for from the Public Utilities Commission. They have got it thus far and they give the poorest service that is given in any city of the same size in this country and get a higher rate of fare. They ought to be very agreeable, because they have their own sweet way.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. "Shake not thy gory locks at me."

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman made the statement in exculpation of the street railways.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. Because we provide here for repairing these pavements when they fail or refuse to do it, as if they were very considerate of the people of the District.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Do I understand that the committee are giving additional consideration to the street car companies in Washington, more than is now given them?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so, although the gentleman's language might be construed that way.

Mr. BEE. I just wondered when we were going to have any relief from the street car companies' exactions.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs to suburban roads: For current work of repairs to suburban roads and suburban streets, including maintenance of motor vehicles and the purchase or exchange of three light motor vehicles with truck bodies, in lieu of three motor vehicles owned by the District of Columbia, at a total cost not to exceed $1,800, $250,000.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Page 25, line 12, after the figures $1,800 insert the following: "And including repairs to Bladensburg Road from Fifteenth and H Streets NE. to the District line, at a total cost not to exceed $51,100; and including Alabama Avenue from Pennsylvania Avenue to Ridge Road and Bowen Road, between Ridge Road and the District line, at a total cost not to exceed $21,000; and including Central Avenue from Bennings Road to the District line, at a total cost not to exceed $39,000; and including Thirty-eighth Street SE., between Bowen and Suitland Roads, at a total cost not to exceed $9,000."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I am asking here for an appropriation for the improvement of the District roads in the suburban sections of the District of Columbia which lead into the Maryland roads in the fifth congressional district, which I have the honor to represent. I believe that every Member of Congress knows what a fine road system we have in the State of Maryland. We have appropriated in Maryland upward of $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 for macadam roads which are used by District motorists and Members of Congress. The roads that lead from Washington to the District line to my district have not been touched for years. I want to convince you gentlemen that these roads leading into our magnificent Maryland roads are a disgrace to the District of Columbia and to the Nation. We have spent here a large sum of money repairing streets, but nothing is done for the suburban roads. I believe in the District of Columbia and the Capital of the Nation we should have more beautiful suburban roads than in any other place in the country. I have always believed that our National Capital should be the most beautiful city in the world.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUDD. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. This appropriation on line 12 provides, as the gentleman knows, for an appropriation of $250,000. Now, what increased amount is made necessary if the gentleman's amendment is adopted?

Mr. MUDD. There are four projects mentioned in my amendment, which will make a total of $120,000.

Mr. GARD. That would be added to the $250,000?

Mr. MUDD. That is for the general maintenance of these roads; no great improvement will be made. We can economize by repairing the roads now.

Mr. GARD. But the gentleman is adding these projects. Has he taken any of them up before the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. MUDD. I appeared before the Appropriations Committee and put these cases before that committee. Commissioner Brownlow was present at the hearing, and approved of the matters which I am advocating. The committee, however, in the final hearing overlooked the improvements, presumably because there was not sufficient money, but now that the tax is to be raised I see no reason why these roads should not be repaired.

The road beginning at Fifteenth and H Streets NE. runs to the District line near Bladensburg, and from thence on to Baltimore City. This road has not been repaired for many years, and in fact it is almost impassable in wintertime. The amount covering the resurfacing of the particular section of road is $51,000, according to the estimates of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. This is the beginning of what is known as the Lincoln Highway, which is supposed some of these days to stretch across the country. Just beyond the District line will begin the famous Annapolis highway, which is now in the process of construction, and will be a direct road from Washington City to Annapolis, known as the national-defense highway.

The second item in my amendment is an estimate of $21,000 for the resurfacing and macadamizing of the road leading just beyond Pensylvania Avenue, at the point of intersection of Pennsylvania Avenue extended and Alabama Avenue, for the distance of just over a mile over Alabama Avenue, Bowen Road, and Ridge Road to the District line, connecting with the State road from that point to Upper Marlboro and Annapolis. This road is used daily by thousands of machine operators, farmers, and truck gardeners from southern Maryland, and officials of the Navy Department, who come and go from Washington City to our great institution, the Naval Academy, at Annapolis. Of all of the roads for which I am asking improvements, this is the worst. An appropriation for its improvement has never been made, either by the commissioners or by Congress. It is an ordinary gravel road, and now and then the commissioners spend a few dollars in dragging it, causing it in the wintertime to become in such a miserable condition as hardly to permit passage. This road should be macadamized, and the people of southern Maryland and Washington motorists should be allowed to travel over this section of the District upon a modern macadamized road of the same character and substance as the Maryland road into which it leads.

The third item, for which I am asking $39,000, is an unfinished section of road on Central Avenue which runs from Fifteenth and H Streets NE. to Capitol Heights, just over the District line, connecting with the State road from that point to sections of southern Maryland. Capitol Heights is a thickly settled community and a very pretty suburb. The District of Columbia has made considerable improvement in roads leading to this community, but from the point at Bennings Road to Capitol Heights there remains a mile which has never been touched, and this is practically impassable in the wintertime. I therefore recommend to you gentlemen that this section of road should be repaired with macadam, so that the improvements in this section will have been finally completed.

The last item is $9,000 for the construction of a quarter of a mile of road from Alabama Avenue, near the point of intersection of Pennsylvania Avenue extended to Suitland Road. This will cost the Government very little, and will afford great advantages to residents of southern Maryland, who will be saved nearly half of the distance from Suitland to Washington City. As it is, these residents of Maryland are obliged to come to Washington with their truck products through a roundabout course from Branch Avenue, on either side of which is a deep ravine, which is very precipitous and dangerous for travel in the wintertime. It is a much-needed improvement, and will perfect the system of highways in this locality, affording great convenience for thousands of motor owners who come into the city of Washington daily.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that the Government can expend ample appropriations for these improvements. We can save money for the Government in the long run, and I believe that my contention is fair that the city of Washington should improve its highways, especially those that communicate with our splendid Maryland roads, which are second to none in the United States.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, if I have added up the figures of these projects correctly—there is one of $39,000, one of $9,000, one of $51,000, and one of $21,000—they make a total of $120,000. That is in addition to the $250,000 carried in the bill. We went to visit one project which, as was represented to us, would cost about $1,000 to shorten the distance in coming into Washington. The record of the hearings shows that they thought it would cost even less than $1,000, but I notice that the decision of the commissioners estimates it at $9,000. When the gentleman presented it he said that it would cost only about two or three hundred dollars.

The subcommittee before which these items were laid went to visit each item asked for by the District Commissioners. The District Commissioners do not in their estimate recommend these improvements covered by the proposed amendments. So the gentleman is asking Congress to improve to the extent of $120,000 projects he is interested in when there are a number of other streets and suburban roads throughout the entire District that the District Commissioners think more important and we had to leave these out. It will be unwise for this committee just upon the request of the interested Member to adopt this amendment.

Mr. MUDD. They do not need them any more than they do this.

Mr. SISSON. That may be true, but other gentlemen would say the same of these other roads. I commend the gentleman's zeal. This is for the purpose of connecting the District of Columbia up with his district in Maryland and is more for the benefit of his district than that of the property owners in the District of Columbia. I should have no objection, because the committee is somewhat familiar with these roads and especially the one to shorten the distance into Pennsylvania Avenue, but I think the committee would make a very great mistake to include the $39,000 and the $21,000 items without the subcommittee or any member of the subcommittee having investigated them and without the District Commissioners ever having estimated for them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Did the subcommittee visit any of these roads recently?

Mr. SISSON. We visited every road that was estimated for by the District Commissioners.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I thought the gentleman said that these were not estimated for.

Mr. SISSON. These were not in any estimate presented to our committee as needing improvements.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. So the subcommittee had no occasion to look into it?

Mr. SISSON. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was going to ask if the subcommittee did not find that they could recognize absolutely the line between the District of Columbia and Maryland on any road that passes into Maryland, by finding good pavement in Maryland and rough pavement in the District?

Mr. SISSON. The committee, from the testimony, understood that the road that intersects with the Bowen Road from Anacostia Flats was in very bad shape, but we went over to it and found it was pretty smooth, its condition greatly exaggerated. And, by the way, there is no contention now as to the improvement of that road, but this is for the purpose of connecting another road up with the end of this avenue so that they could come directly to town and save quite a distance. That was the estimate that I understood the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] was to submit to the District Commissioners, which we were assured would cost very much less than $1,000. It turns out now to be $9,000.

Mr. MUDD. Did the subcommittee visit the Baltimore Road; that is, the Washington city end, from Fifteenth and H Streets to the District line?

Mr. SISSON. We did not go to the District line, as I recall.

Mr. MUDD. Did not the gentleman notice that that road was very inferior to the Maryland road?

Mr. SISSON. I want to say to the gentleman that the Maryland road, as a rule, is better than most of the roads in most of the States that I have been in.

Mr. MUDD. During the war the motor trucks tore those roads to pieces from Washington to Baltimore. Maryland has spent about $80,000 on the Maryland part of that road and the city of Washington end of it has not been touched.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. I think what the gentleman says is true with reference to these roads being injured by the War Department activities, but that is a matter that the District ought not to be burdened with, and it ought not to be in this bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the War Department ruined these roads that run out of the District into Maryland, and we require the State of Maryland to repair those portions of the road in Maryland, how can we say that the District and the Government together should not repair that portion of the road in the District?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know that those roads within the District have been destroyed. This road that the gentleman has in mind is not the road that is so bad. The one I am speaking of now was not used by the War Department at all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know many of the roads by name, although I travel frequently over them.

Mr. SISSON. I will tell the gentleman this: If he will investigate the needs and the necessities of the streets in the various sections throughout the District, he will find that the committee and the District Commissioners have endeavored, in so far as the money available will allow, to take care of the streets. If you improve under this plan some of the roads and pave them as the gentleman desires, under the law of the District of Columbia——

Mr. MUDD. But we do not ask that they be paved. We ask that they be macadamized; put in as good shape as our Maryland roads.

Mr. SISSON. It will amount almost to confiscation of the property owners on either side that is unimproved, and some of it is just farm land.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course that is not what the gentleman is asking.

Mr. SISSON. He is asking for an amount of money to macadamize the road. I think I know what he is asking for.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He is asking for an addition to the appropriation for suburban roads.

Mr. MUDD. And all of these roads connect with Maryland roads.

Mr. SISSON. I understand the difference between a suburban road and a street. It is only in name, and I think that ought to be eliminated, because the growth of the city is such that the suburban roads are streets.

Mr. MUDD. I am asking particularly for an improvement to the Baltimore Pike and the Annapolis Pike. The first item is the Bladensburg Road, $51,000. That road is in miserable condition and full of holes. The next item is Alabama Avenue, from Pennsylvania Avenue to Ridge Road, and Bowen Road, between Ridge Road and the District line, that leads to Marlboro and Annapolis. That is a gravel road, and it has never been touched.

Mr. SISSON. How much is that?

Mr. MUDD. Twenty-one thousand dollars. Let us discuss these two items.

Mr. SISSON. What I am at a loss to know is how can this city give its assent to the improvement of these roads and say to the Members of Congress, as they do in respect to these other roads that we have here, that they should be segregated out of this $250,000 and should be made special items.

Mr. MUDD. The roads in the other section of the city are already improved—macadamized. It is this section that has been neglected for many years.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that statement is fair.

Mr. MUDD. I think it is pretty accurate.

Mr. SISSON. Because there are many portions of the suburban roads where that is not true.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. About two years ago I saw a truck load of coal go through the pavement in this city down on F Street, just like it would go through a sheet of ice.

Mr. SISSON. That does not add any light on this.

Mr. KNUTSON. That would seem to indicate that there has been a good deal of graft in the road building of this city.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know that that charge can be directed against the officials with any degree of justification. I think the Army engineer in charge of the work is a man of honesty and integrity. If the gentleman knew Col. Kutz, I think he would not say that. I hold no brief for him, but I believe him to be honest.

Mr. KNUTSON. Who prepared the specifications?

Mr. SISSON. Col. Kutz prepared them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman think the engineer who prepared specifications for roads that were so constructed that they would not hold up a truck load of coal is competent?

Mr. SISSON. Let me explain to the gentleman. I am not an expert on roads, but you will frequently find that however thick you may make the covering on a road there is seepage or there may be peculiarly wet spots, where wet weather gets in underneath, and the support of the road gives way.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would not the sewers take care of the seepage?

Mr. SISSON. Sometimes they do and sometimes they do not.

Mr. KNUTSON. How deep are the sewers laid in this city?

Mr. SISSON. There is no absolutely perfect system of sewers anywhere.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Now that the people from Washington no longer make very frequent trips to Baltimore, is there any great necessity for the spending of this amount of money?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know. The gentleman can speak from his own experience; I have not had any along that line.

Mr. MUUD. Alabama Avenue in particular has nothing but gravel. It is no better than a gravel country road.

Mr. SISSON. I am explaining my attitude. I do not blame the gentleman for making an effort to have this particular portion of the city improved, but I do say this without hesitation, that I think Congress would make a great mistake to expend this money at this time without having more accurate information. It should have the recommendation of those men who are called on to spend the money.

Mr. MUDD. What further information does the gentleman want than mere observation? The subcommittee has been to see it themselves.

Mr. SISSON. That was a year or two ago.

Mr. MUDD. I want to say this to the gentleman in conclusion, that my district is in the peninsula between the Chesapeake Bay, the Potomac, with the Patuxent between, and other tributaries. It is visited every day by the people of Washington and by people going to and from the summer resorts of this beautiful section of Maryland. I think that those roads ought to measure up, at least in appearance, with our Maryland roads. The residents of the city of Washington get the full benefit of our Maryland roads and use them constantly.

Mr. SISSON. The total amount for suburban roads, which covers an enormous area of the city of Washington, is $250,000.

Mr. MUDD. Yes; and we get out of that $250,000 a few carloads of gravel.

Mr. SISSON. That is true. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. SISSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state what the point of order is?

Mr. SISSON. The point of order is against the item with reference to suburban roads which has been passed and no effort made to increase that amount. It is a separate and distinct item with reference to suburban roads. I am not saying this amendment would not have been in order if it had been offered to increase the $250,000 by that amount, but that item has been passed and we are carrying an item here for the repair of suburban roads. The gentleman wants to put in another item——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is certainly in order to appropriate in this bill specifically for the improvement of streets. The bill carries a great many items of that sort—specific items. The paragraph under consideration is repair of suburban roads. That provision appropriates $250,000. Now, in a paragraph for the improvement of suburban roads it is certainly in order to include an item for an additional amount that is desired for specific roads or to provide that any portion of this total sum shall be used for the improvement of specific roads. The whole theory of the bill is based upon the point of Congress making appropriations for the improvement of these roads. I do not see how it can be held that the amendment is subject to the point of order. It certainly is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that what the gentleman from Illinois has stated is the fact and that this amendment is in order and overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes appear to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON and Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 20, noes 5.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman demands tellers. Seventeen gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MUDD. Inasmuch as the amount has been increased by $120,000, I move, on page 25, line 12, to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$370,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The Clerk will be authorized to correct the totals without this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 12, strike out "$250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$370,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Highway Bridge across Potomac River: Draw operators—2 at $1,020 each, 2 at $720 each; 4 watchmen, at $720 each; labor, $2,000; lighting, power, and miscellaneous supplies, and expenses of every kind, necessarily incident to the operation and maintenance of the bridge and approaches, $10,500; painting the floor, beams, stringers, and plates under the roadway of the bridge, $10,000; in all, $28,860.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word only for the purpose of getting some information. Comparatively a few years ago the Highway Bridge was built at a cost of more than a million dollars. Of that amount the United States paid half and the District of Columbia half. The act authorizing the construction of the bridge provided that the street car company shall pay one-half of a cent for each passenger carried over the bridge. In years gone by in this way a very large sum of money was realized annually. I entertain no doubt that I am accurately advised that during the last two years nothing whatever has been collected from the street car companies on this account. In addition to that, I can say that during at least May, June, July, August, September, and October I passed over that bridge twice a day, once in the morning and once in the afternoon, and at no time did I see anybody counting the passengers on the street cars passing over the bridge. Upon many occasions I took pains to notice, and saw that they were not counted. Now, I would like to know whether or not the committee in providing for the maintenance of this bridge discovered the authority by which the railroad company was absolved from the payment of this money, and whether or not they undertook to ascertain why passengers on the street cars who cross this bridge are not being counted?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am sorry to say there is a divided authority. The commissioners have to collect the tax, and the bridge is under the control of the Chief of Engineers. I will say that the estimated amount that they will receive this coming year is $9,000, but I am unable at this time to hunt up the amount collected last year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Heretofore they have been collecting about $16,000 each year on that account. Now nothing, so I am informed, has been collected for two years.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is the duty of the commissioners to collect it; I know that. Whether they have done it or not I could not say.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Should not the money be collected and used for the maintenance of the bridge instead of allowing the use of the bridge to the railway company free?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It ought to be. They estimated $9,000 for the coming year from taxes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I was inquiring of the chairman of the committee if in the hearings they got upon that subject at all?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There was not a word said on that subject in the hearings. It is a new proposition to me. I had not heard of it before. Perhaps my friend from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has heard of it, but I have not.

Mr. SISSON. I will say, so far as I am personally concerned, I have never made any specific inquiry into the matter. I did not even look at the report; they filed their report, and I did not look into that specifically for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not they reported anything collected. They have done it heretofore, I know, but I do not know whether they are doing it now or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have no reason to doubt that my information on the subject is correct, that for two years they have collected nothing on this account, and they have abandoned altogether the endeavor to ascertain the amount. I have seen, as I just said, a great number of street cars pass over that bridge, and I have never yet seen the passengers in one of them counted. So, the District Commissioners can not possibly know how much money is due them on that account.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Has the gentleman any information why they abandoned collecting it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have not.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to find out.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I did not know but that the committee in making an appropriation for the maintenance of the bridge had also gone into the subject of revenues from the bridge.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Possibly the committee is slack in it. But the matter was never called to my attention before.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is appropriated $28,860 by this bill for the maintenance of the bridge. More than that amount of money, I am informed, is now owing by the street car companies to the District of Columbia and to the United States for the use of the bridge.

Mr. SISSON. I will state, Mr. Chairman, for the gentleman's benefit, that since I have been a member of the subcommittee on appropriations we have not made a specific inquiry in regard to that item and many other items. We simply ascertain the amount of revenue that may be collected from various sources. They have many privilege licenses and other licenses, and we do not inquire directly into them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SISSON. We make inquiries as to the amount of money that is available for purposes of appropriation. It is not a part of the function of the committee to ascertain and go into all these matters of the collection of the revenue. However, if our attention had been called to the matter we would have been glad to look into it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It occurred to me that when you made appropriation for the maintenance of the bridge you might have inquired into the revenue due to the District from that source, which amount would have been sufficient to keep the bridge in repair.

The Clerk read as follows:

The jurisdiction and control of the Highway Bridge across the Potomac River shall be vested in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia on and after July 1, 1920.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. What consideration prompted the transfer of this jurisdiction of these hard-working gentlemen from the War Department?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would say that in the opinion of the committee we thought all these bridges ought to be under one control; and, as I understand it, all the bridges are under control now of the Commissioners of the District, except this particular Highway Bridge.

Mr. WALSH. How many bridges are under the control of the commissioners that are over navigable waters?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. All over navigable waters, except the Rock Creek Bridge. There is the Chain Bridge, the Aqueduct Bridge, and others.

Mr. WALSH. And that is the only reason for change of jurisdiction?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They made a statement to the committee that impressed the committee with the idea that the bridges ought to be under one head.

Mr. WALSH. What does the War Department say about it?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not think they were consulted on the subject.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. May I ask a question? I understand that all the bridges over the Potomac and the Anacostia Rivers, except the Highway Bridge, are under the control of the District Commissioners?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I believe so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does that account for the fact that the Highway Bridge is the only bridge in the whole bunch that is fit to cross?

Mr. WALSH. That is probably the reason.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve it at the request of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about the manner in which the bridge is managed—some phases of it, at least. I cross it every day. The railway bridge is just to the east of it, probably 150 or 200 yards distant. A boat coming from down the river comes within sight of the railway bridge, but it does not open, but the Highway Bridge does open and keeps street cars and automobiles and vehicles of every character held up until the bridge is lined with them on both sides of the draw. This occurs before the railway bridge opens, taking, in all, from 7 to 10 minutes. On the other hand, a boat that just rounds the corner up near the Lincoln Memorial comes in sight, the bridge opens, and remains open until the boat goes through. This would not be so bad if it did not occur during the morning hours when there are school children and employees in the bureaus of Washington on board the street cars coming into town. Those street cars stand there in line waiting an unnecessary length of time—five, seven, or more minutes—watiting for the leisurely tugboat with a load of sand coming up or an empty flat going down. Whoever is managing the bridge now ignores totally a provision in one of the appropriation bills, made, I think, in 1917, providing that the smokestacks of all these boats, tugs, or whatever they are, should be cut down so that they can go under the bridge. And they could do that. There is no question about it. Many children have been late in going to school on that account, and I have seen hundreds of employees in the departments made late at their work, all because of the time lost in the stop at the bridge waiting for this tug, or whatever it is, to go under the bridge. Whether the War Deparment or the District Commissioners are at fault I do not know, but somebody should take note of the fact that the railway bridge opens and closes without half the interruption of traffic that occurs in the opening of the Highway Bridge.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, the gentleman understands that the Secretary of War now has control of this bridge, and the District Commissioners have nothing to do with it. This is the only bridge that has not passed under the control of the District Commissioners. All were formerly under the Secretary of War. Now, they are all controlled by the District Commissioners except this one. You would not get any remedy, in my judgment, unless the District Commissioners and those who are interested in the convenience of the people of Washington should have control of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Secretary of War should not be wholly oblivious of the fact that the bridge should be conducted in the interest of the public instead of the interest of these tugboats, just as the railway bridge is.

Mr. SISSON. Col. Ridley is the man who has charge. The Secretary of War has many other duties to perform.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then Col. Ridley should be advised of the abuse on the part of those who have the control of the bridge.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I want to remind the gentleman from Kansas that there is a statute now in effect, the design of which, I understand, was to require boats on the river to have smokestacks work on hinges, as in the case of boats passing under bridges at Chicago and London and other large cities. I do not recall the exact scope of that statute, but perhaps it contains authority that could be exercised to prevent the very abuse that the gentleman speaks of. That statute was enacted, I think, at least 10 years ago. To what extent the tugs have been put within the provisions of the statute and are now using depressible smokestacks I am not advised.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I recall the statute to which the gentleman from Virginia refers, and also I recall that a limitation was placed on the appropriation—I think in 1917, although I may be mistaken about that—providing that the appropriations should not be available if these tugs did not comply with the law by limiting the height of their smokestacks.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think the gentleman is exactly right that something ought to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains it. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Dust prevention, cleaning, and snow removal: For dust prevention, sweeping, and cleaning streets, avenues, alleys, and suburban streets, under the immediate direction of the commissioners, and for cleaning snow and ice from streets, sidewalks, crosswalks, and gutters in the discretion of the commissioners, including services and purchase and maintenance of equipment, rent of storage rooms; maintenance and repairs of stables; hire, purchase, and maintenance of horses; hire, purchase, maintenance, and repair of wagons, harness, and other equipment; allowance to inspectors and foremen for maintenance of horses and vehicles or motor vehicles used in the performance of official duties, not to exceed for each inspector or foreman $25 per month for a horse-drawn vehicle, $30 per month for an automobile, and $15 per month for a motor cycle; purchase, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled vehicles necessary in cleaning streets; purchase, maintenance, and repair of bicycles; and necessary incidental expenses, $375,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the legislative Committee on the District of Columbia in regard to this item as to whether there is any legislation requiring the cleaning of snow from sidewalks by the owners of the premises?

Mr. MAPES. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut that there is no bill before the District Committee that I know of. If he has in mind a bill or will introduce one, the committee will be glad to consider it.

Mr. TILSON. All the cities that I have had experience with have such a requirement of law.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I understand there is a law of that kind now.

Mr. TILSON. Then there is certainly a very general disregard of the law the effect of which we have all felt during the last winter.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is not an unusual thing for the laws to be violated, as the gentleman knows, even in the Capital.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the sidewalks and streets are public property, and that the courts have held that you can not fine a man for not going out and cleaning the streets, belonging to the public and not belonging to himself? It is plain on its face that Congress could not enact a law providing, for example, that the gentleman from Connecticut should be fined a thousand dollars for not going out here and cleaning the snow from the Plaza, that he has nothing to do with any more than any other citizen.

Mr. TILSON. I should surely be fined in my own city for neglect to clean off the snow from my sidewalk within a certain specified time after the snow had fallen.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman might not be fined, but he would be threatened. Legislatures and city councils have been very free in enacting such laws and ordinances, but the courts have been equally free in declaring them unconstitutional.

Mr. TILSON. Special assessments are levied on property for the improvement of the sidewalk.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But you can not levy a special assessment on a man's property for the removal of snow or ice. I once put a resolution through the city council in Chicago requiring the streets to be sprinkled, but the courts held that it was unconstitutional.

Mr. TILSON. Anyway, the sidewalks ought to be cleared of snow and ice, and if the District does not do it we should compel the owners to do it.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I understand that there is a court decision here—I do not know how late, because I have not investigated it—that prevents the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or prevents the enforcement of the law requiring property owners to clean their sidewalks of snow and ice.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just explained that.

Mr. GARD. I do not know of any court decision in any case except in the District of Columbia, and it may be based upon the peculiar tenure of property here. But it seems to me the instance afforded by the gentleman from Connecticut is very good, that there should be an ordinance here compelling property owners to clean their sidewalks. I think, for one, that an ordinance may be maintained here, because if one falls here on the street and is injured in the city of Washington the liability is not a liability against the District of Columbia entirely. If I stumble on a cellar door or over an obstruction on the sidewalk, the property owner is liable. There is not any authority of law, so far as I know, for saying that the sidewalk is a part of the street, when a man's sidewalk is constructed by himself and he is liable for an obstruction on the walk.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. TILSON. I ask for one additional minute, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. If a man does not clean the ice on the sidewalk in front of his house in the city of Washington, and that ice is allowed to remain there an unreasonable time, and anyone passing over it slips and falls and is injured, does the gentleman question that the property owner would be liable for the injury?

Mr. TILSON. I think he ought to be, but if he can not be held liable under the law as it now stands, then there ought to be a sufficient appropriation made in this bill to take care of it, because the condition of the sidewalks of this city during the last winter was a disgrace to the National Capital. Surely something ought to be done about it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DEMPSEY. As I understand it, the practice is not to subject the property owner to punishment, but for the municipality to clean the sidewalk and charge up the expense to the property owner. That is certainly the system in the city of New York and I think throughout all the New England States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Disposal of city refuse: To enable the commissioners to carry out the provisions of existing law governing the collection and disposal of garbage, dead animals, night soil, and miscellaneous refuse and ashes in the District of Columbia, including inspection and allowance to inspectors for maintenance of horses and vehicles or motor vehicles used in the performance of official duties, not to exceed $25 per month for each inspector for horse-drawn vehicles, $30 per month for automobiles, and $15 per month for motor cycles; fencing of public and private property designated by the commissioners as public dumps; and incidental expenses, $750,000: Provided, That any proceeds received from the disposal of city refuse or garbage shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts: Provided further, That section 9 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and disposal of garbage and miscellaneous refuse for the District of Columbia," approved May 6, 1918, is repealed: Provided further, That this appropriation shall not be available for collecting ashes or miscellaneous refuse from hotels, places of business, large apartment or boarding hous s.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, in line 5, page 29, it is provided:

That section 9 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and disposal of garbage and miscellaneous refuse for the District of Columbia," approved May 6, 1918, is repealed.

I make a point of order against that proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield before he makes his point of order?

Mr. MUDD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. What is section 9 of the act referred to?

Mr. MUDD. Under the existing law the garbage in the District of Columbia is distributed among the different contractors, but the farmers of my district on the other side of the District of Columbia line can come in and carry away the refuse to feed to their hogs. This proviso repeals that law and deprives the farmers of that right. Therefore I shall insist upon the point of order. Since I have been a Representative in Congress this question has been constantly agitated, and there seems to be a disposition upon the part of the District Commissioners to fix the law in such a way as to deprive the farmers of these benefits which they have long enjoyed. I can see no great advantage in the authorities of the District of Columbia taking the exclusive use of the garbage when the farmers of my section are willing and anxious to help them dispose of the same. No greater revenue can be secured by the District of Columbia in depriving the citizens of my district of this right which they have long enjoyed. There are a great number of hog raisers who live on the other side of the District line in my district who are successful and prosperous, and it would be a grave injustice for the District Commissioners to try to impose upon them by an attempt to deprive them of their rights. Mr. Chairman, I shall oppose this effort upon the part of the commissioners, and while I shall be glad to reserve the point of order for the time being I shall insist upon it later. It is a change in existing law and, to my mind, it is clearly subject to a point of order, and at the proper time I shall ask the Chairman to rule. In doing so I conscientiously believe that I am preventing an injustice to the citizens of my section, for whose interests I shall continue to work as long as I continue to be their Representative in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. MUDD. I reserve the point of order out of courtesy to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill is this a proposition to repeal the right that was granted only very recently to the people outside the District to collect garbage and refuse for the purpose of feeding to pigs and poultry? Is this proposition to repeal coupled up with the proposition to have the District Commissioners do this collecting and dispose of the garbage?

Mr. MUDD. It is precisely the intention of the commissioners to take away the farmers' privilege.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will read to the gentleman the law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know what the law is. I just referred to it. It is the law put upon the statute books which authorizes the granting of the right to people to collect garbage, refuse, and so forth, for the purpose of transporting it outside of the District of Columbia to feed the pigs and poultry. What I ask is whether the proposition to repeal that is coupled up with any proposition of the District Commissioners to utilize the garbage in the District?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state to the gentleman he knows that heretofore the garbage has been collected under contract. The Commissioners of the District for various reasons—failure of the contractor, and so forth—are doing it all themselves. The contract is virtually void, and there has been considerable expense to it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is what I want to know about, and I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN]. The District has heretofore had contracts for the collection of garbage. A number of people in Maryland were collecting the garbage at some of the larger apartment houses and hotels and feeding it to hogs and poultry. The District has asked for authority to purchase a garbage plant. What I want to know is whether the prosposition to repeal this act permitting people to collect garbage to feed to pigs and poultry is in order to have the District Commissioners utilize the garbage for the profit of the District?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is exactly the reason. The District had to take over the collection of the garbage by reason of the failure of the contractor, and if the independent outside people were permitted to come in and get the garbage and take it away, they would take only the rich garbage and leave that garbage which is not rich in products that are useful and valuable. They would take only the cream of the garbage, leaving it to the District to collect that which is not rich and from which there is no return. We would have to collect the trashy part of it and not that which is of any value. The city is now collecting that on its own hook. This was intended to make the collection of the garbage in a measure self-sustaining, so that these outside people would not get the rich part of the garbage and leave only the unprofitable part for the District to handle.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I thank the gentleman for the information, which is clear and concise.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

In all, for playgrounds, $84,220, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I do not know of anything more essential to a city than a splendid system of playgrounds, and I am glad to know that Washington is keeping abreast in that respect. I notice that the bill provides pay for only 10 months in the year. Are the playgrounds open for only 10 months? The provision is that the clerk is to be employed not exceeding 10 months, and some others not exceeding 7 months. I wondered if the playgrounds in the city of Washington were closed up any portion of the year.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The limit is 10 months. The other 2 months' service is voluntary.

Mr. BEE. The playgrounds themselves are not closed up.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No.

Mr. BEE. Why do not the appropriations cover the whole year? What is the reason for the city asking for voluntary assistance to carry on the playgrounds the balance of the year? This is an enterprise which may be far-reaching in its consequences.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The city does not ask for voluntary service, but the citizens do it voluntarily. We limit it to 10 months, and, as I say, during the other 2 winter months if anybody wishes to serve voluntarily they can do so.

Mr. BEE. In the very depths of winter the playgrounds are not used?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No.

Mr. BEE. It does not curtail the efficiency or development of the playgrounds for the children in the city?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

Attendance officers: Attendance officers—1 $900, 8 at $800 each; in all, $7,300.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if under this head making provision for attendance officers there is a compulsory law in the District of Columbia?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is.

Mr. BEE. Has the gentleman from Minnesota any information as to the care with which the enforcement is observed—whether there is a strict enforcement?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They endeavor to enforce it strictly.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. I desire to say that I have given a good deal of attention to child labor in the District of Columbia, and I want to say that the law is more honored in the breach than in the observance

Mr. BEE. The gentleman from Minnesota just stated that it was strictly observed. I notice a provision here about child labor, but this provides for eight attendance officers. I want to say, in view of the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, that in my judgment no greater duty can devolve upon a community than the development of its youth and upbuilding the citizens of the future than to beat down the theory that the Government has no responsibility to the children in the way of education. In other words, to take the doctrine that the parents, careless, vicious, or indifferent or unwilling, as the case may be, should have the whole supervision of the question whether or not the children shall be brought into a state of education which will make them useful and valuable citizens in the future. If they can not do it, as I have said before, I would much rather a probation officer, in the strict enforcement of his duty, should take a child to school than to have a policeman thereafter take him to jail. If he is not given an education, the chances are that subsequently he will go to jail.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. My attention was diverted the moment the gentleman from Ohio was talking, and I did not notice exactly what he said. I understand that he said the compulsory attendance law was not complied with.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman from Ohio said that the child-labor law in the District of Columbia was not very strictly enforced.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I was told that the gentleman from Ohio said that the compulsory education law was not enforced.

Mr. GARD. No; I said the child-labor law. Now, I see by the bill that you have eight attendance officers. The gentleman will see that there is only one person appointed, at a salary of $900, to carry out the provisions of the child-labor law.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The policemen of the city attend to that particularly.

Mr. GARD. No; there are only two. The law provides that there shall be two officers in a population of 450,000 people who are supposed to carry out the provisions of the child-labor law. That is so inadequate it does not prove to be of any worth at all. It is idle to suppose that two men could do the duty, assuming that the child-labor law is enforced.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I thought the gentleman was talking about the attendance officers carrying out the compulsory education law. I was going to say to the gentleman that these attendance officers are doing very well. This last year they made 2,784 visits to white schools alone to secure attendance under the child-labor law. So that I think any criticism on the attendance officers would be a little far-fetched, for they have been very busy and did the best they could. The gentleman from Texas can not express in any stronger language than I the desire that all the children shall have a good education. I think we have amply provided for them in this bill, and the officers are performing their duties to the best of their ability.

Mr. BEE. I am certainly pleased to know that. I wanted to know if the compulsory education law was being enforced, and I am glad to know that it is.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for teachers, $2,787,860: Provided, That no part of said appropriation, or any appropriation herein, shall be used for the payment of any teacher to give instruction in the German language, or for the purchase of any books for use in such instruction.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Minnesota what is to be excluded in the way of teaching. It seems to be definitely known that there is a teacher in the Central High School who repeatedly, day after day, teaches the children that this body and the body at the other end of the Capitol are made up of grafters, of second-class men, second-class lawyers. I am not an attorney, so I am not sensitive on that subject. That is taught to the children, preached to the children, day after day. If they undertake to remonstrate the good old lady says, "We will drop the subject, we will not debate it." It is dropped until the next day, when she makes the same sort of a speech, and when they remonstrate she says "We will not debate it, we will drop the subject."

That old lady has been there for years, but whether or not she has been carrying out this program all these years I do not know. But that she has been doing that sort of thing during the fore part of this present school year is a positive fact. I would like to know, while you are making exclusions, if you are not going to exclude that sort of thing?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Along what line?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. There have been exclusions with which I find no fault, but I think it ought to go a little further.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman desires my views along this line, in response to what he has said, I will state them very briefly. I have heard indirectly a rumor of what the gentleman has just now recited. I would suggest to the gentleman that perhaps the Congress is not the place to remedy such a situation.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Congress is providing the money.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is perhaps not the place to seek a remedy. At the present time we have a school board of the District of Columbia, and they are very active gentlemen.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I have read of them in the daily papers.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Furthermore, we have a very active superintendent of schools, Prof. Thurston. At the present time also the school board and the superintendent of schools are having a very active time before a committee of investigation of the United States Senate. If the gentleman wants to take my advice as a lawyer——

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The gentleman was placed as a second-class lawyer.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. He would go over and make complaint to this investigating committee now investigating the school board and the school superintendent. If he is too modest along that line, then I suggest that he go to the school board direct, or possibly to the superintendent. As I say, I have heard of similar rumors, and I agree with the gentleman that something ought to be done, but I hardly think there should be an exclusion clause of that kind put into this appropriation bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment, though again I am forced to state that I find myself heartily in accord with him. The gentleman might have gone further and stated to this working committee and its working chairman that during the past year the school board here entered an order suspending one of the high-school teachers for one week as a penalty for teaching bolshevism in our schools in Washington. That penalty was, in my judgment, as light as could have been imposed for such a charge under the circumstances. Once before I expressed the opinion that she should have been expelled. Instead of this very commendable action of the board being upheld by the people of Washington, a move was immediately started without any very extensive investigation, based solely upon the fact that a teacher belonging to a union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor had been suspended for a week for teaching bolshevism, to have her placed back and to censure the board that entered the order. Through action taken by these unions that board was censured and that board was caused to back up on its stand, eat everything it had done, place the teacher back in good standing, and pay the teacher for the week's salary for which she had been suspended, and she was exalted as a martyr. The people of the District of Columbia through the press were given to understand that a teacher, protected by union organizations here in Washington, could teach with impunity anything from rank bolshevism down, to the youth of the land in the Nation's Capital.

From what I have learned of the attack that has been made on this splendid principal, whose name has been mentioned, Mr. Thurston, who tried to stand for true Americanism, I commend him. I want to say that we should give the school board of Washington and the people of this city to understand that whenever such a matter again comes to the attention of Congress, having a voice in its management, we are not going to permit bolshevism or anything else but true, real Americanism to be taught in the schools of Washington, and that when a teacher is found teaching bolshevism and the school board enters an order to punish him or her, it ought to enter a maximum punishment, and that if it is necessary the Congress, as guardian of the District of Columbia, will uphold them in it. This is a question that we can not afford to mince matters about. It is a question we can not afford to be weak-kneed upon.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso at the bottom of page 36.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 36, line 23, after the figures "$2,787,860," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is immaterial to me whether the committee accepts the amendment. The proviso prohibits the teaching of German in the District schools. The war is over, and the sooner we admit it the more self-respect we will have in after years. It is just as sensible to continue this in this bill as it would be to continue something aimed at the Southern Confederacy at this time. I do not know whether German will be taught or ought to be taught, whether French will be, is, or ought to be taught. I think we ought to begin to wipe out these discriminations when the war is over, as far as legislation is concerned. Of course the committee continued this in the bill because it was inserted heretofore at a time when I think it was proper to insert it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This limitation or proviso, as I understand it, was put on by the Senate. It was not inserted in the bill by the District subcommittee. It has been carried right along ever since.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand; and I think therefore we could well afford to strike it out.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Personally I agree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] and of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] bring up a question that goes right to the very root of the educational system in the United States. It was not an accident that this teacher every day called up the question of the character of the American Congress. There is a propaganda going throughout this country against the American Congress, against its existence, and the teacher in question is using one of the methods of undermining the Congress. This teacher that was suspended for one week simply went one step further than the other teacher by advocating what it is proposed to advocate after the American Congress is disposed of, viz, bolshevism. Instead of suspending that teacher, she should have been discharged entirely. [Applause.] This is not confined to the schools of Washington either. This same thing is going on throughout the country. Bolshevists, socialists, anarchists are given teachers' certificates and they are teaching these things in every State of the Union. College professors of high and low degree are socialists, anarchists, enemies of the Congress, enemies of the Constitution of the United States, enemies of this Government, the best example of republican government the world has yet seen, and they teach these things daily in the colleges of the country. A half-matured socialist from Harvard appeared before one of the committees of the Congress a short time ago and admitted that he was a socialist, admitted that he taught socialism as a teacher in Harvard. Some of them now admit it and in a short time they will be boasting of it. It is time that the Congress, where it has control of teachers' salaries, put a limitation on the payment of the salary, that it should not be employed or used to employ teachers who teach the overthrow or the undermining of the Government of the United States, and every trustee in the colleges and in the schools of the country whose duty it is to employ teachers should see to it that Bolshevists and socialists are not employed to poison the minds of the youth of America. [Applause.]

The American Constitution and system of government are not the results of an accident; they are a creation by great government builders, and we enjoy the result of the wisdom of the ages in representative government. And these people who are teaching socialism and anarchy and the soviet system are undermining in every way they can the Constitution and the Government of the United States, and it is high time that something should be done to stop that teaching in all our schools. [Applause.]

Longevity pay: For longevity pay for director of intermediate instruction, supervising principals, supervisor and assistant supervisor of manual training, principals of normal, high, manual-training high, and junior high schools, the assistant principals of the Central and McKinley Manual Training High Schools, the assistant principal (who shall be dean of girls) of the Central High School, the assistant principal (who shall be dean of girls) of the Dunbar High School, principals of grade manual-training schools, heads of departments, director and assistant director of primary instruction, directors and assistant directors of drawing, physical culture, music, domestic science, domestic art, kindergartens, and penmanship, teachers, clerks, librarians and clerks, and librarians to be paid in strict conformity with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, as amended by the acts approved May 26, 1908, May 18, 1910, and June 26, 1912, $520,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid to any person who, in the opinion of the board of education and the superintendent of schools, has an unsatisfactory efficiency rating.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment. At the end of line 20, page 38, insert "or who shall give instructions tending to undermine the Government of the United States." Strike out the period, insert a comma, and insert that language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: Page 38, line 20, after the word "rating," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the words "or who shall give instruction tending to undermine the Government of the United States."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that anyone could oppose the intent of that which is carried in the amendment of the gentleman, but surely there is no teacher in the public-school system of Washington who is teaching any doctrine which undermines the Government of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has the gentleman read the testimony that is being taken in connection with the school troubles in Washington?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I have read a good deal of the testimony about the Washington schools, and I heard what the gentleman from Washington said a moment ago. I do not regard much of this criticism as serious. Of course, there is always the open season for criticism of the Congress. To say that some pedagogue up here in some school is saying that Members of Congress are grafters or second-class lawyers or something of the kind does not interest me to the extent that I am willing to write affirmative law against it, because I think that kind of a statement amounts to nothing. I am not so sensitive of foolish criticism, and I do not think any of us should be. We can not fail to recognize the difference in honest criticism, to which we all should be subject, and malicious and destructive criticism of those who are undermining the Government, and this is another kind which is just plain foolish.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I want to say I am not sensitive along that line, but it is because I believe it is malicious criticism that I resent it. It is given in the course of instruction in history, and it is given over and over again, and I take it it is not incidental criticism to which nobody objects and in which the entire country indulges more or less. I believe this is a different circumstance entirely.

Mr. GARD. In continuation of my opposition to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washington I would say that it seems to me that the control of teachers is a matter more properly to be left with the board of education than to be brought in here in the House of Representatives or on the floor of the Senate. The board of education and the superintendent of schools have charge of the teachers. They know what these people are teaching; at least it is their business to know what they are teaching. It is not our business in particular, because we can not give the minute detail attention that the superintendent and members of the board of education can give to the teachers in the course of study. Now, I think if we adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Washington we are simply dignifying by legislative act something that amounts to nothing, which I do not believe is permitted as a matter of fact, because I can not believe that in the Capitol City of the Nation there exists any case where there has been open teaching of a doctrine intended to undermine or destroy the principles of the Government of the United States.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. What does the gentleman say in reference to the teacher who was suspended for a week for teaching bolshevism in the schools of Washington?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is the case to which I referred.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. This does not apply only to the case to which I referred.

Mr. GARD. I will say as to that just this, that if a teacher does a thing of that kind there is ample law at this time to suspend or discharge him or her, and there is no reason for attempting to write in legislation or by way of putting upon this bill prematurely an amendment to correct something which may not exist at all. Of course, we all realize that in every school system there may be some instance where an improper teacher is employed, where improper subjects are discussed, where improper teachings are made, but we have a school board——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. I would ask for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARD. The members of the board of education, the superintendent, and the principals of the schools are all in direct authority over the teacher. In the case which the gentleman recites, which seems to me the only case and is about a teacher who was suspended for a week, I would think that that suspension was entirely inadequate, for it seems to me that if the case had been proven satisfactorily that the teacher should have been discharged. But here is the whole case, that authority exists now in the school board and in the superintendent to discharge an offending teacher. To write the amendment of the gentleman from Washington into this appropriation bill for the District of Columbia would, in fact, it seems to me, make uncertain and vague an existing authority.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I will.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Does not the gentleman think that we would insult the whole teaching class to include that sort of provision in the law?

Mr. GARD. No; I would not say that, but it is a reflection. Of course, when you pick out one isolated case, such as the gentleman recited here of a teacher who was suspended, why you can not apply that isolated case to the hundreds of thoroughly efficient and loyal teachers in the city of Washington, because I believe that the District of Columbia has the best public-school system in the United States of America, and it ought to have, as the Capital City and model city of the Nation, as high class and as efficient a school system as possible to get, and I for one am not willing to go on record here of affronting this corps of school-teachers by saying that because one member happens to lapse from the straight path and teach what some one here might call Bolshevism, that we should accuse the whole corps of teachers of being disloyal or un-American when they are not, and that is what the language of the gentleman's amendment would do.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I think this is no more of a reflection on all the teachers than the writing of a criminal statute of any kind is an indictment against all good citizens.

Mr. GARD. This is not a criminal statute.

Mr. MACCRATE. If the amendment is adopted, would it not necessitate additional language to set forth what acts would be considered to undermine the Government? If it is so broad as that it would give unlimited jurisdiction.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman is correct. We are given to a lot of light statements in debate and in speeches; we call things by general terms and names, and when we come down to define them we do not know what they are. Now, whatever the gentleman meant by this amendment, if it came to a practical test I do not know as to what would be called "destructive doctrines," and that is another reason why I am opposed to it.

Mr. MACCRATE. And for that reason it should be referred to the board of education to define the acts that would constitute undermining.

Mr. GARD. It belongs to the jurisdiction of the board of education and the superintendent and principals.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I am rather inclined to the opinion that this amendment would be an unfortunate one. I do not presume there is a man in the House that dislikes socialism or its tendencies more than I do. Personally, I am very much opposed to the teachers' union becoming associated with the American Federation of Labor. I do not suppose anyone would like the teachers to even become associated with the Bankers' Association of America and have the idea of finance imbued in their minds. I think that was a great mistake. I would a great deal rather have some legislation for the purpose of preventing teachers from becoming affiliated with the Federation of Labor, because I do believe such organization would be extremely bad. If they became imbued with the ideas of socialism that imbue some of the labor organizations throughout the United States, unconsciously those views of government would be impressed upon the children.

But the trouble about this provision is that it is so general in its terms that if a Democratic board should happen to pass upon a Republican school-teacher they would say that the teacher ought to go; that she was tending to undermine the Government of the United States. Nor do I believe that language should be quite so broad as that. If the board got to be extremely busy, they could abuse their powers under it. If they were very lax, you would just as well not have written the statute, because they would say, "Oh, well; that does not amount to anything, anyway." And I think at last you have got to trust your school authorities. Now, they have their supervising principals, their boards of trustees, and a principal for each school. I do not think much of the supervising principals—and I would not object to their going out of the bill—10 or 12 men who float superfluously around from schoolroom to schoolroom, and there are so many they can give but little supervision. The principal of each school should do this. As to the instance the gentleman cited, for myself I do not believe there are many such school-teachers in the school system. I do not believe you are going to get anywhere by this sort of legislation. The better idea would be to provide that these teachers' organizations should be for the sole purpose of improving themselves in their line of work by discussing methods. They are proper, but I do think they made a very great mistake when the effort was made—and most of the school-teachers I have talked to in the District of Columbia themselves say a mistake was made—to have them affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That question is entirely aside from this, is it not?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think so. I think it is all mixed up together.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think it is very far removed from the question of teaching the principles of the soviet or of Bolshevism.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know just how far we ought to go in legislation in limiting methods of teaching.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 33 of the bill and offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to go back to page 33 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Let us have the amendment reported first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota: Page 33, line 14, strike out "$3,500" and insert "$4,000" and in the same line strike out "$3,000" and insert "$3,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to return to page 33 for the purpose of offering the amendment just read.

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the amendment?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to explain the amendment.

Mr. GARD. I make the reservation for the purpose of having the gentleman explain it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I believe, and I have just recently consulted my colleagues, that the subcommittee that framed this bill and presented it to the full committee raised everybody's salary who was connected with the public schools except the superintendent and except these two assistant superintendents, and that was a clear oversight on the part of the subcommittee and the attention of the full committee was not called to it. I now ask to have the assistant superintendent, who is getting $3,500, raised to $4,000. He is the assistant superintendent of the white schools. And the other one that I ask to have raised from $3,000 to $3,500 is the assistant superintendent of the colored schools. It does seem to me—in fact, I am satisfied—that the subcommittee would certainly have done this if it had not been an oversight, and I think the full committee would have been just as generous. Therefore I ask that the amendment be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to page 33 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota: Page 33, line 14, strike out "$3,500" and insert "$4,000," and in the same line strike out "$3,000" and insert "$3,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LONGWORTH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. GRONNA, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. GORE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Americanization work: For Americanization work and instruction of foreigners of all ages in both day and night classes, including a principal, who, for 10 months, shall give his full time to this work, at $1,800 per annum, and teachers and janitors of Americanization schools may also be teachers and janitors of the day schools, $12,000.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in line 16 for the purpose of having the chairman of the subcommittee inform us just what is done in this so-called Americanization work, and what is the plan of selection of teachers and of principal who gets this additional compensation, for I assume it is additional compensation, or whether these are specially selected teachers, who only teach this Americanization work and do not teach any other branch?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. These are not new positions at all. This matter has been going on for some years.

Mr. GARD. I understand that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We are simply giving them a little more money to carry on what the committee thinks is very good work.

Mr. GARD. What I want to know is whether this principal is selected from one of the principals of the school system and whether the teachers are selected from the corps of teachers; and if so, who selects them?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The lady is selected from the public schools.

Mr. GARD. Does she have duties in addition to the Americanization work?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. She must devote her whole time to this work.

Mr. GARD. And in regard to the teachers and janitors of Americanization schools, who may also be teachers and janitors of the day schools, $12,000——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Most of these teachers are teachers in the day schools, and this particular work would be done at night.

Mr. GARD. Are they selected for peculiar competency by the superintendent or by the board or by whom?

Mr. SISSON. By the board of education.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. By the board of education and the superintendent.

Mr. GARD. How many of them will there be? How many teachers?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Ten.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think they asked for 10, and we did not give them quite that many. We raised the appropriation of last year $3,000. They asked for $23,000.

Mr. GARD. That takes care of about 10 or 12 people?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; that takes care of 10 or 12 people.

Mr. GARD. And they get this compensation of $1,000 or $1,200 apiece?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The total appropriation is $12,000. There is one at $1,800.

Mr. GARD. These 10 get $1,000 each, in addition to their compensation as teachers?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; there is some janitor service also to come out of this.

Mr. GARD. Yes; but that probably is not of very great consequence.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The estimate here was $2,000.

Mr. GARD. I was making the inquiry because I think this work, if it is carried out in the proper spirit, would be an excellent part of the school work. I was interested to know how it was being done.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think the committee is satisfied from the hearings that the work is being ably done, and the lady in charge of this work is a very excellent teacher.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is this school conducted for the benefit of adults or children?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Both. Most of them are adults.

Mr. BRIGGS. How many are there in the school? What is the average attendance? What is the length of the course of instruction?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They have 9 or 10 different classes at different places.

Mr. BRIGGS. All through the city?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; and in some places the teachers go to the homes and hold these classes in the homes of the people. They collect together 8 or 10 of the neighbors, and have them there.

Mr. BRIGGS. In this instruction that is probably followed do they have a definite course of instruction? I suppose they have.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does this course embrace a knowledge of American history, and the taking out of naturalization papers, and becoming a part of the citizenship of this country, including an understanding of our history and Constitution and traditions?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. They have special classes for teaching the Constitution and everything necessary to qualify them to become American citizens, how to take out their naturalization papers, and so on. Its name indicates what it is; it is Americanization.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does it teach them anything more than to read and write?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It teaches more than that. It teaches them to become American citizens in all ways. If they do not know how to become American citizens they will teach them how to make proper application and the process that must be pursued.

Mr. BRIGGS. It used to be my experience in naturalization matters to see people filing applications for naturalization and professing adherence to the Constitution without their knowing whether the Constitution of the United States was a battleship or a public building or what it was.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not think the gentleman's experience is novel, but this instruction is to overcome what the gentleman is complaining of. In other words, it is to Americanize them before making of them American citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is not this the work that is being carried on quite generally throughout the country at the instigation or by the inspiration of the Bureau of Naturalization?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not the floor.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. GARD. I asked the gentleman from Illinois to yield for a question. Can the gentleman from Illinois inform me how great a population of foreigners we have in the District of Columbia who are receiving instruction in this Americanization?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not able to give that information. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Central High School (new): Engineer, $1,500; 2 assistant engineers, at $1,000 each; 2 electricians, at $1,200 each; 4 firemen, at $720 each; 2 coal passers, at $600 each; janitor, $1,100; 3 assistant janitors, at $900 each; gardener, $840; night watchman, $720; 2 charwomen, at $480 each; 15 laborers, at $600 each; in all, $25,300.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Just to impart a little information that I have received concerning the question which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] asked. The enrollment of foreign-born people in the city of Washington is 24,000, and the membership in the classes that this Americanization work now has actually in existence, conducted with the little money they had before, numbers 524.

Mr. GARD. What does the gentleman mean by "the enrollment of the foreign born"?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is the census of 1910.

Mr. GARD. That is a very small proportion, I should say, in view of a population of 450,000. What I was interested to know about was, in view of the fact that there are no industries here and nothing to call for the coming of those who have lately been in countries over the sea, who come here for working purposes, whether or not there were in fact very many who would take advantage of this very excellent Americanization work.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. As I say, the enrollment now in these Americanization schools is about 600.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of necessary expenses connected with the organization and conducting of community forums and civic centers in school building, including equipment, fixtures, and supplies for lighting and equipping the buildings, payment of janitor service, secretaries, teachers, organizers, and clerks, and employees of the day schools may also be employees of the community forums and civic centers, including maintenance of automobile, $35,000: Provided, That not more than 50 per cent of this sum shall be expended for payment of secretaries, teachers, organizers, and clerks.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I notice in this paragraph you have increased the amount of the appropriation from $25,000 to $35,000, and then increased the percentage that can be used for the employment of secretaries, teachers, organizers, and clerks from 20 to 50 per cent. That would increase the amount used for this purpose from $5,000 to $17,500. I have no doubt it is an appropriate increase. I suppose there is some reason for it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would state to the gentleman that the increase of that 20 per cent was raised to 33⅓ per cent by the deficiency committee. They did that some time ago, and now we have increased the total appropriation to $35,000, and we have increased the percentage to 50 per cent.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the statement of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The chairman of the committee said that the proportion had been increased to 33⅓ per cent by the deficiency act.

Mr. SISSON. Yes. My recollection of the hearing is that the salary roll, which has not been changed, is about $20,600. If I had the hearings they would so show, I think.

Now, I think perhaps the committee made a mistake in not making it enough to take care of the pay roll, because the testimony shows that a good many of these people connected with this work, who give all their time to it, gave several months of their time for nothing rather than permit the work to suffer. We have given all that they asked, but I think they want $20,000, just enough to cover the actual pay rolls, for the actual salaries of the secretaries in the various centers.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Wherever you commence a work of this sort the natural tendency is to increase the pay roll.

Mr. SISSON. There has been no increase in the pay rolls here. They would not have been able with the $25,000 to do the work that they did before. The District Commissioners, as well as the school board, say that they really needed last year $35,000, but these people, by reason of the interest which they have taken in the work, have continued to perform the services virtually for nothing. A great many of them are now working considerably overtime, and they are not complaining at all about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What is the work they do?

Mr. SISSON. That varies. They do this work in nearly all cities throughout the United States. They teach the grown people, as well as the young people, domestic science, dressmaking, trimming hats, and all those things that tend to develop the home economics of the country. In the gentleman's own city of Chicago they have a very extensive organization of this kind, I am informed, as well as in other cities. My understanding is that the city of New York has perhaps taken the lead in this line of work. They spend a great deal of money there on work of this kind, and it is found to be very profitable, because the expense is very small in proportion to the service rendered.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What surprised me was that in the appropriation act of last year $20,000 was appropriated for equipment and only $5,000 for personal services.

Mr. SISSON. That was a mistake.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That seemed very remarkable.

Mr. SISSON. That was really a mistake. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] was on the committee, and I think if he were here he would tell you that there was a misunderstanding about the salaries. What he intended to do, as I understand, was to limit the amount that should be paid in the central office; that is, in the office of the officials who supervise the whole business, but he did not intend that all these people who gave their whole time to this work should receive no pay. For instance, some woman using one of the schools as a center would give her entire time to the work. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] did not intend that she should do it for nothing, but the result was that she was cut off from receiving any salary. But many of them have continued to do the work anyway. I think the amount ought to be 60 per cent instead of 50.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is 50 per cent now.

Mr. SISSON. It ought to be 60 per cent.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is shown in the hearings that the salary roll at the present time is $20,666.67.

Mr. SISSON. That was my recollection about it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And you see that with the $35,000 and the 50 per cent limitation that would not help them out at all.

Mr. SISSON. But 60 per cent will.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Sixty per cent will, and if the gentleman from Mississippi will offer that amendment I will be very glad to accept it.

Mr. SISSON. I offer an amendment to make it 60 per cent instead of 50 per cent.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In line 19, page 47.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SISSON: Page 47, line 19, strike out "50" and insert in lieu thereof "60."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional amount required for an eight-room addition, including an assembly hall, to the Petworth School, $85,000; and the commissioners are hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the construction of s a building at a total cost not exceeding $192,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is a superfluous letter "s" in line 13, which ought to be eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make the typographical correction.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses incident to the enforcement of an act to regulate the sale of milk in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1895; an act relating to the adulteration of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia, approved February 17, 1898; an act to prevent the adulteration of candy in the District of Columbia, approved May 5, 1898; an act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes, approved June 30, 1906, $1,000.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask what this appropriation for $1,000 is for, with special reference to the language on line 16, page 60, where $100 is appropriated for special service in connection with the detection of adulteration of food, including candy and milk, and then follows the appropriation of $1,000 for the detection of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous food, drugs, medicines, and liquors.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The appropriation of $1,000 is under the pure food and drugs act.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This $100 appropriation is where they give little sums of money to individuals who are not known as inspectors to go and purchase certain things. They would not be suspicious of him or that he had anything to do with the enforcement of the law. If it was an inspector that went around they might be cautious.

Mr. GARD. There is considerable agitation and probably unnecessary for the increased purity of milk and milk products, including ice cream, because they are generally used by our people, and the object of my inquiry was whether there was but the $100 appropriation for the service of investigating candy and milk and other food or whether it was also included in what the gentleman from Illinois says is work under the pure-food law.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have a general inspection force that is doing business all the time. I think the provision for that is on page 58 of the bill.

Mr. GARD. Yes; and some provisions on page 61. I did not understand exactly what this small appropriation of $100 was for.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is, as I say, for a little detective fund.

Mr. GARD. You could not get much of a detective for $100.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is to furnish the money to purchase these small articles.

The Clerk read as follows:

Police court: Two judges, at $4,000 each; clerk, $2,200; deputy clerks—1 $1,600, 3 at $1,500 each, 2 at $1,200 each; deputy financial clerk, $1,500; deputy assistant financial clerk, $1,500; probation officer, $1,500; 3 assistant probation officers, at $1,200 each; stenographer, $1,200; 7 bailiffs, at $900 each; deputy marshal, $1,000; janitor, $600; engineer, $900; assistant engineer, $720; fireman, $600; assistant janitor, $300; matron, $600; 4 cleaners, at $360 each; telephone operator, $480; in all, $40,940.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Have the salaries of the police court judges been increased by a special act?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No.

Mr. WALSH. This bill carries an increase for them.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; and also for the municipal court; we have treated them all alike.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the provision in line 4, "2 judges, at $4,000 each."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think, Mr. Chairman, it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to insert "2 judges, at $3,600 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 65, line 4, insert "2 judges, at $3,600 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he knows that the police court made a net profit last year of more than $200,000?

Mr. WALSH. I did not know what the figures were.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And they do more work than any judges in the United States, and, as I say, make a net profit to the District of more than $200,000.

Mr. WALSH. If they do more work, then there must be more lawbreaking here than anywhere else.

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is more lawbreaking, and these men ought to be paid a commensurate salary.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Texas says that they make a net profit for the District. Does that include the cost of the police force?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; only the cost of the court.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The police have to be in operation before the court acts.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; but they do duty for other courts.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But the gentleman puts it on the ground that they are making a profit.

Mr. GARD. What is the source of this great income?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Fines.

The Clerk read as follows:

Municipal court: Five judges, at $4,000 each; clerk, $1,500; 4 assistant clerks, at $1,200 each; clerk and messenger, $840; elevator operator, $600; janitor, $600; charwoman, $240; in all, $28,580.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. This appears to be another increase in the salary of judges from $3,600 to $4,000. Is there any statutory authority for this increase?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I know of none.

Mr. WALSH. It is only a few years ago that we increased the salary of these judges in the municipal court.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. About three years ago, I think.

Mr. WALSH. You are also increasing the salary of the assistant clerk from $1,000 to $1,200.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. From $1,000 to $1,200.

Mr. WALSH. I wonder if we have any profit and loss list to show how much the municipal court turns in.

Mr. BUCHANAN. One hundred thousand dollars. They try from 100 to 125 cases a day.

Mr. WALSH. You gave them the same increase in salary as the police court, and they turned in $200,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is true, but one is more profitable than the other. Both of them are working all of the time, and if they are of any account at all they are worth $4,000 if they bring in that much revenue.

Mr. WALSH. How many of them have resigned recently?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am not informed of that. How many Congressmen have resigned?

Mr. WALSH. I know of two who resigned, though not recently, but within the last few months.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Did they get a better place?

Mr. WALSH. I could not say as to that. I could say that some of the gentlemen who have resigned are certainly entitled to better places.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state to the gentleman that recently by legislation we increased the jurisdiction of this court from $500 to $2,000.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman means that the House did that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. But that has not become a law as yet.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think it has been reported favorably in the Senate—increasing the jurisdiction from $500 to $2,000, which makes them a pretty large court.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. That measure was reported from the committee of which I have the honor to be a humble member, and at the time it was considered the members of the committee stated that there was not any question that it would be made the basis for a demand for increase in the salaries, but the increase comes along before even the law increasing the jurisdiction is on the statute books, and if this is permitted to go, then next year you will have another jump, because they will say that the increase now proposed was given before the jurisdiction was increased and enlarged by the law.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Is that a conclusion of the gentleman or a statement of fact?

Mr. WALSH. I think it is as much a fact as the statement of the gentleman that we had increased the jurisdiction, and a little more so, because we all know, and the gentleman knows, how easy these demands come to Congress for increasing salaries. I wish to state that the committee has done fairly well in standing out against some of these increases, but I do not think we ought to start in increasing salaries of the judges in the District of Columbia, at least at this particular time, and especially at this particular court. They had an increase only two or three years ago. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend by inserting the figures "$3,600" in place of the "$4,000" which was stricked out by the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 66, line 8, after the word "at" insert "$3,600."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMERGENCY FUND.

To be expended only in case of emergency, such as riot, pestilence, public insanitary conditions, calamity by flood or fire or storm, and of like character, and in all cases of emergency not otherwise sufficiently provided for, in the discretion of the commissioners, $8,000: Provided, That in the purchase of all articles provided for in this act no more than the market price shall be paid for any such articles, and all bids for any such articles above the market price shall be rejected and new bids received or purchases made in open market, as may be most economical and advantageous to the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask how much was expended out of this money in the last year?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. About $5,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Five thousand three hundred and eighty-four dollars and thirty-nine cents.

Mr. WALSH. Was that necessitated by riots, pestilence, public insanitary conditions, calamity by floods, fire, or storm? Which of those emergencies occasioned that expenditure?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And all other emergencies of like character.

Mr. WALSH. It came under that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. Probably a good deal came under that.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman know whether any of this was expended on account of the race riots which occurred in Washington?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; I do not.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman happens to have the information, will he tell us what it was expended for? I would like to know out of curiosity whether an appropriation of this sort is reserved for the purpose for which it is appropriated or whether they manage to expend it for something never intended.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state to the gentleman what it was expended for. Selective service act, $3,576.41; health department motor wagon, $394.98; plumbing inspectors' office, $33.67; industrial home school, $798. They now have a balance of $3,145.21.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I thank the gentleman for the information, which was very much what I had expected.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And this unexpended balance has all gone back into the Treasury.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is impossible, I take it, for Congress to make an appropriation intended to be used only in case of emergency and not have the people in authority spend it for something that is not an emergency at all.

Yet we have to provide for emergencies. When we do they spend the money for something they want to spend it for without regard to the purpose for which it was intended.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am glad the gentleman is scolding somebody besides the committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not scolding anybody, I am stating a fact.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state what emergency not otherwise sufficiently provided for in connection with the selective-draft service now occurred during the past fiscal year?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not answer from memory because I have not had occasion to look it up.

Mr. WALSH. Is it in the hearing?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not think it is. I did not ask him about that.

Mr. WALSH. Well, of course, if there was some emergency under the selective-service law for this last fiscal year that required $3,000 of expenditure of the public funds, it seems as though there ought to be some explanation of it in the hearing.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say to the gentleman it covered a part of the period of the war, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. WALSH. I did; how?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The war was not over at that time when part of this money was spent.

Mr. WALSH. Well, we stopped drafting men after November 11, 1918.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. That is not within the last fiscal year.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This is for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. WALSH. I see. This is for the fiscal year 1919.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous expenses: For such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney General for the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and its officers, including the furnishing and collecting of evidence where the United States is or may be a party in interest, including also such expenses other than for personal services as may be authorized by the Attorney General for the court of appeals, District of Columbia, $15,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I believe the time has arrived when we should quit work, and I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 13266, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast committed a mighty task to our hands, and our time is very short. The greatness of our work makes the time seem all the shorter. So we come to Thee, the author of all blessings, the center of all life, the source of all power, and ask Thee to imbue us with that grace and power which will enable us to measure up to God's thought, to fill up the limit of our time as in Thy sight, that in the eventide we may have the blessed satisfaction of having done God's will. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Mr. CURTIS took the chair as Presiding Officer pursuant to the previous order of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CURTIS (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). I present a telegram in the nature of a resolution adopted by the Kansas Live Stock Association, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., March 29, 1920.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The propaganda of the United States Department of Justice, "Save money on meat," is a crime against the live-stock producers of this country. Another act of our Government to penalize the live-stock producers for their response to the call for increased production during the war. Why pick on meat? It is already the cheapest food we have and the only one which is being produced at a loss. Why does not the Department of Justice investigate high cost of sugar, potatoes, flour, cotton, and tobacco? I urge you in the interest of the live-stock producers of Kansas to introduce resolution in Congress condemning this propaganda.

J. H. MERCER,
Secretary Kansas Live Stock Association.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair; at 12 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.). Morning business is closed.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12610, being the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I realize that the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] will, probably, prevail, and I do not desire to object; but before my colleagues leave the Senate for the day I feel that it is my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the bill (S. 3958) to amend section 14 of the Federal reserve act.

As I have previously remarked in this Chamber several times, that bill is urged by the Federal Reserve Board; it is also urged by the Federal Advisory Council, which is composed, as Senators all know, of 12 of the leading bankers of the country.

The provisions of the bill are very simple. We all know that the Federal Reserve System has demonstrated its ability to expand the currency and to expand credits, but the question as to whether it will be equally effective in its effort to deflate credits and the currency is one that must still be answered. We all want the system to succeed; we want it to demonstrate its ability to meet any crisis. The passage of the measure is urged by the Federal Reserve Board as being important at this time to enable the board to exert a wholesome restraint upon the further expansion of credits. It merely provides that the Federal reserve banks, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, may graduate the discount rate upon accommodations extended to member banks when they exceed a certain percentage of their banking capacity or a certain multiple of their stock and surplus; in other words, it enables the Federal reserve banks to establish a normal maximum discount rate for accommodations up to a certain limit, and if any bank goes above that limit a higher rate may be imposed.

It must be evident to my colleagues that if this proposed legislation is to be of any benefit the sooner Congress enacts it the better. I feel it to be my duty to put the responsibility upon the Senate if there is to be any further delay in the consideration of this matter. I do not know that there is any opposition to the bill, and I am going to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he is willing that his bill be temporarily postponed in order that the bill to which I have referred may be considered, provided there is no opposition. Of course, if it occasions debate, I shall not insist upon its consideration at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I indorse everything that has been said by the Senator from Connecticut with reference to the importance of the measure to which he has referred. Judging from what occurred when the bill was before the Banking and Currency Committee, I doubt whether there will be any opposition to it. I appreciate the desire of the Senator from Wyoming to proceed with the appropriation bill now before the Senate, but I think we would be doing a real service to the country if the bill which is presented by the Senator from Connecticut could be taken up and disposed of. I therefore join in the request to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in charge of the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the bill of which I am in charge has been taken up, I may say to the Senator from Connecticut that while I am not particularly familiar with the bill to which he has referred, although I presume I shall support it, if it is a short bill of one sentence, as I understand it is, and will lead to no debate, I shall offer no objection to its present consideration. The bill has now been handed to me, and I shall be glad to give it my earnest support, now if unobjected to, or later when the bill may come up in the regular way.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know to what extent debate will be precipitated upon the bill for which consideration is asked by the Senator from Connecticut. I wish to say that I am in favor of the bill as far as it goes. I think, however, there ought to be greater restrictions put upon the inflation of the currency than even this bill provides.

When the original Federal reserve act was passed I remember making the statement that under the provisions of the law it would be an easy matter to inflate our currency, but there was no provision whatever for deflating it, and that has proven true.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, as a matter of fact there were very many provisions in the Federal reserve act to prevent the inflation of the currency and to occasion deflation of the currency. The Senator from Utah must surely know that, but for the inclusion of the provision in the bill relating to United States bonds as security for loans, now being largely used by speculative borrowers, and but for the further fact that we are now confronted with the extraordinary and almost at that time inconceivable aggregate of $26,000,000,000 of outstanding United States bonds available as security for loans, there would be now no inflation of the currency. So the Senator from Utah is not exactly accurate or fair when he says there were no provisions in the Federal reserve act to guard against the inflation of the currency.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what the Senator says does not disprove anything that I say. I did not say that there was not $26,000,000,000 of obligations of the Government of the United States out. I know it, and if the original act had provided means for the deflation of the currency there would be no necessity of this amendment to it.

I recognize that the mere fact that there are these $26,000,000,000 of Government bonds out among the people has been the principal reason for the inflation of the currency. Nobody has denied that, and perhaps if that obligation had not been incurred there would not have been an inflation of the currency; but it is here, and there is an inflation of our currency, and in order to have it deflated or begin to bring it within reason I say that the bill referred to by the Senator from Connecticut meets the situation in part. As far as it goes, therefore, I am in favor of the bill, but I do think we ought to go even further than that bill proposes.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not insist upon taking up this bill this morning.

There is a great deal of opposition to the bill. The objections to it may not be well founded; nevertheless the people who are honestly opposed to it are entitled to consideration, and they ought to have the opportunity of expressing their views.

I realize that the Senator from Connecticut has been very patient about this matter, but it is one which involves all the leading industries, and especially the productive industries of the country. It is so vital to those industries that I trust the Senator will not undertake to dispose of it during the morning hour, because I will say to him that that can not be done, as it will be the subject of a great deal of discussion.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I did not know that the Senator from North Dakota is opposed to the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. I was not present when the bill was reported out. I had no opportunity to hear the witnesses who testified in favor of the bill; but I have talked to a great many people who are opposed to it from honest motives, and I believe that before we dispose of it they should have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. McLEAN. There may be opposition to the bill, as the Senator from North Dakota suggests, but I do think that a matter of this importance should be considered by the Senate; and while the appropriation bill will have precedence, it ought to be understood that there are other matters that are urgent, and if this bill is to be of any benefit at all it must be considered in the immediate future.

If we are to wait until the present crisis is past before we give the Federal Reserve Board the power which they say is necessary in order to enable them to avoid unpleasant consequences, the fault will be the fault of Congress, and not of the board or of the Federal reserve system.

I deem it to be my duty, as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, to avail myself of every opportunity to call the attention of the Senate to this bill until it is acted upon; and I give notice that as soon as the pending appropriation bill is finished I shall move to have the Senate take up this bill and consider it.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. WARREN. On page 85, in line 7, where we have put two sergeants in place of one, we should have cut one private out of the 54, making 53. I move to amend accordingly.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 12 on page 92.

Mr. WARREN. At that point I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming, on behalf of the committee, offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 92, line 11, after "$4,000," it is proposed to insert "one at $3,000"; and at the end of the same line to strike out "two" and insert "four," so as to read:

Four at $2,400 each.

For temporary employees in the office of the Judge Advocate General, as follows, 2 at $3,000 each, $6,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming what is the purpose of increasing the force of the Judge Advocate General's office at this time, particularly in view of the fact that the Army reorganization bill provides for a reorganization of the entire department?

Mr. WARREN. This is for the office of the Judge Advocate of the Navy, I will say to the Senator, and is in response to a personal appeal of the Secretary of the Navy, after we had concluded the hearings, that we should temporarily allow two extra employees.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did not know it was for the Navy. I thought it was for the Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 14 on page 98, in the items for the Naval Observatory.

Mr. WARREN. The committee acted under a little misapprehension in connection with the Naval Observatory items on account of some additions made by the House committee which were stricken out on points of order, which would hardly apply in the Senate, but which were perfectly good in the House. The committee wishes to make some additions and also a subtraction on page 98, in accordance with the amendment which I now send to the desk.

While I am on my feet I desire to ask that the Secretary may be instructed to correct all totals in accordance with the amendments agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Secretary will state the amendment presented by the Senator from Wyoming.

The READING CLERK. On page 98, line 1, after the word "astronomers," it is proposed to insert "one $3,200"; in line 4, after the word "clerks," to insert "chief, $2,000"; and at the beginning of line 13 to strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The next amendment was, on page 103, line 2, after the word "following," to strike out "2 at $3,000 each, 1 at $2,500, and 6 at $2,000 each," and insert "1, $3,300, 2 at $3,000 each, 1 $2,500, 3 at $2,400 each, 10 at $2,000 each," so as to make the clause read:

The reading of the bill was continued to line 26, on page 125, in the items for office of Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Justice," on page 128, line 15, after the words "chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of buildings," to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$3,500."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to ask the Senator who has the bill in charge why this item was increased from $3,000 to $3,500, and the next item, "assistant chief clerk, $2,000," was reduced $500?

Mr. WARREN. I will say for the information of the Senator that it was the intention of the committee to strike out the item "assisant chief clerk, $2,000" and allow that position to be paid, as now, the full salary from the lump-sum appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I now send to the desk an amendment having the effect I have just stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 128, line 15, strike out "assistant chief clerk, $2,000."

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that that is right. The lady holding this position is drawing $2,500 and is paid from the lump-sum appropriation. I have a letter from the Assistant Attorney General stating that if we strike this item from the bill he will continue to pay the lady holding the position $2,500 from the lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Was there any objection to making it a statutory position and putting the salary at $2,500?

Mr. SMOOT. There was this objection: We shall by this means save $2,000. There is no question that they have money to pay this lady in the lump-sum appropriation, and if it is not paid to her it will be paid to somebody else. So we simply save $2,000 in this way.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection provided the Senator is sure that it will protect the person who is now receiving the $2,500.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator desires I will hand to him the letter from the Assistant Attorney General, in which he says that that will be done.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no reason to question the Senator's statement, but I am interested in seeing that no injustice is done.

Mr. SMOOT. She will receive $2,500, the same salary that she is receiving to-day.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 18 on page 134.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment at that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As in Committee of the Whole, the Senate has not yet finished the consideration of committee amendments. The proposed amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will be retained at the desk until the committee amendments have been disposed of and will then be in order.

Mr. EDGE. Then I understand that individual amendments may be taken up after the completion of the reading of the bill for committee amendments, rather than during that reading?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only committee amendments are in order at this time.

Mr. EDGE. I thought the amendment might be considered now, as we have reached the point where I desire to offer the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that we have already settled that by unanimous consent. If the Senator's amendment were to an amendment of the committee, it would be in order, but if it is not an amendment to an amendment it will not be in order until we have passed through the regular reading of the bill in full.

Mr. EDGE. I will defer offering the amendment until the reading of the bill has been concluded.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The reading was continued to line 18, on page 156, in the item for "Court of appeals, District of Columbia."

Mr. WARREN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 156, line 16. It is a matter which was omitted when we considered the other circuits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 156, line 16, strike out "$3,250" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,250," so as to read:

Court of appeals, District of Columbia: Chief justice, $8,500; 2 associate justices, at $8,500 each; clerk, $4,250, and $250 additional as custodian of the court of appeals building.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. May I ask the chairman of the committee whether there is any modification of the salary schedule of Federal judges under either the bill as it passed the House or as it is proposed to be amended?

Mr. WARREN. No; there is not. Anything of that kind would go to the Committee on the Judiciary and not to the Committee on Appropriations.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 161, line 17, after the word "paragraph," to insert "No new typewriting machine, however, shall be so purchased if it is of a different make than the machine given in exchange," so as to read:

SEC. 4. That no part of any money appropriated by this or any other act shall be used during the fiscal year 1921 for the purchase of any typewriting machine at a price in excess of the lowest price paid by the Government of the United States for the same make and substantially the same model of machine during the fiscal year 1919; such price shall include the value of any typewriting machine or machines given in exchange, but shall not apply to special prices granted on typewriting machines used in schools of the District of Columbia or of the Indian Service, the lowest of which special prices paid for typewriting machines shall not be exceeded in future purchases for such schools: Provided, That in construing this section the Commissioner of Patents shall advise the Comptroller of the Treasury as to whether the changes in any typewriter are of such structural character as to constitute a new machine not within the limitations of this section.

All purchases of typewriting machines during the fiscal year 1921 by the various branches of the Government of the United States for use in the District of Columbia or in the field, except as hereinafter provided, shall be made from the surplus machines in the stock of the General Supply Committee. The War Department shall furnish the General Supply Committee, immediately upon the approval of this act, a complete inventory of the various makes, models, and classes of typewriters in its possession, the condition of such machines, and the point of storage, and shall turn over to the General Supply Committee such typewriting machines in such quantities as the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time may call for by specific requisition for sale to the various services of the Government. If the General Supply Committee is unable to furnish serviceable machines to any branch of the Government it shall furnish unserviceable machines at current exchange prices and such machines shall then be applied by the branch of the Government receiving them as part payment for new machines from commercial sources in accordance with the prices fixed in the preceding paragraph. No new typewriting machine, however, shall be so purchased if it is of a different make than the machine given in exchange. After the approval of this act and until June 30, 1921, the War Department shall not dispose of any typewriting machines except to the General Supply Committee as authorized herein.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the chairman of the committee in his good patience to tell us something about the typewriter situation?

Mr. WARREN. This particular amendment is one that was offered by the committee of the House, stricken out on a point of order, and was put in by the Senate committee on the supposition that the House had looked the situation over very fully and that it should be in.

Does the Senator know any special reason why it should not be agreed to?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I am not objecting to the amendment. There is another amendment below which is perhaps even more important. But it brings up this whole question of the Government's handling of the typewriter problem, and I was wondering if the chairman of the committee cared to explain it to the Senate. I have heard a good many complaints as to how the Government is handling it.

Mr. WARREN. So far as I am concerned, I should be very glad to make a trade, to disagree to the first amendment and agree to the second one, if necessary to change it at all—and I doubt the wisdom of changing it.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator from New York refer to the amendment at the bottom of page 161, about the disposition of used typewriters?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that in connection with the text of the bill as unamended.

Mr. CURTIS. There has been a good deal of complaint about the disposition of typewriters, the claim being that the departments are not taking care of them, the operators refusing to oil them and keep them in condition, and that after using them a few months they are out of condition and they want to sell them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is my information also.

Mr. CURTIS. This is to prevent them from doing that, and to require the departments to keep the machines in good order, to see that the operators take care of their typewriters, and that they shall not sell them every four or five months as old machines.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am in entire sympathy with the amendment, so far as it goes, in that respect. But may I ask whether it is the purpose of this amendment in effect to prevent the purchase of any new typewriters from manufacturers during the next fiscal year?

Mr. WARREN. No; I do not believe there is any reason for expecting that, for the reason that the Government has carloads of typewriters on hand which were bought by the Army and Navy, many of which have not been used, and there is, I think, so far as typewriters are concerned, a very efficient accounting of supplies going on through the War Department. They are giving particular attention to the typewriter proposition, both as to the disposition of the new and as to the reconstruction of the old.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I was not criticizing the amendment itself, but as I read the text of the bill, commencing with line 6, on page 160, and going down to the bottom of page 161, ending with the second committee amendment, I gathered the impression that the effect would be to prevent the purchase of any new typewriters during the next fiscal year. If so, I am in favor of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that that will not be the result of the second amendment. When I offered the amendment in the committee, I had in it originally a limitation of four years. After a discussion of the question as to whether that was the length of time that every machine purchased by the Government should be used, it was finally concluded that three years would be long enough. I know that some of the members of the committee called attention to the experience they had had with machines in their own offices, and they stated that in their opinion three years would be sufficient.

The way section 4 is drawn now there will be but very few typewriters purchased by the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. There will be some no doubt. For instance, new Senators and Representatives may want new machines, or something may happen to a machine that has been in operation three years in a Senator's office, and he would require a new machine. In that way, and in that way only, will there be purchases of new machines, and with the amount that we have on hand at the present time, I hope that there will be very few machines purchased.

The Chief of the General Supply Committee asked for an increased appropriation of $30,000, but the committee gave him $20,000, increasing the amount from $80,000 to $100,000, for the repair of the machines, and so forth. A part of that is for the repair of typewriters owned by the Government. That $20,000, he claims, will take care of buying all the parts necessary for the old machines he has already in store, and also all repairs that may be necessary to such machines. I think that the provisions we have in the bill are absolutely right.

The first amendment reads:

No new typewriting machine, however, shall be so purchased if it is of a different make than the machine given in exchange.

The object of that is this: In the departments they are changing clerks all the time, and a new clerk may want an Underwood typewriter or a Remington typewriter, and in the past where the exchanges have been made of one machine for another kind of machine the concern manufacturing the new machines will never give for the old machine what the manufacturers of the old machine would have given if it had been exchanged for a machine made by them. This means that wherever there is an exchange of a Remington it shall be for a Remington machine, and if an Underwood for an Underwood, and I am quite sure that the Government of the United States will save money by the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, Mr. President, I am quite free to confess that I think that is an excellent idea. My information had been that there are something like 35,000 typewriters stored around Washington not in use; that they are corded up like cordwood. The employees of the Government standing on the floor take a machine and throw it up on top of the pile, and there it lies, probably breaking some little part of it which could be easily repaired. As I understand the Government's arrangement with the typewriter companies, it is to the effect that the companies must keep the machines in repair for one year free of charge.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, minor repairs. They do not furnish parts. They just simply keep a machine so that it will operate successfully. In other words, if a Senator has any trouble with his machine working successfully, the company making the machine will furnish some one to see that it is put in order. If anything happens to the machine by way of a breakage, they are not responsible in any way for it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suppose if a happy employee took an ax to it, the company would not be expected to keep it in repair.

I want to ask the Senator, in view of the probability of the Government having enough machines on hand that could be used if repaired and kept in repair at a very small cost, whether he thinks it is really necessary that we buy any new ones for this next year?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I do not expect very many to be purchased, but there may cases arise where the purchase of a new machine would be necessary. In other words, if it does happen I think it will be with a Senator or a Representative or some official in the department. I do not think it is going to happen in any of the departments as a general thing. The wording in the bill as agreed to was for the purpose of taking care of the special cases that may arise.

There has been a disposition on the part of some Senators to ask for noiseless machines. I do not think we are going to enter upon the program of furnishing all Senators and Representatives with noiseless machines. A request for one, of course, goes to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and I believe I am safe in saying that the chairman of that committee, the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], is not, as a member of that committee, going to agree to any such program.

Mr. CALDER. I assure the Senator he is quite right, and I hope to have his support.

Mr. SMOOT. I will assure the Senator that I will be with him in opposing any such practice.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the Senator from Utah tell the Senate how long the price limitation has been fixed?

Mr. SMOOT. Of $57.50?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know what the price is. I mean how long has it been fixed?

Mr. SMOOT. The old price limit was $57.50 for some machines and I think the new offer is about $67. I know there is not quite $10 difference.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the Senator say how long this limitation as expressed from line 9, page 160, downward has existed in the law?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say offhand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Four or five years?

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps. It was before the war, I will say to the Senator; and, of course, we understand that it costs more now to make typewriting machines than it did then; but there is a new limit upon typewriting machines now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How does the new limit come about if there has been no change in the law?

Mr. SMOOT. I know there is a difference in the price of machines, if not in the law.

Mr. CALDER. In the price to the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. CALDER. My information was that it had not been increased since before the war.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is wrong in that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My understanding is that different companies have different prices; but these companies have been holding to the same price for four or five years.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there is one such company. I can tell the Senator in a moment what company it is.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator will remember one company has furnished them originally for $57.50 and then raised to $67. The company's retail rate is $100, and they give the Government a discount of about 35 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. The Royal typewriter is the one I had reference to.

Mr. WARREN. Different companies have different prices now, because they have the noiseless and different fixtures. The supposition is on general terms that they give the Government something like one-third off, but they have been bought largely in the past from the one company that bought cheaper than others and made contracts accordingly.

Mr. SMOOT. As I remember the testimony, the Royal Typewriter Co. is furnishing the machines to-day at the same as they furnished before the war.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They have to.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose they had some kind of a contract, but I do not remember the details of it. The other companies are asking more to-day than they did years ago.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not understand how that company can get more money to-day for its machines than it did four years ago, because in every bill that has been passed year after year this same clause has been inserted, that the price shall not be in excess of the lowest price paid by the Government of the United States for the same make and substantially the same model of machine during the preceding fiscal year. In other words, we fixed the price of typewriters four or five years ago at the lowest price then paid for each type of machine, and we have repeated that language every year since. So, how can any typewriter be costing more money to-day than it cost four years ago?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know that this exact wording has been in all the different appropriation bills. It may be, but I do not remember. I do know that there are some typewriting machines for which they receive more than $57.50 from the Government to-day—that is, according to the testimony. It may have been because of the fact that they had a contract for a higher price.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was; and they have been limited to that as a maximum ever since. I know it is not particularly popular to defend manufacturers, and it does not excite a great deal of public sympathy, but here is a case where the Government of the United States in effect compels its own citizens to sell articles to it at a loss and there is no relief whatever. It may be regarded as good business on the part of the United States to get something for less than it is worth, but I doubt the ethics of it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will read the statement of one of the men who represent the typewriter companies, he will find that the typewriter companies consider it very good business to get orders from the Federal Government because it helps their business in foreign countries. It may be true that they make no profit on any sales made to the Government, but the Senator will realize the tremendous advantage and the benefit to the typewriting concerns if they can go to foreign countries and show that their machine is used by the Federal Government here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can understand perfectly that argument. However, you will find that they continue to deliver them to the Government because they are afraid not to.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator information that they are delivering to the Government at less than cost?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is my information.

Mr. WARREN. The committee did not get such information.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the testimony before the committee is to the contrary, that is another thing. My information was that the machine could not be made for that price. It may not be serious, but I doubt the ethics of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to call the Senator's attention to a statement made by Mr. Charles J. Rogers, Washington manager of the L. C. Smith & Bro. Typewriter Co., of Syracuse, N. Y., as follows:

Mr. ROGERS. Section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act limits the price that can be paid for typewriting machines. Since appearing before the House committee bids have been opened by the General Supply Committee for the furnishing of typewriters during the next fiscal year, and the following facts have been developed:

The Remington Typewriter Co., the L. C. Smith Typewriter Co., the Royal Typewriter Co., the Oliver Typewriter Co., and other typewriter companies have bid a higher price.

The CHAIRMAN. Higher price than what?

Mr. ROGERS. Than can be paid for typewriters under the proposed legislation, section 4.

The CHAIRMAN. What typewriters have not raised the price?

Mr. ROGERS. I personally know of no concern that has not raised the price. We could have technically complied with the law by having bid our typewriters f. o. b. Syracuse or Washington, eliminating the guaranty, and by that indirect method increased the cost to the Government approximately $7 per machine. Instead, we based our price on what we felt we could sell them at, and bid, as in the past, delivery anywhere in the United States, guaranteeing to keep the machine in repair free of cost for a period of one year. Based upon costs of last year, that amounts to approximately $7 per machine.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you furnish the machines for now?

Mr. ROGERS. $70; new price bid, $77—

That is the L. C. Smith Typewriter Co.—

That is the correspondent model only.

Senator OVERMAN. What machine do you sell?

Mr. ROGERS. L. C. Smith.

Senator OVERMAN. What do you retail it at?

Mr. ROGERS. $110.

Senator OVERMAN. What do you wholesale it at to the merchants?

Mr. ROGERS. To people who use a hundred or more we give them a discount of 10 and 10 per cent, equally $89 and a few pennies.

The CHAIRMAN. You make a deduction to those who use 10 or more, do you not?

Mr. ROGERS. No; we make a deduction for 25 or more of 10 per cent, making the price $99. For a machine we sell the Government at $62 we sell to a big user for $78.90, and a single user at $97.50. The injustice, if I may use that term, of this legislation is precisely this: We served the Government back in 1913 and 1914.

Other typewriter companies, who did not serve the Government at that time, and have since brought machines on the market, have been able to quote any price they chose to quote and have received the contract from the Supply Committee and orders from the Government and payment therefor.

I will not read any more. The Senator can see the drift of the testimony of Mr. Rogers, representing the L. C. Smith Typewriter Co.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am puzzled about one part of it. As I gather from what the Senator read a moment ago, the representative of one of the manufacturing concerns says they have been delivering machines to the Government for $70, and this year they have bid $77. The Government can not pay $77, can it? It is forbidden to pay any more than last year, and last year any more than the year before.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case and they could not purchase under the bid, no doubt the L. C. Smith & Bros. Co. will conclude to sell to the Government their machines at $70, just the same as the old price.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then the bid does not amount to anything?

Mr. SMOOT. I think that will be the result.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In other words, the Government has the upper hand, and, of course, is getting the machines.

Mr. SMOOT. They only have the upper hand in this way, that there is no typewriter machine made in the United States but what the maker of that machine desires to sell it to the Government of the United States and use that as an advertisement for selling machines not only throughout the United States but throughout Europe as well. I think that is about the sum and substance of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 161, in line 23, after the word "herein," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter no typewriter that has been used less than three years shall be sold, exchanged, or given as part payment for another typewriter.

The next amendment was, on page 162, after line 10, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. That all civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia who receive a total of compensation at the rate of $2,500 per annum or less, except as otherwise provided in this section, shall receive, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, additional compensation at the rate of $240 per annum: Provided, That such employees as receive a total of annual compensation at a rate more than $2,500 and less than $2,740 shall receive additional compensation at such a rate per annum as may be necessary to make their salaries, plus their additional compensation, at the rate of $2,740 per annum, and no employee shall receive additional compensation under this section at a rate which is more than 60 per cent of the rate of the total annual compensation received by such employee: Provided further, That the increased compensation at the rate of $240 per annum for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall not be computed as salary in construing this section: Provided further, That where an employee in the service on June 30, 1919, has received during the fiscal year 1920, or shall receive during the fiscal year 1921 an increase of salary at a rate in excess of $200 per annum, or where an employee whether previously in the service or not, has entered the service since June 30, 1919, whether such employee has received an increase in salary or not, such employees shall be granted the increased compensation provided herein only when and upon the certification of the person in the legislative branch or the head of the department or establishment employing such persons of the ability and qualifications personal to such employees as would justify such increased compensation: Provided further, That the increased compensation provided in this section to employees whose pay is adjusted from time to time through wage boards or similar authority shall be taken into consideration by such wage boards or similar authority in adjusting the pay of such employees.

The provisions of this section shall not apply to the following: Employees paid from the postal revenues and sums which may be advanced from the Treasury to meet deficiencies in the postal revenues; employees of the Panama Canal on the Canal Zone; employees of the Alaskan Engineering Commission in Alaska; officers and members of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia and the United States park police who receive the compensation fixed by the act approved December 5, 1919; officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia who receive the compensation fixed by the act approved January 24, 1920; employees paid from lump-sum appropriations in bureaus, divisions, commissions, or any other governmental agencies or employments created by law since January 1, 1916, except employees of the United States Tariff Commission who shall be included and except that employees of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance shall receive increased compensation at one-half the rate allowed by this section for other employees: Provided, That employees of said bureau who are compensated at rates below $400 per annum shall receive additional compensation only as the rate of 60 per cent of the annual rates of compensation received by such employees. The provisions of this section shall not apply to employees whose duties require only a portion of their time, except charwomen, who shall be included; employees whose services are utilized for brief periods at intervals; persons employed by or through corporations, firms, or individuals acting for or on behalf of or as agents of the United States or any department or independent establishment of the Government of the United States in connection with construction work or the operation of plants; employees who receive a part of their pay from any outside sources under cooperative arrangements with the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia; employees who serve voluntarily or receive only a nominal compensation, and employees who may be provided with special allowances because of their service in foreign countries. The provisions of this section shall not apply to employees of the railroads, express companies, telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems taken over by the United States, and nothing contained herein shall be deemed a recognition of the employees of such railroads, express companies, telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems as employees of the United States.

Section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved May 10, 1916, as amended by the naval appropriation act approved August 29, 1916, shall not operate to prevent anyone from receiving the additional compensation provided in this section who otherwise is entitled to receive the same.

Such employees as are engaged on piecework, by the hour, or at per diem rates, if otherwise entitled to receive the additional compensation, shall receive the same at the rate to which they are entitled in this section when their fixed rate of pay for the regular working hours and on the basis of 313 days in the said fiscal year would amount to $2,500 or less: Provided, That this method of computation shall not apply to any per diem employees regularly paid a per diem for every day in the year.

So much as may be necessary to pay the additional compensation provided in this section to employees of the Government of the United States is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

So much as may be necessary to pay the increased compensation provided in this section to employees of the government of the District of Columbia is appropriated, one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, except to employees of the Washington Aqueduct and the water department, which shall be paid entirely from the revenues of the water department, and to employees of the minimum wage board and the playgrounds department, which shall be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

So much as may be necessary to pay the increased compensation provided in this section to persons employed under trust funds who may be construed to be employees of the Government of the United States or of the District of Columbia is authorized to be paid, respectively, from such trust funds.

Reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next regular session showing for the first four months of the fiscal year the average number of employees in each department, bureau, office, or establishment receiving the increased compensation at the rate of $240 per annum and the average number by grades receiving the same at each other rate.

Mr. CALDER. I offer the amendment to the committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 164, line 1, after the word "Alaska," it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Officers and members of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia and the United States park police who receive the compensation fixed by the act approved December 5, 1919; officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia who receive the compensation fixed by the act approved January 24, 1920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this amendment is offered so as to permit the members of the Metropolitan police force and the members of the fire department of the city of Washington to receive the $240 bonus which is allowed to other Government employees for the next fiscal year. Those men now receive the bonus. During the present session of Congress, however, the pay of the policemen and firemen of the District has been readjusted. They have received an increase of their basic pay on an average of about $350 each. Some few of the officers, but a very few, receive a little more than that, but as to the firemen, the men who do the work, and the policemen, the privates, their average increase is about the sum which I have indicated. In addition to that, as I have stated, these men also receive the bonus.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CALDER. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I know the Senator desires to be accurate in regard to this matter, and I desire to inform him that the increase which has been received by these men has been in some instances as much as $800 instead of $350. It has varied between those two sums. Without wishing to interrupt the Senator in any remarks which he may care to make, I desire, in the interest of what he is anxious to accomplish—that is, to secure an increase of whatever is necessary for the city employees and to provide for it on general principles—to make a suggestion to him.

To undertake now, after the salaries of these employees have been nearly doubled, to make the extra pay in the shape of a bonus apply to them would be very unscientific and could not help but create trouble for the committee and for the Senate with employees in other departments.

Another appropriation bill, now being considered in the other House, will be here soon, and that bill applies directly to the District of Columbia. I should like, therefore, to have the Senator withdraw his amendment to the pending bill and take the matter up with the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which the Senator himself is a very distinguished member. On that committee also are several Senators who are likewise members of the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations very carefully considered this matter, and not a member of the committee, so far as I know, has committed himself to an intention to keep these men down to the salaries which they are at present receiving. It was the unanimous wish, however, that we should not by a bonus allowance attempt to raise salaries to the amount to which these have been raised—and I am not saying that the increases were too large.

Unfortunately, also, if the amendment of the Senator is agreed to as proposed, the entire structure of the bill will have to be changed, because, as the Senator will see, in two or three or more places we took the language of the bill of last year and provided that the bonus should not apply where salaries had been increased beyond a certain percentage—60 per cent. Many of the employees to whom the Senator from New York refers have had their salaries increased more than 60 per cent.

Then there is another item in the bill to the effect that any employee whose salary has been increased by $200 within the last year can not have the benefit of the bonus. It is true, however, that as to that particular item of $200 there is given liberty to the head of the department to apply the bonus. Under that authorization the head of the department may apply the bonus as the Senator proposes, but if it is inserted here he could not apply the bonus in the next year and carry out the provisions of the law.

Of course, we have got to take up the matter of the half-and-half principle in the consideration of the District bill. I do not want the Senator to make it even seem possible that any member of the Committee on Appropriations is undertaking to keep the salaries of these employees in this city at a low or inadequate rate; but the Senator, I think, will see, as I have seen, in looking over the list which I have here, that what he proposes—that the $240 shall apply to everyone—would not be a fair proposition. I think there are some to whom it should not apply, while there are others, probably, who deserve more than that. I agree with the Senator that the whole matter ought to be gone over and that any increase which may be made should be permanent. We are surrounded by thousands of employees, in fact, over a hundred thousand. We have provided for a Commission on Reclassification, whose report was submitted too late to be taken into consideration in connection with this particular bill. This entire matter of the bonus is an expedient, and, in my judgment, not a commendable expedient except to cover the matter for the time being.

We have time to take up the matter of salaries, because a commencement has been made as to the District of Columbia; we have the District appropriation bill yet to come over here; and there is at present, if it is not destroyed, a disposition upon the part of Senators who arrange matters of appropriation to take care of this question in a regular and legitimate way. I think it would tend more to defeat the object than it would finally bring it to a favorable conclusion to have this amendment adopted, and therefore I am opposed to it.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I appreciate full well the position of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and his very kindly attitude toward these splendid public servants. We have increased the pay of these men substantially; as I indicated a few moments ago, we have increased the pay of private in the police department, one group $340, another group $360, and another group $380 a year. We have increased the pay of a few, such as the surgeons of the department, by doubling their previous compensation, but the men who really do the work, the privates in the police and fire departments, have had their pay increased about 35 per cent on an average. That, I know, is a substantial increase, but when these increases were authorized, having in mind the pay given firemen and policemen throughout the country, the Committee on the District of Columbia in their recommendations considered the question of a bonus, and we felt that, while the increase granted by separate legislation, averaging $550 or $560 a year, including the bonus, was a considerable increase, yet it did not seem to us too much. We inquired concerning the pay of similar employees in other cities of the country. In New York City the policemen and firemen have now a permanent pay of $1,900; the permanent pay in the higher grades of the firemen and policemen in the District of Columbia, including the bonus, is $1,900. In Chicago and in other cities the pay is even more than here, including the bonus.

Policemen and firemen constitute a different class from any other employees of the Government. They work every day in the month. They have no half holidays on Saturday; they have none of the regular holidays which other employees have; they are employed 24 hours in the day and are on duty continually. Of course, they have one day off a week, but the other six days they are on duty 24 hours a day, and every hour of their existence their lives are in danger.

Senators are aware of the condition of things in the District of Columbia. I think there has been on an average one police officer killed in the performance of duty in the District of Columbia each month for the last two years. These men must buy all of their uniforms and are compelled to pay now double what they did a few years ago. Policemen are required to have three uniforms a year. Perhaps some uniforms may be held over from one year to another, but they must have three different uniforms.

I believe that the basic pay now fixed by law for the policemen and firemen is sufficient. I do not think Congress ought to authorize an additional wage for these men, but I believe that in these days of high prices—and this is an old story to the Senate—when we have to pay over 100 per cent more to live than we did a little while ago, this particular class of men, these men who safeguard the city, who safeguard the Capital of the Nation, these men who endanger their lives every hour in the day, ought to be kept in such a condition of mind that they will be satisfied with their jobs.

This matter of the bonus was considered, as I suggested a moment ago, when we raised the pay of the policemen and firemen, and I know full well that unless my amendment is adopted, despite the statement of the chairman of the committee, the pay of these men will be reduced on July 1.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator if he knows what is the pay of motormen and conductors on street car lines in the city of Washington?

Mr. CALDER. A conductor told me one day last week that his pay averaged about $5.80 a day.

Mr. HARRISON. I have understood that if this bonus was not granted many of the men in the fire department and on the police force could get better jobs as motormen or conductors on the street car lines, and it might result in disorganizing the force here.

Mr. CALDER. Replying to the Senator from Mississippi, I have been informed that, despite the increased compensation, 10 policemen have resigned since the 1st of January because better opportunities were offered them in other employment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator speaks as if proposing an amendment here were a finality.

Mr. CALDER. Oh, no.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will excuse me a moment further, I think he is making the very best kind of an argument that these salaries ought to be fixed permanently and not temporarily. We all know the importance of the police force and of the fire force; and if it is difficult to hold men there when they have to depend upon the salary and bonus, it is far less difficult to get those men and far less difficult to employ them when they know they are going to have a regular scale of pay and will not have to submit to the luck or ill luck of receiving or not receiving a bonus.

The Senator says they are now receiving the bonus. That takes them up to the 1st of July. We have coming in, as I say, the regular appropriation bill for the District of Columbia. We shall also have toward the end of the year a deficiency bill, which we all dread, but to which we all have to submit; and we have many times taken care of city matters there if they have not been taken care of otherwise. I think the present time, however, immediately after this raise—which, if the Senator wishes, I will put in the RECORD, so as to show just what it is—is an unfortunate time to make this proposal; and it will have an unfortunate influence on legislation and on other employees and all others to raise salaries with the intention—if that is what I understand the Senator to say—that there should be a bonus in addition to that.

Where are we going to land when we take up the reclassification, where we fix salaries for the employees of the Government, if it is understood in this quarter or the other, as it naturally would be if this motion prevails, that they can apply from day to day for a bonus? In fact, we were besieged this year with applications for a bonus of $480, and while we indulge in bonuses there will always be a train of men and women at the door of every appropriations committee asking for this bonus or that or the other, seeking to raise the bonus every time and creating discontent, which condition can not exist if regular salaries are fixed which they must accept or not accept.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I submit again that I dislike to disagree with the chairman of the committee. I know that he means to deal with these men, as he always does with all other Government employees, fairly and equitably; but, Mr. President, this is a different case. These men are the guardians of the city of Washington. They protect the Nation's property and the lives of officials here. If we failed to give them this bonus it would be breaking faith with them.

When we passed the bills increasing the pay of the firemen and policemen, the District of Columbia Committee agreed, as much as it was possible for us to do so, that the bonus was to continue. In fact, the bonus did continue, for to-day these men are receiving it; but unless the amendment proposed by me is agreed to, on July 1 their pay will be reduced $20 a month.

Another matter, Mr. President: When we were considering this question, we found the whole question of the affiliation of policemen and firemen with outside labor organizations was a matter of grave concern throughout the entire Nation. We had an instance of that in the police strike in Boston. We had a firemen's strike in Jersey City, N. J. We had trouble all over the country, and before these increases were authorized we obtained from these men a distinct understanding that they would at once separate themselves from any affiliation with any organization outside of their own immediate service in the District of Columbia. All of these things were considerations for this legislation; and if now we fail to provide this bonus for them for the next year, their pay will be reduced; it will cause dissatisfaction; it will be unwise, in my opinion; and Congress can fairly be accused of breaking faith.

Of course, we could provide for this in the District appropriation bill; or we could provide for it in a deficiency bill; but in this bill we are voting bonuses, and we are specifically exempting these men from it in language written into this bill. It seems to me the thing to do is to strike out this language, and deal with these men as we do with the rest, and do it now.

Mr. WARREN. There are a great many other men in exactly the same position.

Mr. CALDER. There are. As the Senator says, there are a good many men exempted; but there are no other men, so far as I know, who will suffer a reduction of salary as the result of the legislation that is in the bill. The pay of these men will be reduced $20 a month.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the House refused to put any bonus provision in this bill. The Senate committee decided that they would insert the bonus provision in the bill exactly as the law stands to-day. There is no change whatever from the present bonus provision in relation to any employees of the Federal Government or of the District of Columbia, when you take into consideration the provision of existing law that the bonus shall not apply to an employee who has received an increase of $200 per annum.

I want to call attention, so that Senators will know about them, to some of the increases that have been granted to the firemen and also to the Metropolitan police in the District of Columbia by the special act referred to in this amendment.

In the case of laborers in the fire department the old salary was $600. The new salary is $1,000, or an increase of $400. That is an increase of 66⅔ per cent.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator tell us how many laborers there are?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the number of laborers here.

Mr. CALDER. I think there are six.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I will take all of them in as to the increases, and then we will see what the result is, no matter whether there are six laborers or not. If there are but six, the amendment would only affect six, if that is all there are.

The salary of hostlers was increased from $600 to $1,080, or over 70 per cent.

The salary of privates of class 1, which was formerly $960, was increased to $1,460, or an increase of $500.

The salary of privates of class 2, which was formerly $1,140, was increased to $1,560, or an increase of $420.

The act also created an entirely new class of privates, known as privates of class 3. There were no privates of class 3 in the fire department before the act referred to; and wherever there was a promotion, if it was from class 1 to class 2 there was that additional compensation, and if they went into class 3 they received $1,660.

The old wage of the marine firemen was $840. The new wage is $1,460, or an increase of $620.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. DIAL. Is it not also true that that act related back to the first of last August, and thus had a retroactive effect?

Mr. SMOOT. That was the retroactive part of the law.

Mr. DIAL. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. But what I am speaking of now is what these employees are receiving to-day, and the increases that have been made during this fiscal year.

The assistant marine engineers formerly received $1,140. Now they receive $1,660.

The marine engineers formerly received $1,200, and to-day they are receiving $1,700.

The pilots formerly received $1,150, and now they are receiving $1,700.

The assistant superintendent of machinery was formerly paid $1,200, and to-day we are paying him $2,000.

Mind you, this is without the bonus. These are the salaries that are fixed by statute to-day.

The superintendent of machinery formerly received $2,000. His salary has been increased to $2,500.

The sergeants were increased from $1,200 to $1,700.

The lieutenants were increased from $1,320 to $1,760.

The captains were increased from $1,500 to $1,900.

The clerks were increased from $1,400 to $1,660. Mind you, that takes in all of the clerks. There is no division, as there is in all of the other departments, from $1,100 up, but it takes in every clerk in the fire department.

The chief clerk formerly received $2,000. He now receives $2,440.

The inspectors were receiving $1,080. Now they are receiving $1,660.

The deputy fire marshal formerly received $1,400. He now receives $2,000.

The fire marshal under the old law received $2,000. He receives to-day $2,400.

The battalion chief engineers formerly received $2,000, and to-day they are paid $2,400.

The deputy chief engineers formerly received $2,500, and their salary has been increased to $3,000.

The salary of the chief engineer, who was formerly paid $3,500, has been increased to $4,000.

Mr. President, I do not want to take the time to go over the list of the Metropolitan police. In some cases the increases were about the same and in some cases they were somewhat less.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me, the increases in the police department were considerably less than in the fire department.

Mr. SMOOT. In some cases, as I said, they were less and in some cases they were about the same.

Mr. CALDER. The reason why the salaries in the fire department were increased to a greater extent is because we were bringing the fire department and the police department to the same level, which is the practice in all the large cities of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not deny the fact that the increases I have mentioned were given?

Mr. CALDER. No; they are correct; but——

Mr. SMOOT. Now, I simply want to say this to the Senators: What excuse can we offer to all of the other 100,000 employees in the District of Columbia if, on top of these increases—in some cases increases of 70 per cent—we then add a $240 bonus? Do you think it is going to lead to satisfaction among the 100,000 employees of the District? Will not the result be dissatisfaction?

I want to be perfectly fair in whatever we do by way of bonus or by way of increases, and there should be no partiality shown in any department of the Government.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, as to the pending amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the amendment of the committee, I understand that the policemen and the firemen of the District are now receiving this bonus, and that if they are exempted from the provisions of the amendment they would each receive $240 less per year than they are now receiving.

Mr. CALDER. That is correct.

Mr. MYERS. I am not very strong on raising salaries, but I hardly believe that this is the time to reduce salaries. It does not impress me that it would be fair to reduce the compensation of any Government employees at this time. I believe that the firemen and the policemen of the District should give absolute subservience and submission to the will of Congress. I believe Congress should require of the firemen and policemen of the District undivided allegiance, loyalty, and service, without any allegiance or duty to outside influences which might lead to complications. But, at the same time, I believe Congress should voluntarily give to them fairly reasonable and adequate compensation, and I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. It strikes me as being fair and reasonable. Unless it is adopted, the compensation of these men will be reduced below what it is now, and it does not seem to me that the cost of living and the conditions surrounding us would justify it.

I know a couple of officers on the police force who are now receiving $1,900 a year. If they are to be exempted from this provision after the 1st of July they would receive only $1,660. For a man to attempt to live and support a family in Washington in these times on $1,660 a year I think would be a mighty hard undertaking. While I believe in Congress being absolutely supreme as to the duties of firemen and policemen in the District, and enforcing its mandates as to their duties and their services and their relation to our Government, at the same time I believe we ought to give them fair and reasonable and adequate compensation, and that we ought to do it voluntarily, without any sign of compulsion or attempted coercion from the firemen and policemen.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator if I understood him to say that he knows of two officers of the Metropolitan police force who are receiving $2,000 a year now?

Mr. MYERS. One thousand nine hundred dollars each.

Mr. SMOOT. What officers are they?

Mr. MYERS. I do not care to mention their names, and I do not know exactly their duties.

Mr. SMOOT. To what class do they belong?

Mr. MYERS. I could not say as to that. They come in whatever grade of officers receive $1,900.

Mr. CALDER. I think it is the third class to which they belong.

Mr. MYERS. They belong to whatever class gets $1,900 at present, whatever class that is.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be a private policeman.

Mr. MYERS. A private, then. I misused the word "officer." I just used the word "officer" in the general sense, as we say that every policeman is an officer. I suppose they are privates.

Mr. SMOOT. They must be privates of the third class. They were getting under the old schedule $1,320.

Mr. CALDER. Plus $240 bonus.

Mr. SMOOT. That was increased to $1,660.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; there would be some increase. But if they are now receiving $1,900 each, it hardly seems to me that it would be fair to cut them down to $1,660.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that when that law was passed it was passed with a retroactive feature, and it was understood that it would run until June 30 of this year.

Mr. MYERS. I am not much in favor of retroactive features in regard to salaries. I do not approve of retroactive allowances or salaries, as a rule. I am not in favor of that. But it just impressed me that these are hardly the times to reduce the compensation that employees are actually receiving to-day. I am not very strong on increases, but I do not lean very much to decreases, either.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must know that the privates he is speaking of now have received a greater increase than those who received the bonus of $240 a year ago. They not only received the $240 bonus, but the third-class privates received an increase of $340.

Mr. MYERS. I understand they received some increase.

Mr. SMOOT. That, of course, effects quite an increase in one year.

Mr. MYERS. I understand they received some increase and then received the bonus, too. If they were not receiving the bonus now I do not think I would be in favor of giving it to them; but as long as they are receiving it, I am not in favor of taking it away from them. So I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. CURTIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator will permit me, I understand that there is to be an executive session, and I have been told that a quorum will be called on this amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I will yield the floor, with the understanding that it will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. WARREN. This morning I asked a brother Senator, who wished the floor for a few moments, to wait until later in the day. I understand that he wishes to call up a bill which will lead to no discussion, and I also understand that we are to have an executive session. So if the Senator from New York will agree that his amendment to the amendment may go over, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] can bring his bill forward, if there is no objection.

Mr. CALDER. I have no objection to that course.

LANDS AT POCATELLO, IDAHO.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, last summer I introduced a bill to grant certain public lands to the city of Pocatello for public-park purposes, and also for the preservation of the water supply of the people of that community, who number approximately 20,000.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and was later favorably reported by that committee, with certain amendments suggested by the Secretary of the Interior. The bill is a matter of prime importance to the people of Pocatello.

The lands described in it were withdrawn from entry by the President's proclamation, and I am very much afraid that unless action is taken at an early date the bill will not be enacted prior to the expiration of the time limit provided in the proclamation. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2528.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2528) to grant certain lands to the city of Pocatello, State of Idaho, for conserving and protecting the source of its water supply, and as a municipal park site.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the word "as" to strike out the words "sections two," and to insert the words "west half of section two and all of sections"; on line 7, to strike out the words "or such portions thereof as said city may select"; on line 10, after the word "State" to insert "upon the payment of $1.25 per acre for the land selected"; on page 2, after line 17, to add a proviso, and at the end to add a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the city of Pocatello, in the county of Bannock, and State of Idaho, certain adjacent public lands described as west half of section 2 and all of sections 3, 4, 9, and 10, or such portions thereof as said city may select, in township 7 south, range 34 east, Boise meridian, in said county and State, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre for the land selected, to have and to hold said lands for the conservation and protection of the source of the water supply of said city and as a municipal park site: Provided, That the grant hereby made is, and patent issued thereunder shall be, subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired by any person or persons in or to the above-described premises or any part thereof and now existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States: And provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted and all necessary use of the lands for extracting the same; and that the lands hereby authorized to be conveyed as hereinbefore set forth and all portions thereof shall be held and used by or for the said grantee for the purpose herein specified; and if the said lands shall cease to be so used they shall revert to the United States, and this condition shall be expressed in the patent to be issued under the terms of this act: And provided further, That said grantee shall within two years from the passage of this act make its selection and entry of the land and make use thereof for the purposes herein specified, and the grant herein is made upon the express condition that the mayor of the city of Pocatello shall, on or before January 10 of each year after the expiration of said two years, submit report to the Secretary of the Interior as to the use made of the land herein granted during the preceding calendar year, showing compliance with the terms and conditions stated in this act, and that in the event of his failure to so report, or in the event of a showing to the Secretary of the Interior that the terms of the grant have not been complied with, that the grant shall be held to be forfeited, and the Attorney General of the United States shall institute suit in the proper court for the recovery of said lands.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause the east half of section 2 in township 7 south, of range 34 east, Boise meridian, to be surveyed, appraised, and disposed of under section 2381, United States Revised Statutes.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTRACT VALUE OF COTTON.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a telegram which I have received from the president of the American Cotton Association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the telegram will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

ST. MATTHEWS, S. C., March 29, 1920.

Hon. B. B. COMER:

Tremendous combination formed for purpose of defeating your amendment. Telegrams and letters being sent by thousands for this purpose. Urge use every possible step have your amendment passed. I am sending the following to leading opponents: "Consider Comer bill economic reform of great benefit every legitimate line cotton industry. To permit low grades furnishes gamblers and manipulators with instrument for controlling market. We are facing most complete change in cotton industry since South purchased first slave and exchanged birthright of sister State for mess pottage. An entirely white contract would prove still more beneficial. This bill justly places good grades cotton at a premium, encouraging improved production. Will force greatly needed reforms upon exchanges. Statement that it will penalize producers on off grades farcical and simply subterfuge. Off grades have never been sold result transactions on exchanges, and would prove just as feasible to perfect such sales through contracts permitting delivery of low grades at fair value for same as would be to produce snow drops in hades. Consider opposition to this reform grave mistake. Business must be upon safe, sound methods. Comer bill step in this direction." Show this to Senator E. D. SMITH and consult with him.

J. S. WANAMAKER,
President American Cotton Association.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President, there is quite a bit of propaganda being gotten out against the amendment offered by me to the Agricultural appropriation bill, and I wish to make a few remarks in regard to it.

The exchanges—New York and New Orleans—claim that the amendment offered by me to the Agriculture bill and adopted, requiring half of the contract delivered in cotton middling and above, leaving balance at the option of the seller, will embarrass the dealers in cotton and will bring a chaotic condition in the exchanges and hurt the producer in that it will militate against the use of low-grade cotton. The proposed change simply tends to stabilize the contract value of cotton, making it approximate commercial price, and to the extent that this is accomplished it will benefit every dealer on the exchange, will encourage business to hedge their sales or purchases on the exchanges, as this gives them increased protection. It will help the legitimate handlers of cotton from producer to consumer in that it will help deprive the illegitimate dealer on the exchange of a multiplex assembly of off grades and tendering them on contract; off grades not for the purpose of increasing their use, which in the very nature of the contract is impossible, but for the purpose of depressing the market, of unduly controlling the market. The assembly of off grades of the 10 contract types at the exchanges for the purpose of delivery is the furthest from encouraging the use and manufacture of these grades and consequently is the furthest from advantage to these grades. The exchanges were never intended to be the point or medium of delivery of cotton, good or bad. It costs several cents per pound to pass any cotton through the exchanges. The exchanges limited to the index, the barometer of price, the hedge seller accomplishes the purpose of the hedge transaction when he buys the spot cotton wherever he can do so to the best advantage and then releases by selling or purchasing his hedge. This is the utmost intent of the exchange transaction, and further use of it is not to the advantage of the cotton producer, the cotton dealer, the cotton manufacturer, or the cotton consumer, and nothing can be falser than the general proposition that the exchanges as present or past conducted encourage the use of off grades or any grade of cotton.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND CONTROL.

The cotton exchanges are the only legalized dealers in agricultural products where the interest of the gambler is recognized and protected by law.

This amendment is intended to protect the interest of legitimate transactions on the exchanges, and in the most positive terms I assert that it does not hurt any business transaction; that the character of it, the opportunities of it, should be simplified and protected by law. In limiting the opportunities of the gambler on the exchange to mark the cards with which the game is played is in every sense of the word a protection of legitimate business and should be accomplished.

Senators, what we wish in the cotton business is self-determination. Give the producer and give the dealer a chance. Give him the protection of the law. Self-determination against the gambler is what we ask.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that I shall ask unanimous consent to resume the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill immediately after the close of the routine morning business to-morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 30, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious and most merciful Father, ever interested in the welfare of Thy children, increase our faith, enlarge our hope, and make us more devoted to Thee and our fellow men; that we may be potent factors in bringing peace out of war, good out of evil, love out of hate; that the ruling passion of all men may be the development of all that we know is pure and holy; that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done in earth as in heaven. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, upon what subject does the gentleman desire to extend his remarks?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. On the subject of revenue and taxation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of revenue and taxation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, I would like unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Nevada

Live Stock Association relative to grazing on the forest reserves. It is a mild, clear statement of the situation, and I feel that it would be of interest.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I think I will have to object.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13266, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13266) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment to beneficiaries named in section 3 of "An act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or his or her minor children in destitute or necessitous circumstances," approved March 23, 1906, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia, on itemized vouchers duly audited and approved by the auditor of said District.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the committee why this appropriation was reduced from $6,500, as it apparently was in the last appropriation bill, to $2,000?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Because there are fewer men in the workhouse and fewer cases of nonsupport. The committee thoroughly investigated that and found that this would be absolutely sufficient under the present conditions.

Mr. GARD. Not being familiar with the subject, I would like to inquire if there is a statute in the District that provides for the maintenance from the public funds?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Fifty cents per day, to be paid to the dependent from the labor of the prisoners. That is the law.

Mr. GARD. The Government gets the benefit of the prisoner's labor, and then pays 50 cents a day to his dependents?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in pro forma opposition to the amendment in order to get the floor.

I just wanted to call the committee's attention to a complaint in a letter just received by me in order to bring it before the District Commissioners. I do not know whether there is any merit in it or not, but I think it deserves investigation by the District authorities. The letter says—and I will read just excerpts from it:

Irving C. Barber, the auto mechanician in charge of the water department repair shop, at Bryant Street shops, has rooms over the garage furnished by the District of Columbia government. He was given permission by Col. Kutz to keep his cars in the shops. Also, Barber uses District of Columbia material for his own use and repairs cars for other people on District of Columbia pay. In addition to that he condemns District of Columbia cylinders on autos so he can furnish work for a shop he is interested in, located in rear of 1524 M Street NW., city. There surely ought to be some way to curb this. I herewith give you the names of the employees who are now working at the pumphouse who I am sure if you would put them under oath you would get the facts: E. P. Barnard, machinist, pitometer division; Ed O'Brien, same division. Here are men who work with Barber from whom you can get the facts: William Rittenhouse, auto mechanic at Washington Steel & Ordnance Co., city, also Harry Fredrick, at same place, who worked with Barber about seven years; Thomas Phillips, auto mechanic, with the Dupont Garage, city; William or Frank Riley, auto mechanic, 508 Irving Street NW., city; Mr. Sweeney, machinist, now with the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and John Galligher, who works for Barber. Barber sold three Empire automobiles to the District of Columbia government, water department, supposed to be new, but two of them were second-hand cars. When investigated no witnesses were sworn and Barber was whitewashed.

And so on. And there are other complaints. I do not know whether there is——

Mr. WALSH. Who signed the letter?

Mr. BLANTON. A party signs it whose name I will give to the committee, but I do not put it in the RECORD for the reason that it might cause the party to lose his position. I do not know whether there is anything in this complaint or not, but it is a matter I think the committee and the District Commissioners ought to have knowledge of; and, if it is true, some action ought to be taken. It is just a letter I received in the mail and I expect to turn it over to the chairman of the committee, but I think it is best to keep the name out of the RECORD here.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I think if you take the responsibility of putting that information in the RECORD you ought to put the whole letter in and the name of the man who signs it.

Mr. WALSH. You have put other names in there indicating some wrongdoing, and does not the gentleman think when he calls the attention of the entire country to this——

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I will put it in. The writer did not request that it be treated "confidential," in which case I would have protected him.

Mr. SNELL. Put it all in.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me first put the name in. The letter is signed "Thomas N. Smith, ex-employee of the water department," and is dated "Washington, D. C., March 28, 1920." I do not know that he has even been an employee. I do not know but that this may be a fictitious letter. In fact, I do not know anything about it, except that it came to me through the mail. The reason I hesitated about putting the name in was that there was a certain young man, a resident of Virginia, who had been in the employ of the Department of Labor for a number of years, and who, by the way, was a Royal Arch Mason, who gave some testimony over here before a committee once concerning Mr. Densmore, who was a director in the Employment Service here, and because of the testimony he gave there Mr. Densmore kicked him out of office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. That young man, I say, was kicked out of office and lost his job. It meant much to him. His evidence led to information concerning a great many matters of impropriety with respect to the improper performance of Government duties by Government employees. As I say, there may be something in this communication. If there is, this man ought not to lose his job. If he has made a complaint here that is absolutely unfounded I have no objection to his losing his job.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that the chairmen of these committees have got to go out and hunt up all those complaints when such attacks are made?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Then why do you want me to know about it? I will say that the Commissioners of the District have full authority over all these matters, and I suggest to the gentleman to take this up with them.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman does not want to use the information, I will put it in for the benefit of the District Commissioners. I have not time to look into the business.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the information that the gentleman has put into the RECORD, if true, ought to be investigated. The gentleman has now put in the RECORD the name of the author of this letter.

If the District Commissioners do not read the RECORD, I suggest that the gentleman go in person and see them and submit this testimony to them, and I thoroughly believe that, as to these complaints and charges, the commissioners will look into them promptly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Support of prisoners: For maintenance of jail prisoners of the District of Columbia at the Washington Asylum and Jail, including pay of guards and all other necessary personal services, and for support of prisoners therein, expenses incurred in identifying and pursuing escaped prisoners, and rewards for their recapture, repair and improvements to buildings, cells, and locking devices, maintenance of automobile, and for the support of prisoners, $90,000.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SWEET. Under the law enacted August 31, 1918, we have the language "Asylum and jail: Superintendent, $1,800." Under the law enacted July 11, 1919, we have a change, the "Washington Asylum and Jail, superintendent of hospital." The language of the present bill on page 70 is "Washington Asylum and Jail: Superintendent of hospital, $1,800." Is there any superintendent of the jail provided for in the bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not in the bill. I will state for the gentleman's information this, that we have a very competent man down at the workhouse at Occoquan by the name of Charles

C. Foster, who has proven to be a very good man, and now he is actually carrying on his shoulders the duties of the superintendent of the Washington Hospital, Asylum, and Jail, and he is doing it now in very good shape. When we were down there viewing the premises and looking into matters we discovered this fact, that during the superintendency of this Mr. Foster, in the absence of another superintendent, there has been saved in the jail alone, although the prisoners have increased in number and the cost of living has also increased, $11,000 in nine months.

Mr. SWEET. But there is no superintendent of the jail?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. None at the present time.

Mr. SWEET. And no deputy superintendent?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No.

Mr. SWEET. But there is a superintendent of the hospital, and the superintendent of the hospital is really synonymous with the superintendent of the asylum?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. SWEET. And he is also superintendent of the reformatory and the workhouse?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. SWEET. Now, then, who is acting superintendent at the jail?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is a deputy there acting now.

Mr. SWEET. But you make no provision for a deputy in your bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is carried under the asylum.

Mr. SWEET. It is carried under the paragraph that we are now considering?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; under the paragraph of $90,000.

Mr. SWEET. The paragraph just read?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; the assistant superintendent.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWEET: Page 72, line 5, after the word "of," insert the following: "the superintendent of the jail, his deputies, and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the commissioners are authorized, under such regulations as they may prescribe, to sell the surplus products of the Home for the Aged and Infirm, and all moneys derived from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia: Provided, That a report of the amount derived from such sales shall be made annually in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve it more particularly for the purpose of inquiring why the United States Government can not get any part of this fund unless the report of the amount so derived from such sales shall be annually made in the Book of Estimates? It seems to me that if the United States Government is entitled to part of this money, it ought to have it, regardless of whether or not the commissioners report it in their estimates.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not think the remarks of the gentleman are justified, even if you were to strike out this language. They do get half of it now. One-half goes to the District of Columbia and half to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If they get half of it now, why add the proviso that they shall not continue to get it unless an annual report shall be made?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Because we want more accurately to keep track of it. We want them to make a full and complete statement of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. What I understand you want is that a full report be made, and the division of it not made dependent upon their making report?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is the point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, I take it, that after the word "Columbia," in line 23, there ought to be a period, and the words "Provided, That" ought to be stricken out and the word "a" immediately following should be expressed by a capital letter.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not think that this proviso materially helps it, and it does not detract from or diminish it at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It makes it a condition.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not think it does.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield, I think that if instead of a colon after the word "Columbia," in line 23, page 73, there had been only a comma, and if the word "Provided" had not begun with a capital P, it would have been construed as a condition, but under the universal practice, with this legislative body, at least, where there is a proviso inserted in the way this is inserted, it is not construed to be a condition, but it is a new proposition, inserted merely after the word "Provided," and not a condition upon the division of this money, as you might think from reading the language that way. Here is a new proposition introduced under the guise of a proviso. That has been the universal construction.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have a very high regard for the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois upon all subjects, but I can not possibly agree with him in his contention on this. This language provides for a division of this money only upon the condition that a report of the amount derived from such sales shall be made annually in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If I agreed with the gentleman that this is a condition upon this money going into the Treasury half and half, I certainly would make no objection to its going out; but I positively can not see that it interferes with that at all. It is not a condition upon that distribution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the paragraph should be changed or amended as I have just suggested, would it not remove all question as to its meaning?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not see that there is any question now. The gentleman's proposition might complicate it more.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The language of the bill is that this money shall be equally divided between the District of Columbia and the United States—

Provided, That a report of the amount derived from such sales shall be made annually in the Book of Estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation is made under the five-minute rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman withhold his point of order for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My point of order is that the language is legislation, that it is unauthorized by law, and so shows on its face.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi wish to be heard?

Mr. SISSON. I do not care to be heard on the point of order, because I do not think it is subject to the point of order, but I want to explain to the gentleman from Kentucky that nothing was further from the purpose of the District Commissioners or of the subcommittee than to put language into the bill which would make the division of this money conditional upon the commissioners making a report. The purpose of this language is solely to require that the report be made, so that the committee from year to year may know what is being done with this fund. Without some such requirement it might be lost sight of entirely. I have no fear myself of the construction being placed upon it that the gentleman apprehends. I do not believe it is subject to the point of order. I want to assure the gentleman from Kentucky that if any such construction is placed upon it as he seems to fear, if I am on the subcommittee it shall go out in the future.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman might not be on the subcommittee in the future, and it is quite easy to avoid the possibility of a misunderstanding; and as a similar "Provided" is constantly appearing, there ought to come a time when it shall be stopped.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky make the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. It is clearly legislation, a change of law. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Training School for Girls: Superintendent, $1,200; matron and 4 teachers, at $600 each; resident clerk, $800; overseer, $720; 2 parole officers, at $600 each; 7 teachers of industries, at $480 each; engineer, $720; assistant engineer, $600; night watchman, $480; 2 laborers, at $300 each; in all, $12,680.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. The committee have substituted a resident clerk at $800 in lieu of a treasurer at $600. Of course, this is not authorized by law. This point of order has been made every time this bill has been up for the last two or three years, and it has always been sustained.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman contend that Congress can not make an appropriation for a resident clerk or a clerk at the National Training School for Girls?

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If this item is in order, what is the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. It has been stricken out heretofore.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can not make a point of order that something has been stricken out heretofore.

Mr. WALSH. The point of order is that under the statute creating this institution they are not authorized to provide for a resident clerk.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I just asked the gentleman if he contended that they could not provide a resident clerk, and he said they could.

Mr. WALSH. I misunderstood the gentleman. I do contend that they can not. This institution is established by a special law which sets forth the officers that they shall have. This is an attempt to create a new office and to eliminate an office required by law. It has been attempted here three or four times heretofore and is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, the elimination of an office has nothing to do with the matter.

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The question is whether they have a right to appropriate for a resident clerk.

Mr. WALSH. I contend that they have not the authority to do so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I should think myself that we have a right to. I do not know what the statute is with reference to this school.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit me a moment, he says this is the elimination of a clerk. It is not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not say it was the elimination of a clerk.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It does not increase the number of employees. This clerk has been called the treasurer. She does not remain there. She is not resident at the school. Now, that is the complaint that has been made, and we want to change it to compel her to stay there. If the gentleman wants to strike it out, I will not ask to put the clerk back.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe under the language carried in the bill that this is subject to a point of order. This woman does not pretend to do any real service for the District, and this is the only institution not audited by the Auditor for the District. Heretofore we have sought to put the treasurer of the organization under the District of Columbia. In this bill we are not doing that. We dropped out that employee entirely, and under the law we are providing for an official employee, and I think it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has always conceded the point of order heretofore. This institution was established by statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman if the statute provides for the number and class of officers?

Mr. WALSH. It does; it requires that the trustees shall appoint the treasurer, and he shall attend to the duties of his office. Unless you amend that statute, they can not, as they say in the report, appoint a resident clerk, as recommended, in lieu of the treasurer at $800. The treasurer gets $600, and in this bill the resident clerk gets $800.

Mr. SISSON. I want to state to the gentleman that this clerk does not even go about, so far as the record shows, this institution. She keeps her office down in the office of the gentleman who is chairman of the board of trustees of the institution, and the Auditor of the District of Columbia has nothing to do with the fund in this bill until after it has been spent. If the gentleman wants to keep this sinecure in this gentleman's office, let him make the point of order. My contention is that we should drop out the treasurer and place in the bill this position at $800. I have heard no complaint from anyone, except the man in whose office she stays. I have understood from the outside—the information has come to me, the accuracy of which I am not certain about—that this good lady is more than willing to leave the office and accept the $800.

Mr. WALSH. Who is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. SISSON. I am talking about the treasurer.

Mr. WALSH. Who is the gentleman in whose office this woman is?

Mr. SISSON. The chairman of the board of trustees of this institution, Chapin Brown.

Mr. WALSH. Chapin Brown is at the head of the institution.

Mr. SISSON. He is chairman of the board of trustees. This lady remains in his office constantly. So far as the record shows, she could perform the work which would devolve upon her, according to statements before the committee, in about one day out of each month. The committee, not only under the present chairman but under former chairmen, have decided that the party that handles the money and makes the vouchers should be responsible to the commissioners, and the expenditure of the funds of the District should be subject to the same supervision as other funds for all other institutions. It is not that the item is large, but the principle does amount to something. I do not believe it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is clear that the law requires the election of a treasurer, and that it is not competent for the committee reporting an appropriation bill to eliminate the treasurer and substitute a resident clerk. It is clearly a change of law and not competent, under the rules of the House, for the committee that reports this bill to include in an appropriation bill this provision. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Before the word "matron," in line 8, insert the word "treasurer."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 74, line 8, before the word "matron," insert the word "treasurer."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by inserting before the word "treasurer" the word "resident."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then, I will withdraw it. I thought the gentleman from Minnesota wanted it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Before the word "treasurer," in the amendment, insert the word "resident."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw that amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will restore the item as it has been carried by the appropriation bill ever since the establishment of the institution.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that because the salary carried heretofore is $600.

Mr. WALSH. This makes it $600.

Mr. SISSON. In the language of the bill it is $800.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will read, he will see that it is $600.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, the gentleman inserts it in a different line.

Mr. WALSH. No; in the same line, where it has always been carried in the bill.

Mr. SISSON. All right. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope and trust that the committee will vote the amendment down, because not only this subcommittee but the entire committee is aware that for years this is a useless sinecure. The committee ought to vote the amendment down because there is no useful service performed by this individual and will not be unless she can go to the institution, and there is no objection coming from her. It is only objected to by the gentleman in whose office she stays. I do not know how much service she renders him and I do not care, but if we pay a salary of $50 a month to an individual that individual ought to perform some real service for the District, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has always opposed this provision, and a reading of the hearings shows that he had been most strenuous in his opposition to this particular item.

Mr. SISSON. I think that is true.

Mr. WALSH. And the only evidence ever brought before the Committee on Appropriations is the evidence contained by implication in the questions asked by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, who has been upon this subcommittee.

This is a very important institution. It takes care of wayward girls, and there is also one that takes care of wayward boys. This position is the treasurer, provided for by law. She has charge of the accounts of the institution. The hearings, if not on this occasion upon other occasions, show the kind and character of duties that she performs. The gentleman from Mississippi is attempting to insinuate that this estimable lady performs some duties for the chairman of the board of trustees that may have no connection with this institution at all.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I do not object to her doing that. My objection is that she is performing no proper service for this institution for the salary that she receives. I do not imagine that a woman could live on that salary. I do not object to the good lady earning all that she can from other sources. I mean to say and do say that she does nothing to earn $600.

Mr. WALSH. If the law provides the office, it seems to me that the way to eliminate it is to change the law.

Mr. SISSON. The way to do it is to vote this amendment down and the appropriation will cease. There is an easy way to do it, and that is simply by making a motion to repeal the law, under the Holman rule.

Mr. WALSH. I have no doubt the gentleman is in favor of abolishing the institution.

Mr. SISSON I am not in favor of doing anything of the kind.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is not an enthusiastic supporter of either one of these institutions, and anybody who reads the hearings will become convinced of that fact, because he has attacked the appropriations for this purpose year after year.

Mr. SISSON. That statement is untrue, and the gentleman knows it. I am an advocate of this institution, and have done more in the last eight years for these institutions than the gentleman will ever do. I am also an advocate of having this institution dealt with as others are and not given a special privilege or favor just because the president of the board of trustees wants it or desires it. I think these accounts should be audited, just as other accounts are.

Mr. WALSH. There is a provision in the bill to that effect.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; but I want the stable locked before the horse is gone, not after.

Mr. WALSH. That has nothing to do with the auditing of the account.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman had not made the point of order, it would have had. I see he knows nothing about the matter.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman to permit me to submit a question?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The committee left out of the bill the treasurer and, as I understood the gentleman to say, inserted a resident clerk in lieu of the treasurer. The provision for the resident clerk has gone out on the point of order. Was the resident clerk supposed to do the same work that heretofore has been done by the treasurer?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. My understanding is that the same lady was willing to accept this position at $800 and live at the institution and perform some real service. In other words, she would become a clerk and do something for the institution.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Here is what I want to get at. If a resident clerk is needed there, outside of the treasurer, then the provision for that clerk ought to be retained in the bill. If the resident clerk was put in in lieu of the treasurer, and the provision for the resident clerk goes out, it would seem to me that the treasurer ought to go back into the bill.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that the amount of service required would justify both places, and I think the subcommittee will agree with me about that. There has been no request for any additional employees. The anomaly of the situation is that this good lady does not actually handle any money. The money goes into the Treasury, and once every quarter certain accounts are presented by her, and the money is paid to her, and then she pays it out. Then the auditor of the District of Columbia audits the account, after the money is paid, which is not true of any other account carried in this bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Very well; but without some one authorized to perform the duties of treasurer, when the law provides a treasurer, who could pay any of the bills or the salaries?

Mr. SISSON. The whole matter is provided for in another section. The District Commissioners would have the auditor of the District department audit these claims, just as he does all other institutions in the District.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Here is what I want to get at, and the gentleman can probably tell me without very much trouble. The law now provides for a treasurer. The treasurer disburses the funds that are appropriated and I suppose pays the salaries and the bills.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If we leave out the treasurer and make no provision for anyone else to disburse the funds, how will they be able to pay the bills?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption right there?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly, if I can get any information.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will read lines 2 to 7 on page 75, he will find a provision there for the payment of the bills, provided that language is retained in the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes. That, of course, is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. That is true, but I think that if the language had been left as we presented it in the committee, the auditor would have audited the accounts just as other accounts are audited in the Treasury Department, and they would have been presented to the Treasury Department and paid after an actual bona fide audit, under the present system for all other institutions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I want to mildly take exception to what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] said a while ago. I understood him to say that anyone reading the hearings would come to no other conclusion than the conclusion that he himself had come to, or any different conclusion, except possibly the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. I have not only read the hearings but I took part in the conduct of the hearings, and I certainly disagree with the gentleman from Massachusetts—very respectfully.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I was referring only to participation by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I understood the gentleman to say that no person could read the hearings and come to any other conclusion than the one he has come to.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, I did not say any such thing.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman from Massachusetts is the first one within my knowledge to talk about this subject who has come to that conclusion.

No member of the committee subcommittee or the full committee came to any other conclusion than that this matter should be as we have it here; but be that as it may, this matter, to my mind, is thoroughly fixed after hearing all the testimony. This matter in its present condition is an absolute sinecure. We want this lady to perform some service for the District of Columbia, and the only way that we can do it is by adding to her salary and making her become what she ought to be—a resident clerk. Then, on page 75 of this bill, we make a provision so that there will be an actual audit of the money. That provision, I presume, will be stricken out on a point of order, and if it is I think it will be doing a great injustice to this training school; that is my opinion. That provides that the appropriation made for the National Training School for Girls shall be disbursed by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia the same as all other matters are disbursed by the District of Columbia, except this one only, and this is done, in my opinion, because Mr. Brown wants this girl sitting in his private office. I am speaking pretty plainly about it. We came to this conclusion after listening to the testimony for several years. If the point of order is made and sustained, I do not know who shall pay these accounts or how they shall be disbursed; but if the provision remains in the bill, they will be disbursed by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia in the manner now provided by law for expenditures from appropriations for general expenses of the government of the District. That is the way it should be, and at present there is no audit. This lady or girl or whoever she is sits in a private office, so to speak, of Mr. Brown, and is willing to stay there at $600 because she does very little for the District; and if we make the position a resident clerk at $800, some duties will be imposed upon her proper to the position.

Gentlemen of the committee, I sincerely hope, and I am much in earnest, that the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be voted down. If you had heard the testimony, as did the members of the committee, there would not be a dissenting voice.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman say that all the members of the Committee on Appropriations are in favor of this change?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. All whose attention has been called to this matter.

Mr. WALSH. That differs from saying all members. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is not in favor of this change and has opposed it here upon the floor heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Training School for Girls, $57,680: Provided, That on and after July 1, 1920, appropriations made for the National Training School for Girls shall be disbursed by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia in the manner now provided by law for expenditure from appropriations for general expenses of the government of said District.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order on the proviso. The Chair sustains the point of order on the proviso.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will ask the gentleman if his point of order pertains to the whole paragraph?

Mr. WALSH. I made the point of order to the proviso and so stated.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Children's Hospital, $15,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask a question in regard to the Children's Hospital. I notice that there has been a reduction in the amount given to a number of these hospitals. The appropriation for the Children's Hospital especially attracted my attention. What is the explanation for the reduction of this appropriation at this time?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Generally, I will state, based upon the hearing, more children are paid for by their parents owing to the greater prosperity of the District. We have made a very liberal allowance in the matter.

Mr. TILSON. Fifteen thousand dollars will cover all requirements?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Absolutely.

Mr. TILSON. In my judgment, it is one of the most deserving hospitals in the whole city.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And I am proud to say that the people of the District of Columbia seem to be in better condition financially than they have been heretofore, and there has been more ability to pay. That is all there is to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gallinger Municipal Hospital: For continuing the construction of the Gallinger Municipal Hospital, $100,000; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the construction of said hospital and accessory buildings in accordance with approved plans at a limit of cost not to exceed $1,500,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Is not this increasing the limit of cost of this hospital?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is.

Mr. WALSH. How nearly finished is the structure?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It has not even been started.

Mr. WALSH. Well, what is the necessity for the increase?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state to him that the first appropriation——

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman give us the benefit of his observations over here?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will be glad to do so. The first initial authorization of the Gallinger Hospital, after several years contest on the floor, to my personal knowledge, was $500,000 in the calendar year 1917, fiscal year 1918. The commissioners, as I am informed, endeavored to let a contract for that amount of money. They could not. Hence they came before the committee the next year, and had the authorization raised to six hundred and some odd thousand dollars. Again they attempted to let a contract and failed, and they have endeavored frequently to do so, with this increased authorization. At the present time, if this bill passes, they will have an appropriation of $700,000, $600,000 under the previous authorization and $100,000 under this. They came before the committee and, I think, with a good deal of plausibility, based upon the facts, showed that it would be impossible to construct this building or even get a contract for it for less than a million and a half. Your committee, looking the matter over very carefully, decided that owing to the increased cost of everything, while it was an enormous sum, yet were convinced, and I think the whole committee was, because I argued this matter somewhat with them, that a million and a half was the least sum that could be assigned. Therefore, we put the amount in. I have all the figures here, if the gentleman desires to read them over, showing what it will cost to erect this structure.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. If this increased authorization is permitted, is there any expectation that a contract can be awarded in the near future at that figure?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is positive assurance from the best of authority that such will be the case. We have, so to speak, I will say to my friend from Massachusetts, grilled the authorities who have this matter in charge as much as he could if he took a six months' vacation in which to do it.

We are interested in this hospital. They have promised us faithfully to proceed as fast as possible to let that contract now without any further delay.

Mr. WALSH. What authority gives the gentleman that assurance?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The board of commissioners. They have the authority to let these contracts and make them. We have already assurances from these men. As I say, we catechised them, both in the record and out of the record, for not proceeding faster than they had, but they say they attempted to let the contract and that it could not be done, because the cost of labor and material had advanced so rapidly, and I am afraid unless we do it this year it will be $2,000,000 in the next bill.

Mr. WALSH. Very likely it will be that anyhow.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not believe so.

Mr. WALSH. Have they changed their plans at all?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They have, on account of the increased number of insane that will be accommodated there. They have increased the number of beds from 300 to 450. They had to do it in consequence of the increasing number of insane that will be housed there.

Mr. WALSH. So any change or alteration of plans has been along the lines of increasing the cost rather than to bring it within the authorization?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is probably true.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think we ought to increase it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make a point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I reserve it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, there has been a long contest in reference to this hospital or a municipal hospital here, and I understand, as stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], in 1917 the hospital was provided at an authorized limit of cost of $500,000. How much was appropriated at that time I do not recall, but I understood the gentleman from Minnesota to say that the entire amount was appropriated, though I am not sure that I caught him right.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is $600,000 already appropriated.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman may be right, as he usually is. Last year, I think, there was no appropriation made for this hospital. There could not have been but $500,000 appropriated before that. Last year the limit of cost was raised from $500,000 to $603,590. The odd figures show that the District Commissioners had made a very close calculation and estimate as to what this hospital would cost last year, and the committee and Congress, relying upon the estimate of the commissioners, drew the line very fine and authorized the limit of cost of $603,590. That was only a year ago.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state to the gentleman exactly when the appropriations were made and how much they were each year, if he would like to know.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; it may have been made in deficiency bills.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; made right along. The first authorization was $500,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Was that an appropriation?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That year, though, an appropriation of $150,000 was made. Next year the authorization was raised to $603,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The authorization, not the appropriation.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The authorization. Then we proposed $353,590.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not in the last year's bill, did you?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We did in 1918. And here are the figures.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know there are the figures, but that is not the law. I have the law before me.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We gave $100,000 last year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman may be correct, although that is not important——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And we asked for $100,000 more.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This bill carries $100,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That will make it $703,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think if the gentleman looks it up he will find there is not that much money appropriated. However, that has nothing to do with this matter. It seems remarkable there should have been a proposed increase in cost on the same plan from $603,000 a year ago, with estimates carefully made, to $1,500,000 at this time, nearly threefold. How much of that is owing to change of plans?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, there has been no change in the plan in the regular hospital proper, but since the plan was submitted for the last bill the District Commissioners and Board of Charities, and other people, and I believe rightly so——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am very sure the gentleman believed rightly so.

Mr. SISSON. I want to impress the gentleman, if I can, with this argument, that when they first made the suggestion it seemed outrageous to me, because I thought it was too great an increase; but they want to put a pyschopathic ward there where they may take care of the sick who are insane. That must be a building segregated from the others, especially for the violent insane. I was not so thoroughly convinced that they were right about it until we went out there and visited the hospital where they were caring for the insane sick, and when I saw the condition there, and saw those people strapped in bathtubs, and saw what I did there in that insanitary and unhealthy place, I say to my friend that I instantly resolved that so far as I was concerned there would be no objection to building a psychopathic ward. And it is the psychopathic ward that causes the great increase. That was not contemplated in the original plan. There would be an increase, of course, on account of the increased cost of labor even on the original units which they intended to construct.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Mississippi and I sympathize very frequently about a proposition, and I will be willing to take his judgment about this. The gentleman remembers what a contest there was about authorizing a hospital costing $500,000. That having been authorized, before a stroke of work is done on it we are led to increase the cost to $1,500,000. And it may be perfectly natural——

Mr. SISSON. I think that is a very bad case on its face, but when you take into consideration the enormous increase in the cost of labor and material, and then take into consideration that as the authorities decided it was proper to put a psychopathic ward there, and the subcommittee having agreed to it——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman will remember that a few days ago this House was very much stirred up over the question of increasing the cost of a hospital at Chicago from $3,000,000 to a limit of cost of $4,300,000, and it was denounced as outrageous; but here it is proposed to increase the cost threefold—from $500,000 to $1,500,000—although the cases are very similar.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for two minutes. I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to my friend that he realizes the controversy that we had over the hospital originally. Originally there was an estimate for $1,000,000, but after seesawing back and forth between the two Houses it went in in the House at $1,000,000, and it was compromised in conference at $500,000. I never thought that $500,000, even at the old prices, would build the kind and character of hospital that we should have here.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Did this originate in the Senate? I thought it originated in the House.

Mr. SISSON. The name "Gallinger" did originate in the Senate, but the provision for the hospital originated in the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I thought the hospital originated in the Senate before the House took any action on it at all.

Mr. SISSON. No; it originated here. A great fight was made on it in the Senate. Senator Lea, of Tennessee, when it came up in the Senate, took hold of the matter, offered an amendment to change the name from the "Municipal Hospital of the District of Columbia" to the "Gallinger Hospital," and took occasion to pay a warm tribute to the services which Senator Gallinger had rendered to the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. To what language?

Mr. WALSH. To the language from line 21 to line 24, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that it is not within the province of the Committee on Appropriations to report legislation increasing the limit of cost on this hospital, and therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The disbursing officer of the District of Columbia is authorized to advance to the agent of the Board of Children's Guardians, upon requisitions previously approved by the auditor of the District of Columbia and upon such security as may be required of said agent by the commissioners, sums of money not to exceed $400 at any one time, to be used for expenses in placing and visiting children, traveling on official business of the board, and for office and sundry expenses, all such expenditures to be accounted for to the accounting officers of the District of Columbia within one month on itemized vouchers properly approved.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the language beginning with line 20, on page 77, down to and including line 6, on page 78. I desire to ask the chairman of the subcommittee who is in charge of the bill what "traveling" expenses there would be to be paid?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Railroad fare. I think there are 11 different people now traveling, and in consequence of the increased cost of traveling expenses this is necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Why do they have to travel?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Some of these children are in institutions in Maryland and Pennsylvania and several of the adjoining States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; but the language in line 1 of page 78 which precedes the allowance for "traveling expenses" makes provision for the money to be used "for placing and visiting" children.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is exactly it. You have to place them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the appropriation is to be paid for the expenses in "placing and visiting" children, why should you also make an appropriation for "traveling expenses"?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They have to do that in order to place the children. They can not place them all in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; but $400 provided for in line 1, page 78, is to be used in expenses in "placing and visiting" children. It occurs to me that is enough. We ought not to have "traveling" expenses except to place and visit children.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman should cut it down to $300, so far as I am concerned, but I know it will hamper the energies of people who are handling it. There are over 2,000 children in their care, as I understand.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman what particular expenditures the word "sundry" would cover in line 3 of page 78.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not tell the gentleman what is the meaning of the word "sundry." I think the gentleman is a lawyer, and he will understand that the word "sundry" covers almost a multitude of things.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is that intended to be a cover for a "blanket"?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They all have to be audited.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This is a blanket authorization; the auditing does not authorize the money.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. You can not advance any money except upon the authorized appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. On line 22 of page 77 this money is to be advanced upon "requisition" previously approved. By whom is the requisition to be made?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. By the Board of Charities.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But it does not say so.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. All these matters are under their supervision.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The implication there is that it is to be done by some agent, and if the agent and the auditor for the District of Columbia have previously agreed upon the matter it does not go to the board of trustees.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It goes to the agent in charge of it. That is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That being true, I will make the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. On the whole paragraph?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; on the matter contained in lines 20 to 24, on page 77, down to and including line 6, on page 78.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I suggest that the gentleman make it on the whole thing. It will simply confuse matters. If he does not——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will not, I will make it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. You can make it on what you want to, and I will make it on the balance.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order on lines 20 to 24, on page 77, down to and including line 6, on page 78. Is that right?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota care to be heard?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No. It has been there for 15 or 20 years. Still I think it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no law authorizing this language. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, Industrial Home School for Colored Children, $35,000: Provided, That all moneys received at said school, as income from sale of products and from payment of board of instruction, or otherwise, shall be paid over to the commissioners to be expended by them in the support of the school during the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the proviso beginning with line 23, page 78. By this bill $35,000 is appropriated for the support of the Industrial Home School for Colored Children. The appropriation of that $35,000 is made contingent and dependent upon whether or not "all moneys received at said school, as income from sale of products and from payment of board of instruction, or otherwise, shall be paid over to the commissioners to be expended by them in support of the school during the fiscal year 1921." I think that they ought to have this $35,000 regardless of whether or not the commissioners do these things. Therefore I make the point of order against the proviso.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's mind is no doubt made up. I will simply say that they have been getting this money for the last 15 or 20 years under exactly this language. There is no change in the language at all. But it may be, and undoubtedly is, subject to a point of order. Therefore I shall not go to the trouble of making any further explanation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They may have been in good enough luck in the past to get the money, but I do not think it ought to be jeopardized in the future by this condition which is attached to it. It ought to be made certain that they are going to get it. Therefore I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the commissioners are authorized, under such regulations as they may prescribe, to sell the surplus products of the said workhouse and the said reformatory, and all moneys derived from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia: Provided, That a report of the amounts derived from such sales shall be made annually in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the language contained in lines 4 to 11, both inclusive, on page 84.

Mr. Chairman, a large sum of money is appropriated under the language which precedes that, and the entire appropriation by the proviso is made dependent upon whether or not a report of the amount derived from such sales shall be made annually in the Book of Estimates. To me it seems preposterous that so many hundred thousands of dollars should be appropriated and then finally made dependent upon a trifling little thing like that. If I may be permitted to do so, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order to all except the proviso.

Mr. WALSH. I renew the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The point of order being reserved, Mr. Chairman, as I have the right to make it whenever the opportunity comes, I will yield the floor.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman can make it at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do, if the Chair please. This is the same matter which we have attempted to thrash out and explain to the gentleman from Kentucky several times. Therefore I do not care to make any further explanation, because my experience has been that when a point of order is reserved argument is useless. Hence, I will admit that it is subject to a point of order, and will let the gentleman make the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order to the word "hereafter" in line 4.

The CHAIRMAN. Just to the word "hereafter"?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist upon his point of order to the word "hereafter" being disposed of now?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I make it on the word "hereafter," and of course I think there ought to be a ruling on that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is subject to the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make the point of order on all the language contained between lines 4 and 11, both inclusive, on page 84.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not. It is subject to a point of order, and explanations are useless.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky and also of the gentleman from Massachusetts. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of troops other than Government employees, to be disbursed under the authority and direction of the commanding general, $10,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman from Minnesota answer a question with reference to this item, no point of order being reserved? This says:

For pay of troops other than Government employees, to be disbursed under the authority and direction of the commanding general.

What particular troops does that include—"other than Government employees"?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It includes everybody in the militia of the District who are not employees of the Government, if they get leave of absence.

Mr. WALSH. If they happen to be working in one of the Government departments and join the militia and get a leave of absence to go off to drill, they can not draw any pay. Is that the idea?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Their Government pay continues.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the motion to strike out the last word.

The Clerk read as follows:

REFUND OF ERRONEOUS COLLECTIONS.

To enable the commissioners, in any case where special assessments, school tuition charges, rents, fees, or collections of any character have been erroneously covered into the Treasury to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts, to refund such erroneous payments, wholly or in part, including the refunding of fees paid for building permits authorized by the District of Columbia appropriation act approved March 2, 1911, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for such refunds of payments made within the past three years.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. I do so merely to ask a question—why this is limited to three years? This three-year provision is carried in every bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That hereafter all per diem employees and day laborers of the District of Columbia who have been regularly employed for 15 working days next preceding such days as are legal holidays in the District of Columbia, and whose employment continues through and beyond said legal holidays, shall be granted such leave of absence with pay as is granted the regular annual employees of the District of Columbia for said legal holidays.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on section 5 that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It has been carried for the last three or four years. However, I know that it is subject to a point of order.

The Clerk read the last section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 8. That all appropriations of money to provide for the payment of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid, from and after July 1, 1920, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that such revenues shall be sufficient therefor and the remainder shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That the amounts to pay the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of the District of Columbia shall be paid one-half out of the revenues of the said District and one-half out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on section 8.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I admit, Mr. Chairman, that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13266) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment known as the Mudd amendment, where three streets were put in at a cost of $120,000.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

There was no demand for a separate vote on any other amendment.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Mudd amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 12, after the figures "$1,800," insert the following: "And including repairs to Bladensburg Road from Fifteenth and H Streets NE. to the District line, at a total cost not to exceed $51,100; and including Alabama Avenue from Pennsylvania Avenue to Ridge Road and Bowen Road, between Ridge Road and the District line, at a total cost not to exceed $21,000; and including Central Avenue from Bennings Road to the District line, at a total cost not to exceed $39,000; and including Thirty-eighth Street SE., between Bowen and Suitland Roads, at a total cost not to exceed $9,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON) there were—ayes 46, noes 17.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. Clearly there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATIONAL MARINE EXPOSITION.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 148, authorizing the Department of Commerce to participate in the National Marine Exposition to be held in New York in April, 1920, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 148.

Whereas the National Marine League of the United States is to hold an exposition in New York next April, for the purpose of demonstrating to the public the needs of the maritime industries of the United States and the means by which the interests of such maritime industries may be encouraged and promoted; and

Whereas it is believed that participation by the Department of Commerce in such exposition may tend to promote, develop, and foster the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be authorized, in his discretion, to cooperate with the managers of such exposition and to furnish such exhibits from the various bureaus and branches in his department as, in his judgment, may be of value in the performance of the functions of the department: Provided, That such cooperation and the furnishing of such exhibits shall be without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that this is not to cost the United States Government anything.

Mr. ESCH. The resolution provides that such cooperation and furnishing of such exhibits shall be without expense to the United States. The exposition begins in New York on the 12th of April, and in order that the Government may make its exhibit the resolution should be adopted without delay.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Inasmuch as that is the only thing I have heard of in the last 12 months that did not cost the Government anything, I shall not object.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, who is going to pay this expense?

Mr. ESCH. The expense is paid by the exposition authorities. They derive their revenue by selling space in the Grand Central Palace in New York.

Mr. WINGO. What particular thing is expected to be done by the Department of Commerce?

Mr. ESCH. It will make an exhibit of the Bureau of Navigation, of the Lighthouse Service, of the Life Saving Service, and the Coast Guard Service. The exhibits are all prepared, and all that is required is shipment to New York.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman refers to the material exhibits?

Mr. ESCH. That is all.

Mr. WINGO. I presume that some of the force of these different services will be detailed there for duty?

Mr. ESCH. No; that is not the understanding. The exhibits are self-explanatory. Some of them can be seen to-day in the National Museum. Tablets and placards are over the exhibits, so that there is no need of a demonstrator.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is confident that all the participation of the Department of Commerce will be the material exhibits?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. And there will be no detailed force there?

Mr. ESCH. No. It will be participated in by the Secretary of Commerce, by the Secretary of the Interior, by the Chief of the Shipping Board. They are all on the program of the exposition.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, just how does the gentleman's committee get jurisdiction of this resolution?

Mr. ESCH. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has jurisdiction of the Life-Saving Service, of the Lighthouse Service, and of the Coast Guard Service. Those three services are to make exhibits at the exposition.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. And does the gentleman think his committee has any jurisdiction over the matter of participation in expositions?

Mr. ESCH. We did not question our jurisdiction. The resolution was referred to the committee, and we acted, because prompt action was necessary.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I am wondering why the resolution was not referred to the Committee on Expositions?

Mr. ESCH. I do not know.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I desire to state that the committee is functioning and has a clerk and is holding sessions and meetings.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Who is the National Marine League?

Mr. ESCH. The National Marine League is composed of the Pacific Steamship Co., the American International Corporation, the Barber Steamship Lines, H. S. Borden, the Youngstown Sheet & Steel Tube Co., the Oxford Paper Co., the Worthington Pump & Machinery Co., and many other large industries.

Mr. WALSH. Is it an organization assembled together for the purpose of holding this exposition, in order that different industries might have an opportunity to advertise their goods, and they want a little Government sanction?

Mr. ESCH. It is not that, necessarily. I think it is really under the auspices of the National Marine League, an institution which is developing an interest in our merchant marine.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the last clause in the resolution that such cooperation and the furnishing of such exhibits shall be without expense to the United States, is it not a fact that these three different divisions of the Government which he has mentioned will necessarily have numerous employees of the Government drawing salaries from the Government utilizing their time in preparing these exhibits? Is it not also true that their time, which will be lost, is not taken into consideration when it is said that the exposition shall be without expense to the Government?

Mr. ESCH. This exposition will not entail the employment of any additional force whatsoever.

Mr. BLANTON. But it will take the services of certain employees whose duties now require them to attend to other matters than preparing exhibits?

Mr. ESCH. I understand not. It merely means the shipment of these exhibits to New York.

Mr. BLANTON. They have to be prepared.

Mr. ESCH. They are prepared now.

Mr. BLANTON. And somebody must accompany them representing the Government?

Mr. ESCH. They do not need to be accompanied. They are shipped by freight.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is not the case, it is the first Government exhibit of which I have any knowledge that has not had some Government employee accompany it.

Mr. ESCH. I am sure there is no additional expenditure entailed upon the Government Treasury by reason of the participation in this exposition.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object, but I am sure we will realize that time will be lost on the part of the employees of the Government.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, while I am not inclined to want to object to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Committee, which seems to cover a great amount of ground in this House, I would like to inquire just what authority they have to consider and by what authority this bill was referred to that committee, in view of the fact that it conducts a Government agency and lends it to the exposition?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state it was referred in the matter of routine business, and the Chair has no knowledge of why it was referred. Of course, having been once referred, the committee has jurisdiction.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I am of the impression it was improperly referred.

The SPEAKER. That may be.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is it too late to raise that point of order in the House?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I could object and move to rerefer it, but I do not want to be jealous about the matter.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. I will.

Mr. BEE. The Department of Commerce is of the opinion that this exhibit is going to be of material benefit; that is their belief, is it?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; that is indicated by the letter which the Secretary of Commerce sent to the committee.

Mr. BEE. And it will be of national benefit, in the judgment of the Department of Commerce?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Then I want to ask the chairman of the committee, what is the intense fear that the Government of the United States might spend a few dollars in getting this exhibit properly put in New York City at this exposition? I do not see any objection, if we do have to expend a few dollars, if it will produce the result anticipated.

Mr. ESCH. Nor do I.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the preamble.

The question was taken, and the preamble was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. ESCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING REVENUE ACT—PRINT PAPER.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12260, to change the tariff rates on print paper, and pending that——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, member of the Committee on Ways and Means, moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12260——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And pending that motion, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if we can agree on time for general debate. Has he anything to suggest in reference to it?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I suggest 30 minutes on a side, if that is agreeable. I have not heard of any general request for time on this side.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think 30 minutes on a side will be agreeable; there has been no great demand on this side, and I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be limited to 1 hour, 30 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] and 30 minutes by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate be confined to 1 hour, 30 minutes to be controlled by himself and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Tennessee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12260, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12260, a bill to revise the tariff on print paper, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12260) to amend section 600 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. WALSH. I think it ought to be read and I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 600 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 600. Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for the printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued above 8 cents per pound, 12 per cent ad valorem: Provided, however, That if any country, dependency, Province, or other subdivision of government shall impose any export duty, export license fee, or other charge of any kind whatsoever (whether in the form of additional charge or license fee or otherwise) upon printing paper, wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, there shall be imposed upon printing paper, values above 8 cents per pound, when imported either directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, Province, or other subdivision of government, an additional duty equal to the amount of the highest export duty or other export charge imposed by such country, dependency, Province, or other subdivision of government, upon either printing paper or upon an amount of wood pulp or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp necessary to manufacture such printing paper.

"Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade paper, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued at not above 8 cents per pound, decalcomania paper not printed."

SEC. 2. That this act shall expire by limitation at the end of two years from the date of its passage, and section 600 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," shall again become operative in its stead.

The committee amendment was read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, strike out "two years" and insert "one year."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that as the gentleman from Tennessee is the author of the bill that he open debate upon it.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this bill does not propose any new substantive legislation. It only seeks to carry out the purpose and intent of existing law. In 1913 when the last general tariff law was enacted provisions were inserted to the effect that wood pulp and print paper as defined in this bill when imported at a value of more than 2½ cents per pound should be subject to an import duty of 12 per cent. At that time the import value of those products was substantially below 2½ cents per pound with the result that both classes of imports came in free of duty. That situation went along until 1916, when the import price of those products had either reached or was in the act of reaching 2½ cents per pound. The next step was then taken with respect to modifying the application of this 12 per cent tariff rate, which was to strike out the 2½ cents per pound and insert 5 cents a pound wherever it appeared in these provisions of the revenue act of 1913. By this action these products which I have described were still permitted to come into this country free of the 12 per cent duty so long as the import value did not pass 5 cents a pound. That situation proceeded unto the present time. The situation now is that some contract prices of Canadian concerns with our American newspapers and other publishers is being or will be raised from its present rate of below 5 cents a pound to not less than 5 and perhaps somewhat beyond 5 cents per pound. That will make the 12 per cent tariff duty applicable to all such imports. At this time a small but substantial amount of these products is coming in from Scandinavia and they are increasing somewhat in quantity, but the scarcity of print paper in this country and throughout the world is such that a severe injury is being or about to be inflicted upon the smaller and other newspapers of this country which buy their paper in our domestic spot market.

I say this upon the strength of the statement of a number of newspaper publishers. They say that the spot market in this country, when the pulp and print paper tariff of 12 per cent applies somewhat generally to imports, will be just about 12 per cent higher than it otherwise would be, and that the suspension of this 12 per cent during the present period of scarcity and of rapidly increasing prices is absolutely necessary unless it is desired to give to those who control the spot market the opportunity of keeping it on an average of 12 per cent higher than it would otherwise be. This bill was originally introduced to suspend the operation of this 12 per cent tariff primarily during this period of extreme scarcity and rapidly increasing high prices, and it was made to run two years, but the committee has reported an amendment, virtually unanimously, to strike out "two" and confine it to one year in its operation. I have now stated the substance of the proposition which the bill contains as I understand it from such information as I can get.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What percentage of the paper is coming into this country at the present time? Can the gentleman tell me?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman frankly, not expecting the bill to come up at this particular time, I left my figures and statistics over in my office. But, of course, the principal portion of wood pulp and print paper is imported.

Mr. SNELL. What immediate effect do you expect this will have on the newsprint-paper market, for instance?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. As I just undertook to explain—and perhaps I did not make myself clear to the gentleman—and I want to repeat again what the American Newspaper Publishers' Association officials and others told me——

Mr. SNELL. Does it mean 12 per cent decrease in the price of paper in this country right away?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. They say in the present situation the spot market is somewhere from 10 to 11 and a fraction cents per pound; that if this tariff rate is made to apply to import values, those who fix the spot market in this country will simply raise it 12 per cent, with the result that it will stand during the next one or two years, during this period of scarcity and high prices, at substantially 12 per cent higher than it otherwise would be.

Mr. SNELL. The point I had in mind was whether newsprint paper would be immediately reduced 12 per cent in this country if we passed this bill?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I can only make the statement that I have made, with this addition, that whenever import values rise beyond 5 cents a pound, to a general extent, then the 12 per cent tariff will be a factor to practically its full amount in fixing the spot-market price.

Mr. SNELL. I understand that part, but I would like to know what information has come to the committee to lead them to believe that the price of news paper will be immediately reduced practically 12 per cent?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I want to say this to the gentleman in equal candor, that the scarcity of printing paper throughout the world, as I understand it, is becoming more severe every week and the prices are going up all the time; so that if it should be possible by suspending this duty for 12 months to keep the price from going up 12 per cent or more, next week, perhaps, certainly next month, it would be a saving during the operation of the bill of substantially 12 per cent to those who may buy in the spot market in this country.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate what the gentleman said, and I would be willing to have people buy paper cheaper, but what I am wondering is whether it will have the effect desired or not, or whether the people that are manufacturing it will just raise the price of paper so much that it really will not have any effect on the price of paper in this market?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I think it follows from the statement of facts that I have offered, that this rapidly increasing value of this product, both the import value and the value on the spot market, which is nearly double the import price, will have the inevitable effect to save in purchases from now on substantially a 12 per cent margin where the purchases are made in the spot market.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any other information on this except what came from the newspaper publishers?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Only the general information from the Customs Division and the Federal Trade Commission in regard to the general scarcity and in regard to increase in price, which is very rapid.

Mr. SNELL. I am going to ask one more question. That is, what the average price of paper was that was being brought into this country for printing purposes at this time?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. As I said at the outset, the information I have is that, beginning on the 1st of April, some of the quarterly contracts that Canadian concerns make with our domestic purchasers will be raised from 4 and a fraction cents to not less than 5, and that the price is bounding upward every time a new contract is made over there.

Mr. SNELL. Do you think that this new bill will affect the incoming contracts?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. It is primarily to keep the spot market in this country, from now on, substantially 12 per cent lower than it otherwise would be, and also to carry out the intent of existing law.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As a matter of fact, no paper has come in so far that has as high a valuation as 5 per cent.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Not from Canada. It has been around 5, as to a small amount from Scandinavia.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So practically this 12 per cent has not operated, but it is anticipated it will very shortly operate.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. About how much is it estimated the Government will lose in revenue if this bill becomes a law?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Well, the amount of revenue——

Mr. KITCHIN. It will lose nothing, because we have collected nothing so far under that 12 per cent, because it has been under 5 cents and around—the imports.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I was going to say to the gentleman what I said in substance at the outset, that this is not new law. It simply carries out the present law as it has been for several years, and that is to maintain on the free list such articles of wood pulp and print paper as are defined in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has used 12 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] has very correctly stated the purpose and object of the bill. I may, however, add a few words to what the gentleman has said. It has for some time been the policy on either side of this House not to put a tariff on print paper—that is, paper used for newspaper print—and the purpose of this bill is to continue that policy.

As the gentleman from Tennessee has stated, practically all the newspaper print paper that has come in has come in at a rate less than 5 cents, so that we have received no revenue from it. The demand for print paper, however, at this time is ascending by leaps and bounds. It is not necessary to state to gentlemen in this House who no doubt have received complaints from the country newspapers, as well as the large newspapers that have their own factories, that at times it is impossible for them to obtain all the paper they desire, and that it is only with the greatest difficulty that they can get paper enough to print their editions from day to day and from week to week, and so on. Under these circumstances, of course, if print paper goes any higher than 5 cents the inevitable result will be that the 12 per cent duty would be added to the already exorbitant price that is now being charged. Print paper is now being sold at rates that seem to me to be out of all reason and extortionate, although I am not able to give the cost of manufacturing.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Has the pulp provision applied as yet to any paper brought into this country?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not to any newspaper print paper, not of any consequence.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As I understand, most of the paper that is imported from Canada now is imported under contract?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And there is no tariff because the price is less than 5 cents?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is considerable paper—I say considerable, more or less—coming in from Scandinavia. Probably there will be more, not under contract, which would probably be above 5 cents.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the expectation, that the importations from Scandinavia will increase, as they have large forests suitable for the manufacture of wood paper and excellent water-power facilities.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This might help the importation of paper from Scandinavia and help to relieve the shortage here.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the purpose of the bill. The price already is far out of reason, and far beyond anything that has ever been anticipated.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. As I understand it, it is to relieve the people who buy in small quantities in the spot market?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the special object of it. Some of the big newspapers, like the Chicago Tribune and others, have their own mills and will not be affected by this bill.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. At the present time the paper now offered in the spot market is all under contract and controlled by a limited number of people. Is not that true?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think that is substantially correct.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. This bill will not change that situation at all, will it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know that I fully understand the gentleman's question. Evidently I did not understand his former question.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. What I mean is this: Will it not be true in the future, as it has been in the past, that this imported paper will come in under contract by our domestic purchasers and that they will still control the market as they do now?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not think that is quite correct. This paper that comes in from Scandinavia, as I understand it, does not come in under contract. It figures on the free market. There is also a small quantity that comes in from Canada that is sold in the open market. The most of it is sold to the jobbers, and the jobbers, it is claimed, owing to the great scarcity of paper, have put it up to the very highest notch and make as much profit as possible.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. There will be no protection in case the jobbers wished to increase the price if this 12 per cent should be taken off, they having control of the market, as they do now, so that it might result in an increased income to those who are already controlling the spot market. Is that possible in this case?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That would be true if the spot market were all under contract, so that they could be certain of getting it, but it is not in that form.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. As I understand it, the committee believes that the present rates asked for by the jobbers and the importers are out of all reason, extravagant, and really extortionate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is more my individual opinion than any expression on the part of the committee.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. There is no way to reach that proposition by legislation, is there?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. The committee will not be able to decrease the great demand for paper that exists at this time or immediately increase the production of paper.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The committee would not consider fixing a maximum price on print paper if it would insure that the small buyer would get it at a fair rate?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Unfortunately we are not able to do that on account of the fact that the greater part of our supply comes from abroad, and, of course, we could not fix the price in a foreign country.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I am going on the assumption that we already import at half the cost that is charged to the man who buys in small quantities. An extension of the Lever Act to cover paper would really solve the problem, would it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not think it is so easily done as that.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. We, of course, all know what our experience has been in fixing prices. They have usually been lowered. I was wondering if there was a specific method by which the price of print paper could be lowered.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If paper can be imported in large quantities at 5 cents a pound, why is the price still 13 cents in this country? What is the explanation?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The most of this paper that is imported at 5 cents a pound, or less, as I understand it, is paper received under contracts that were made a long time ago. The principal cause of the high price is that paper is so scarce that people pay anything that is asked to get it. This gives an opportunity for extortion.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The price has gone up from a cent and a half in 1915 until in the beginning of 1919 it was 6 cents, and it is now advanced to 7 cents within the year 1919, out of all proportion to the cost of labor and transportation.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to answer that question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The great majority of newsprint paper is not sold in this country at 12 cents or 13 cents a pound.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. What is sold not under contract is, as I understand it.

Mr. SNELL. The great majority of it is under contract. The large papers buy their paper under contracts for one, two, and three years. A comparatively small quantity of spot paper is on the market for sale each year, and there is such a demand for that paper that they have raised the price out of all proportion, as compared with their contracts. The great majority of the paper is not sold for anything like the prices that Members here and other people seem to think it is.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It is if you go out into the market to buy it.

Mr. SNELL. If you go into the market to buy spot paper, you have got to pay a big price.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Suppose a contract expires.

Mr. SNELL. Contracts are not renewed for any such large price as that, big contracts for four or five years.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I hold in my hand a publication which states that you can not go into the market and buy it for a less price than that.

Mr. SNELL. Notwithstanding what that says, I think I know that that is not the condition on large contracts.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I am assured by reliable publishers that this is a reliable statement.

Mr. SNELL. I am sure that is not the fact.

Mr. KITCHIN. I should like to suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and also to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] that some time ago Mr. Colver, of the Federal Trade Commission, testified before our committee that of the domestic print paper used in the United States about 90 per cent was under contract by the large papers at 4½ cents a pound, but that the smaller papers throughout the United States which did not have contracts were compelled to pay as high at that time as 9 and 10 cents a pound. I understand it is higher now.

Mr. SNELL. My information is that that is practically the exact situation, and I think I know something about it.

Mr. KITCHIN. This bill is rather in anticipation of advancing prices. It does not affect prices right now, because the print paper that is coming in from Canada is coming in at a little less than 5 cents a pound, practically none of it for as much as 5 cents a pound; but for the last two or three years it has been advancing from time to time, and the committee anticipated that in less than 60 days after the passage of this act the import price of print paper might go to 6 or 7 or 8 cents a pound. This anticipates that, and therefore it lifts the limit of the free list from 5 cents to 8 cents; that is, that paper not in excess of 8 cents per pound shall be admitted free. If it goes up to 6 cents within the next 30 days, unless this bill is passed, then the paper that is imported will cost 12 per cent in addition to that; but if this bill is passed, lifting the limit to 8 cents, then until it goes to 8 cents it will be on the free list. The papers that are not under contract will get the benefit of it and those under contract made hereafter will get the benefit of the 12 per cent.

Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] wanted to know how Congress could put down the price of paper. I am going to tell him one way, and the only practical way, in which it can put down the price of paper. This is a reasonable way, and I understand that a great many of the larger newspapers have advocated this proposition, that the Government limit the number of pages of a daily newspaper that can be sent through the mails as second-class matter, a daily paper to 16 or 20 pages and a Sunday paper, say, to 50 or 60 pages. That will put upon the market thousands of tons of other print paper. It will enlarge the supply. Some of the Sunday papers now will run from 80 to 100 pages, and some as high as 150 pages. I am not now advocating this proposition, but I am suggesting that it is the only practical way in which the Government can reduce the price of paper. That is, it will make a larger supply by cutting off the immense demand. Some of the larger papers that have been printing from 25 to 30 pages daily and from 80 to 125 pages on Sunday have said that they are perfectly willing to have the Government limit the number of pages that can be sent through the mails as second-class matter.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman will recall that Mr. Colver stated before the committee that that could be accomplished indirectly by repealing the excess-profit tax. If I recall correctly, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] did not agree to that.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Ohio will remember that neither the gentleman from North Carolina nor the gentleman from Ohio nor any other member of the committee agreed with Mr. Colver. He knew about as much about the excess-profit tax as he knows about a great many other things concerning which he has undertaken to instruct the American public, and that is absolutely nothing. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. Is not that what causes this extra advertising?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. I have heard that——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman from North Carolina would like some time, I will yield it to him.

Mr. KITCHIN. Please yield me five more minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Reserving the remainder of my time, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have heard that statement, too—that the excess-profit tax encourages extravagance; that parties who pay excess-profit tax will advertise more, that instead of paying the Government the excess-profit tax they will take the money and pay it to newspapers and magazines in order to advance the interests of their business and charge it to expense account. This may be true in some cases. After hearing that, I examined into the matter. I found that—taking the Saturday Evening Post, for example—the automobile manufacturers, and the Standard Oil Co., and the American Tobacco Co., and many others are not taking any more space than they did before we had the excess-profits tax; but there are several other concerns which never advertised in the Saturday Evening Post that are now advertising in it, not because of the excess-profit tax, but because their business is prosperous and expanding, and it pays them to advertise. Corporations generally are making more money in every way, and every concern—corporate firm or individual—is making more money, and they are putting their business before the public through the medium of advertisements. Now, take my little town. I do not think there is a merchant there that pays any excess-profit tax; that is, there is no corporation that is in the retail mercantile business. Individuals and partnerships do not have to pay excess-profits tax. I notice now in that little paper there are three or four times more advertisments by the merchants than there were in 1914, not on account of the excess-profits tax, because they pay none, not being incorporated, but on account of the improvement and prosperity in business. You will find that is the case everywhere. For instance, take the want columns in the Star and the Post. Perhaps there are three or four times more than there were three years ago, and yet none of these people who put advertisements in the want colum are paying excess-profits tax. Business is greater and business people want to advertise more.

As the gentleman from Ohio said, Mr. Colver said that the excess-profits tax was responsible for the high cost of living. I believe he stated that in a speech in this city, also in one in Boston, that for every dollar of excess-profits tax the Government collected the consumer paid $10; that the manufacturer for every dollar he paid in excess profit added $10 to the consumer. Well, we collected about $2,000,000,000 in excess-profits tax in 1918. That would make $20,000,000,000, according to Mr. Colver, of the Federal Trade Commission, paid in addition to the profit on labor, on raw materials, and the profit of the turnover; and yet the total amount of profits made by all of the corporations in the United States did not exceed $10,500,000,000, according to the returns made to the Internal Revenue Bureau! [Laughter.]

Mr. PARRISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. Is that the same gentleman who said that it cost such a large per cent to collect the internal-revenue tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; he stated in his speech that it cost the Government 50 per cent to collect the excess-profits tax; that is, for every dollar of excess-profits tax the Government collected it cost the Government 50 cents. The fact is that it cost the Government less than one-half of 1 per cent instead of 50 per cent. The total collection of the income tax, estate tax, excess-profits tax, and excise tax, and all other internal taxes was about $21,000,000, while Mr. Colver, of the Federal Trade Commission, puts it at $1,000,000,000 to collect the excess-profits tax alone. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Am I right in assuming that the gentleman from North Carolina does not think very much of Mr. Colver?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, I do think a great deal of him. [Laughter.] But very little of his opinion on excess-profits tax and his judgment on most public matters. I think he could fill most any position more creditably than the one he now holds. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman state who appointed him to this high and responsible position?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I can not. I presume somebody did. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman any information as to the budget of these large advertisers at the present time compared with the prewar times or before the excess-profits tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. SNELL. If he could get that information, he would know definitely whether there was anything in the statement that the excess-profits tax was the cause of so much advertising.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, this bill increasing the limit under which paper shall be admitted free from 5 to 8 cents is simply a bill to accomplish what was originally intended. I am a newspaper publisher, although I am not in very active service. We have never yet paid anything like 5 cents a pound for paper, but I know a great many small papers in the smaller towns in my district that do not use paper in rolls, but in the flat bundles, that have to go into the spot market occasionally, and have sometimes paid 7 or 8 cents a pound. I have known some of them to be so hard pressed that they have come to our people and had us cut our waste into squares so that they could use it to print upon. That would give you a good idea of the scarcity.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. I want to supplement what the gentleman has said by saying that I have received letters from publishers in my district saying that they have received from the paper brokers quotations for paper at 10½ and 11 cents a pound.

Mr. PLATT. I think that is undoubtedly true. When a man goes into the spot market for paper he is in a serious strait. A newspaper has to come out every day or every week and it can not be postponed. A newspaper man will do almost anything rather than lose an issue. Consequently, they are at some time at the mercy of the broker who controls paper for immediate delivery.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. HARRISON. I have a letter from the International Paper Co. This is what they say, and I would like to know if the gentleman has any information in regard to it:

> The newsprint paper industry is being crowded out of the United States into Canada. The Canadian Government gives assistance in many ways. The United States Government has done everything possible to suppress the news industry. Canadian paper comes in free of duty, and the Canadian Government is permitted to cut off the wood—our raw material—for which we have contracted. No newsprint mill of importance has been built in the United States in 10 years. Canadian mills are multiplying rapidly. We are being forced to build in Canada to protect our wood interests.

Mr. PLATT. There is some truth in that. A good many claim that we ought not to have put print paper on the free list. There is a good argument for protecting it.

Mr. HARRISON. The letter continues:

> The plain fact is that unless our Government acts to protect the industry within the States it will pass wholly into a foreign country beyond the jurisdiction of our Government.

Mr. PLATT. Is the gentleman making a protection argument?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I am not, but what I want to know is whether the committee realizes it——

Mr. PLATT. It is a pretty good argument for protection; but, as a matter of fact, it is on the free list below 5 cents, and the 8-cent limit of this bill is not as high as 5 cents seemed at the time of the enactment of the present law.

Mr. HARRISON. The trouble is that an embargo has been placed on Canadian pulp, which prevents the paper manufacturers here from getting their raw material.

Mr. PLATT. That is true, I believe, of one Province in Canada.

Mr. HARRISON. There is a bill pending which has as its object to force the Canadian Government to permit that raw material to come in.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] is a printer. I have been to his establishment, and I know that he uses a lot of paper. I believe he knows what he is talking about when he talks about price, and I want to ask him if he feels in his heart, if this bill becomes a law, that it will decrease the price of paper to the man using paper in the amount that the gentleman does?

Mr. PLATT. I doubt considerably whether it will make any difference to people who use paper in rolls. Our prices have never yet gotten up to 5 cents, and I should think it would be some time before they would; but I know that other publishers are paying more than 5 cents for paper now.

Mr. SNYDER. Does it not look to the gentleman as though this might be an invitation to the paper makers in Canada to raise the price to 8 cents?

Mr. PLATT. I think it hardly could be taken that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PLATT. May I have one minute more?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute more to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PLATT. I want to say in connection with what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] said that there is a very general feeling among the newspaper publishers that the excess-profits tax does have considerable to do with the large advertising patronage. Not only are new concerns advertising who never advertised very much, but older concerns are advertising in all sorts of newspapers that they never used before. The excess-profits tax acts as a cost-plus proposition in time of peace. Anyone who has anything to sell can put anything over on the public. The people, or at least many people, are buying very recklessly, without regard to price, and in order to avoid excess-profits taxes extra expenses are created and charged off on the public. I have no complaint to make, because I am one of those who profit to a small extent from it.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman must have a personal interest in this bill.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no.

Mr. SNYDER. What does the gentleman expect it will do to him—raise or lower his price?

Mr. PLATT. I do not believe it will make much difference. That is, I doubt whether newsprint by contract in rolls will go much above 5 cents; but of course it might.

Mr. SNYDER. If it will not make any difference, what is the use of it?

Mr. PLATT. The bill simply continues the present policy, and is a help to the smaller publishers.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. Why has the committee placed this figure at 8 cents a pound?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman think it ought to be placed at another sum?

Mr. STEENERSON. I would say that the Post Office Committee sent out questionnaires to the publishers throughout the United States on this subject of print paper, and we have received a large number of letters in respect to the consumption of paper and the price they have to pay. In nearly every instance the price is more than 8 cents, which they are required to pay, and it runs up to 11½ and 12 cents.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman forgets that the price they are paying is the jobber's price; that this 8 cents is the import price, which would be very much less than that. The import prices have never gotten up to any such figure as that. In fact, as yet they are much below it. That is the reason why we did not take into consideration these extortionate figures which jobbers sometimes ask.

Mr. STEENERSON. Another remarkable fact that appears from these communications is that publishers are unable to buy from the manufacturers of paper. They all have to deal with brokers. It seems to me there must be a concert of action on the part of the producers of paper not to deal directly with the consumers, but to deal through brokers, thereby escaping the charge of profiteering.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am inclined to think the gentleman is correct, and that it might well be occasion for action on the part of the Department of Justice, but, of course, the gentleman can see that we could not do anything about that in this bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. I was thinking this 8 cents a pound would bring in paper that was beyond the price of those now buying paper.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The discussion has developed the fact that the small country newspaper publisher is probably not going to be benefited very much by this legislation. He will still have to pay high prices for print paper—prices which are rapidly increasing and may soon be prohibitory.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that if anybody is benefited by the legislation, it will be the small newspaper man, and he is the one that we are trying to benefit. We merely wanted to fix the law so that there will be no tariff on newspaper print.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I would like to see the committee devise some means to reduce the price of paper to the country newspaper. The Government uses a vast amount of paper. It is a fact that neither the National nor the State Governments can function without paper. The States are furnishing free textbooks for the schools and the Government is furnishing free textbooks in the District of Columbia. It is paper everywhere. Paper is one of the necessary elements in the educational forces of the country. Why should not the Government in this emergency devise a method that would get this paper and distribute it to publishers at a price that would enable them to continue their publications? The Government has found it expedient and proper to come to the rescue when other exigencies arose. Why should it ignore a problem so grave as the one relating to print paper? It is not fair that a situation should exist where the big dailies get paper for 4 cents while the country publisher has to pay from 11 to 12 cents per pound.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that there is just one way in the long run by which the price of paper is going to be reduced, and that is to have more paper factories built and operated, but it takes a year or more——

Mr. SNELL. Three.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I accept the correction; the gentleman is right. It takes practically three years to construct a print-paper factory on a scale to manufacture it economically.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the Chairman how this bill is being read?

The CHAIRMAN. It is being read by paragraphs.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I wish to offer an amendment at that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph proposed to be amended has not been read.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I thought that was the first section. However, it is immaterial to me, and whatever the Chairman suggests is proper.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 600 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 600. Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for the printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued above 8 cents per pound, 12 per cent ad valorem: Provided, however, That if any country, dependency, Province, or other subdivision of government shall impose any export duty, export license fee, or other charge of any kind whatsoever (whether in the form of additional charge or license fee or otherwise) upon printing paper, wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, there shall be imposed upon printing paper, values above 8 cents per pound, when imported either directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, Province, or other subdivision of government, an additional duty equal to the amount of the highest export duty or other export charge imposed by such country, dependency, Province, or other subdivision of government, upon either printing paper or upon an amount of wood pulp or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp necessary to manufacture such printing paper."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask that it be read by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade paper, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued at not above 8 cents per pound, decalcomania paper not printed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the first paragraph a new paragraph, as follows:

"SEC. 600. That paragraph 322, Schedule M, and paragraph 567 of the free list of the act entitled 'An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenues for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved October 3, 1913, be amended so that the same shall read as follows."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Where does that come in?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Between lines 5 and 6, page 1.

Mr. SNELL. What does that do?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will kindly wait a moment, I will explain. This bill applies in a rather peculiar way. It is an amendment to an amendment of another act. It is an amendment to section 600 of the revenue law of 1916, which amended paragraph 322 of Schedule M of the former tariff law and paragraph 567 of the free list.

Mr. SNELL. I know all about it now. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This amendment really is merely a formal one. If it is adopted, as I assume it will be, the numbering of the next paragraph will be changed, and it is necessary to show where this paragraph properly comes in. The second paragraph, which is now improperly marked section 600, is really paragraph 322, Schedule M. The next paragraph, beginning with line 18 of the second page, is really paragraph 567 of the free list, but without this definition which we are now putting in, without that numbering, nobody would ever know it was from the free list. If gentlemen will read the paragraph as it stands now, beginning with line 18, page 2, they will observe that it is apparently left in the air. There is a statement in reference to a certain kind of paper, but it is not stated what will be done with it. With this amendment, which I will offer later on, giving the number and the amendment which I now offer, it will appear that paragraph 322, Schedule M, and paragraph 567 of the free list of the act of 1913 are amended.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. WALSH. Now, Mr. Chairman, do I understand that is an amendment at the end of line 5, page 1?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; between lines 5 and 6.

Mr. WALSH. Then the gentleman intends to strike out section 600, in line 6, and put in section 322?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not section, but paragraph 322.

Mr. WALSH. And then, line 18, page 2, to put in paragraph 567?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; that is a portion of the free list.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will yield.

Mr. GARD. I was wondering if it was not necessary to strike out lines 3, 4, and 5, page 1, because it will appear twice?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It appears twice, because we are amending an amendment to the act of 1913. We are amending an amendment to an amendment. That is the reason it appears twice, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suppose the Clerk understands that this comes in after line 5?

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent that in line 6 the word and figures "Section 600" be stricken out and that the figures "322" be inserted in lieu thereof, that being the correct number.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa as a committee amendment: Page 1, line 6, strike out the word and figures "Section 600" and insert in lieu thereof "322."

Mr. WALSH. It is not an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is an amendment to the bill.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I would like to call attention to line 9, page 2, where the word "values" is used instead of the word "valued." Down in line 23, where the same term is used again, the word "valued" is used instead of "values."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It should be "valued." I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that in line 9 the word "values" be changed to "valued."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa as a committee amendment: Page 2, line 9, after the word "paper," strike out the word "values" and insert in lieu thereof the word "valued."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, that between the quotation marks and the word "Printing" insert the figures "567."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, before the word "Printing," insert the figures "567," and strike out the quotation marks before the word "Printing."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That this act shall expire by limitation at the end of two years from the date of its passage, and section 600 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," shall again become operative in its stead.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Committee amendment: Line 2, page 3, strike out the words "two years" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one year."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman having this measure in charge the reason which prompted the committee to reduce this term? Does he think that any benefit will be derived during this short time of one year?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that it was upon my motion this time was reduced. The reason I had for offering this amendment was that I did not want to do anything in any way which would tend to discourage the creation of new mills, which I believe to be the only way in which paper prices will ever be reduced. I think this country, at least in Alaska and in certain parts of Washington, is admirably adapted for the production of paper pulp and paper itself, and it is my great desire that some new mills be erected. I believe if this period was made two years it might, perhaps, have some tendency to develop the establishment of new mills, whereas if it was fixed at one year, and at the end of the year it was necessary to continue it, it would be necessary to continue it for another year or two years, as the case might be.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, it takes three years to establish a mill. Now, the time having been reduced to one year, with the gentleman's statement that it would be easy to extend it another year or another two years, might not that very possibility, that the term is now made so short that it will probably have to be extended, also result in deterring interests from entering upon the construction of mills?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hardly think so. And my friend from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], at my right, suggests also another matter that was taken into consideration by the committee, that it was possible in some instances to somewhat extend the capacity of the mills, not within a very brief time, but possibly within a year and a half or so, and if possible we wanted to encourage such extension of the mills. At this particular time there is a large mill under construction, I understand, in the State of Washington. Just how near it is to completion I can not say, but my recollection is that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY] said it would be completed in about a year.

Mr. HADLEY. I understand it is substantially completed now and will be ready for operation in the near future. I have not seen the mill for a good while. But that is the first unit, and other units are in contemplation.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand that unless these mills are permitted to get the exorbitant prices for print paper they are not going to start in constructing them in the future?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; but this raises the limitation so that the tariff would not apply except in case there was an exorbitant price. For that reason I thought it was well to limit the time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel at all confident that this bill will have any practical effect upon the newspaper situation. Paper coming from Canada is now absorbed, all that the Canadian Government will permit to be exported, and I think there is no paper coming in that costs now so much as 5 cents a pound. It may have a tendency to keep the price down in future contracts. There has been some hope that with the high prices of paper in this country there might come a considerable trade with Scandinavian countries, where they have a cheap process of manufacturing paper, with the wood at hand and the water power at hand. I doubt very much whether you will be able to build up much of a trade in paper with the Scandinavian countries with the provision that you only invite such trade for one year. While paper is not a commodity that is accumulated—it is used from day to day, and newspapers live from hand to mouth so far as paper is concerned, because it takes up so much room for storage that it can not afford usually to store it—still the paper is usually disposed of in advance. Because of its bulky nature print-paper manufacturers never manufacture supplies largely in advance. They may have a considerable supply, but the storage of paper amounts to so much that as a rule it is not made in large quantities unless they know where they are going to sell it.

We are inviting Scandinavian paper mills to send us paper because we have a large shortage just now, but we are only extending this invitation so far as this bill is concerned for one year, and I do not think that the invitation will be very generally accepted. People do not start out with new lines of trade on the assumption that if they build up trade it is going to be cut off at the end of a year. It will not be done by the Scandinavian manufacturers; it would not be done by American manufacturers; it would not be done by anybody who had common sense, and common sense rules to a large extent the trade of the world. While it looks well and sounds fine, it accomplishes nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 27.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Iowa a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. What is going to be the effect of this legislation at the end of one year? Section 2 says that "this act shall expire by limitation at the end of one year from the date of its passage" and section 600 shall become operative in its stead.

Now, section 600 is still operative. This act will continue it in operation, and its operation has not been suspended. Section 600 is amended by this act, but its operation is to continue in effect, and section 2 of this bill says that it shall again become operative. I wanted to get the gentleman's idea of what the effect would be at the end of the one-year period.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman suggests a matter that I think might, perhaps, be mended by a further amendment. It was not expected, I will say, that this bill should come up today at all. I did not draw the bill in the first instance and did not report the bill myself, and while I had noticed some other things that needed to be corrected in it and had prepared some amendments to that end I did not notice what the gentleman from Massachusetts has just called my attention to. I would suggest, as the gentleman from Massachusetts sees the purpose of section 2, that, perhaps, he can suggest an amendment to cover his objection.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. As a matter of fact, will it not just go back and reduce from the 8-cent to the 5-cent limit, and we shall go ahead under the 5-cent limitation? That will be the effect.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DEMPSEY. How would this answer the purpose: After the word "purposes" insert "as it read and existed prior to the amendment made by section 1 hereof"?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Or "prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; or "prior to the passage of this act." That would be better. Why would not that answer the purpose? "As it read and was enforced" would probably be better than "as it existed."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to page 3, line 4. After the word "purposes" insert the words "in effect prior to the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. WALSH. "As in effect prior to the passage of this act."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 3, line 4, after the word "purposes," insert "as in effect prior to the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Democrats with them, and the Republican membership of the House, for the consideration and the passage of this bill. In my opinion it is needed to give at least some hope of relief from the distressed condition of the thousands of little country and little city newspapers throughout the country. It is almost an emergency.

I want to congratulate the Republicans on the fact that whenever the country faces an emergency, it matters not what it is, they resort to a Democratic policy to give relief from that emergency. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We remember when the great Chicago fire in 1872 swept away millions of property and left tens of thousands of people homeless the Republican Congress rushed to a Democratic policy to give relief to those suffering people by putting building materials on the free list for a period. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When the fire at Portland, Me., had laid waste hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars' worth of property and left many thousands of people in distress and in suffering and without shelter, the Republican Congress at once again rushed to a Democratic policy to give those suffering people relief by putting building materials on the free list for a year. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Again, we remember in the great strike of 1902, when the coal cormorants had every man, woman, and child in the country at their mercy, the Republicans, to give relief to a suffering people, again resorted to a Democratic policy and rushed through a Republican House and a Republican Senate, with the approval of a Republican President, an act putting coal on the free list. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, when the little country papers throughout the United States are in the present struggle and distress, the Republican Party in a Republican House, with a Republican Senate, rushes again to a Democratic policy by passing a free print paper bill to give these newspapers throughout the country relief. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, if Democratic policies are so good and so wise and so virtuous in relieving the people in times of emergencies, why in the name of common justice and common sense are they not good and wise and virtuous enough to have all the time, to prevent the people from getting into these emergencies? [Applause on the Democratic side.] I repeat, I congratulate the Republicans on this measure.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. LUCE. Is it Democratic policy to put dyestuffs on the free list?

Mr. KITCHIN. Dyestuffs on the free list? Certain dyestuffs; yes, sir. I want to say, since the gentleman has mentioned it, that there is a dyestuff act on the statute books put there by the Democrats. For 40 or 50 years the Republicans had control of the Government, and they never did one single thing to encourage the dyestuff industry in the United States, and it remained for a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate and a Democratic President in 1916 to put upon the statute books the first encouraging legislation for the dyestuff industry in the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The dyestuff bill which the House recently passed followed that Democratic policy. If you had not had that Democratic example to go by, you would not have dared to write a bill. Remember, too, that a dyestuff bill was recommended by a Democratic President in this Congress before you Republicans took a single step. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate my Democratic friend in having seen the light in relation to dyestuffs and putting a Republican tariff on dyestuffs. It is really delightful to see, in some cases at least, the Democrats coming around to sound reasoning in the end.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will permit, I want to ask him a question. Did not the gentleman vote for the Democratic dyestuff provisions in the Democratic bill in 1916, and did not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] with him vote for it, and did not half of the Republicans on the Ways and Means Committee vote for that Democratic bill which I wrote, and did not 50 men on the Republican side of the House vote for that bill in 1916?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Whenever you come to the point of adopting protective principles and propose to put on a protective tariff, we will vote with you every time.

Mr. KITCHIN. But a large majority of your party voted against you and me then. But I recognize the fact that you were more patriotic than a majority of your colleagues. You must admit that the Democratic Party was the first one to put through any legislation in aid of the dyestuff industry, whether you call it a protective tariff or an encouraging tariff or a tariff for revenue with incidental protection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I merely desire to suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina that the Democratic Party were forced at last to come to the Republican policy, because they took the rates as provided in the so-called Hill bill and passed that bill, a Republican tariff measure.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will permit, instead of that being the fact we turned down in committee Mr. Hill's bill and the House turned it down. The RECORD will show that Mr. Hill himself got up on this floor and said that the bill which we Democrats proposed, and for which bill Mr. LONGWORTH and Mr. GREEN of Iowa voted with me, would not amount to anything, that it would destroy all the dyestuff establishments in this country; and he offered his bill as a substitute, but it was overwhelmingly defeated.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is true that I voted for the bill at the same time the gentleman from North Carolina did, but I voted for it because he came more than halfway to me, which is as much as we can possibly expect of a Democrat.

Mr. KITCHIN. You Republicans had never gone halfway or any other way on the dyestuff bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We Democrats went all the way and passed one. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor. The gentleman from North Carolina is a little bit late in his dates. The proposition to put a tariff on dyestuffs was first proposed by the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. Hill, and then the Democrats, as usual, came trailing in afterwards when they saw that it was a good proposition, and they established a protective tariff to a certain extent. When they were in control we had to take what we could get. If we could not get what we wanted, we voted for as much protection as we could get.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will just go back to the RECORD and will see the facts, he will find that the bill for which he and I voted together is as different from the Hill bill as light is from darkness. The gentleman has got it all mixed up in his memory. The gentleman was right then, and I will ask him not to impeach his record by trying to get out of the right position that he then took. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would rather trust to the RECORD than to the vivid imagination of the gentleman from North Carolina, which I have often found to be defective in the past.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HASTINGS. I will ask the gentleman to withhold that motion for a moment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HASTINGS. I move to strike out section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HASTINGS: Page 3, lines 1 to 5, strike out all of section 2.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, if this is good legislation for one year, it is good legislation for two years and it is good legislation indefinitely. It is agreed here that this legislation will not help the big papers, which have made their contracts for the coming year, but that this legislation is in the interest of the small papers.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, just a word on that subject. The conditions that prevail to-day are abnormal. They are not likely to exist very long. I hope they will not exist very long—not any considerable term of years. If I thought that the conditions which prevail to-day were likely to continue indefinitely, I would introduce an altogether different kind of a bill. This is to remedy this special situation. I think the amendment ought to be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HASTINGS) there were—ayes 28, noes 57.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12260) to amend section 600 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment to section 2, striking out two years and inserting one year in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois demands a separate vote upon the amendment to page 3, line 2, striking out "two years" and inserting "one year."

Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put the other amendments in gross.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now comes upon the amendment on which the gentleman from Illinois demands a separate vote. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, strike out the words "two years" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one year."

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. As many as favor the amendment will, as their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

NITRATE OF SODA.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I introduce a joint resolution which I send to the desk, and, in view of the fact that it involves a matter that is of vital importance to the farmers of the country, I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The joint resolution has been approved both by the Agricultural Department and by the War Department, but they find there is no law by which they can perform the service which is desired. The matter is absolutely safeguarded, and I have drawn the joint resolution in accordance with the recommendations of the departments. I hope it may be considered and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from South Carolina to say that this is a joint resolution?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, under the rules of the Senate it must be referred to a committee. The Senator can then have it reported from the committee at once, if the committee be in favor of it, and he can then ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The rules, however, require that all such resolutions shall be referred to a committee. If it were merely a Senate resolution, of course, that would not have to be done.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This proposed legislation has to be in the form of a joint resolution, in order that it may be signed by the President and become operative. Under the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, Mr. President, I will merely introduce the joint resolution and have it referred to the proper committee. I presume it should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I will ask that that action may be taken.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina a question?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to ask what plan is devised by the joint resolution for the distribution of the surplus nitrates to the farmers?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The same machinery is provided which was provided in a resolution offered by me last year for the distribution of the Government's purchase of Chilean nitrates to the farmers.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to agricultural fertilizer distributors or users a supply of nitrate of soda was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina subsequently said: I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to agricultural fertilizer distributors or emergency users a supply of nitrate of soda, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order to meet the existing emergency in the shortage of fertilizers, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to turn over to agricultural fertilizer distributors or users in this country such quantity of the nitrate of soda held as a reserve supply by the War Department as in his opinion can be spared consistently with the military needs of the Government, such stocks so turned over to be replaced by such fertilizer distributors or users with an equivalent amount of nitrate, the turning over and replacement being under such guaranties as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD LABOR BOARD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a telegram which I have received from a labor organization in Hartford, Conn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The telegram was read, as follows:

HARTFORD, CONN., March 15, 1920.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Am informed that appointments on board created by Cummins-Esch bill will come before Senate for confirmation. Would respectfully request that you endeavor to effect the appointment of a member of our organization to represent employees who are not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Heretofore our members and the unorganized railroad employees of the country have not received any consideration from wage or adjustment boards appointed by the Railroad Administration. Your efforts to obtain justice in our behalf will be greatly appreciated.

H. P. FRANZ,
Recording Secretary Hartford Lodge, No. 29, American Federation of Railroad Employees.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wrote the gentleman sending this telegram that, of course, I had no power of influencing the nominations that might be made by the President to this board or whatever it may be, but that I would have their telegram read in the Senate, in order that those concerned might take notice of it.

DISPOSAL OF AIR-SERVICE MATERIAL.

Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to two letters and two telegrams which I have received from the American Lacquer Co., of Bridgeport, Conn., which relate to the prices which are being asked by the War Department in the sale of second-hand materials which they have in stock. Of course, I know nothing about the facts, but I assume that they are as stated by the writers, because there is a telegram from the department in reference to a bid which they made. I think the matter is of sufficient interest to have the communications read by the Secretary, if I may, by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., March 17, 1920.

Hon. F. B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We want relief from the profiteering game of the alcohol companies. Denatured alcohol sold six months ago at 45 cents; to-day, after being advanced 25 cents per gallon over Sunday, it is held for $1 per gallon.

From past two years' experience we know that this appeal is useless, but want to go on record that we have advised you of the most rotten piece of gouging in the country to-day. What is the matter with Washington that our Representatives have no concern about anything except a politically damned and dead treaty?

Yours, very truly, THE AMERICAN LACQUER CO.,
C. E. PERKINS, President.

Inability to accept bid on sheet No. 3747.

1. Referring to your bid dated March 15, quoting prices on material described on sheet No. 3747, we regret to advise that inasmuch as your bid is too low for our consideration we are unable to take advantage of the same.

2. However, should you care to revise your bid on this material we would be pleased to hear from you.

MARCH 15, 1920.

WAR DEPARTMENT, MATERIAL DISPOSAL AND SALVAGE DIVISION, AIR SERVICE, 360 Madison Avenue, New York, City.

GENTLEMEN: We would like to get a carload of acetate of lime and herein offer $2 per hundredweight f. o. b. Bridgeport, less 1 per cent cash. As this is the market price at the present time, we trust it will be acceptable.

Yours, very truly, THE AMERICAN LACQUER CO.,
——— ———, President.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., March 18, 1920.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We inclose another object lesson showing how the War Department is helping to the best of its ability to raise prices still higher. The market price of acetate of lime yesterday in carload lots was 2 cents per pound f. o. b. buyer's city. (This can be confirmed by writing the Oil, Paint, and Drug Reporter, 100 Williams Street, New York City, the leading chemical paper, or William S. Gray & Co., 80 Maiden Lane, New York City, who handle the output of this article in the country.)

We tried to get acetate of lime from Gray, but they told us that on account of the different wood-alcohol refineries being slowed down they had none to offer, but stated the Government had it for sale. We offered the Government the market price, as per our letter, with the result that the Government wants more money and are trying to advance the price higher than the real market has been for six months.

We admit this is nothing in the life of the war bureaucrats who are running this department, but it is something in our life, as we are barred from doing business and asked more by the Government for goods they are holding secondhand than the present market price.

A copy of this letter is being mailed to the Secretary of War and the editors of the New York World and New York Tribune. There must be an end to this price raising and there must be a way to let small concerns like ourselves live. Before we are pushed out of business you may depend on it that some one is going to know it.

Yours, very truly, THE AMERICAN LACQUER CO.,
C. E. PERKINS, President.

N. B.—The point we want to emphasize is our Government officials are deliberately demanding more money from us than the market price.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, as I have said, of course, I am not familiar with the market conditions of all these materials, and I am putting these communications into the RECORD in the hope that the department, if the facts are true, will in their own way give some proper explanation. It seems to me absurd for the Government to be holding surplus materials which they do not need and which are, at least in the trade, classed as secondhand at prices higher than the market prices. I hope some explanation will be forthcoming.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. On Monday last the Senate passed the Post Office appropriation bill. I expected that it would have been sent to the House on yesterday, but it was not. In order to expedite the passage of the bill and get it into conference, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. STERLING, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. BECKHAM, and Mr. HENDERSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13266. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12610, being the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the amendment reported by the committee.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDACY OF MR. HOOVER.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in making his announcement this morning as a candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency, Mr. Hoover, among other things, said:

If the Republican Party—with the independent element of which I am naturally affiliated—adopts a forward-looking, liberal, constructive platform on the treaty and on our economic issues, * * * I will give it my support. While I do not, and will not, myself seek the nomination, if it is felt that the issues necessitate it and it is demanded of me, I can not refuse service.

Of course, that eliminates Mr. Hoover as a candidate of the party to which I belong, a fact of which I am glad, for I have already announced I could not support him, but, inasmuch as he speaks of economic issues, I wish to call the attention of my Republican friends to Mr. Hoover's very remarkable pronouncement made recently on economic issues. A few days ago I was traveling on a railroad train and came across a copy of the Philadelphia Public Ledger which contained an article about Mr. Hoover that interested me somewhat, and I am going to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to it, as I think it will be interesting to others.

The date of it is March 25, 1920, and the headline reads as follows:

POSITIVE HOOVER WOULD BE ELECTED—MEN OF ALL PARTIES IN BOSTON LOUDLY CHEER FORMER FOOD CHIEF—LABOR PROBLEMS ARE AIRED.

BOSTON, March 25.

The relationship of employer and employee, as considered by the national industrial conference of which he was a member, and the difference in the point of view of the conference and that of Kansas legislation for the judicial settlement of labor disputes, were discussed by Herbert Hoover in an address before the chamber of commerce here yesterday.

Enthusiasm ran very high, and Edward A. Filene, one of Boston's biggest dry goods merchants, who in Boston is credited with being the original Wilson man in this city, led the cheering, both before and after the dinner. Mr. Filene was willing to wager 2 to 1 that Mr. Hoover, if nominated by the Democrats, would be elected, while if nominated by the Republicans he would make the odds 5 to 1 on his election.

The audience which assembled at the Copley Plaza to hear Mr. Hoover was the largest which has ever attended such a function. It was composed of the substantial business men of Boston, regardless of political party, and the numbers were so large—1,570—that it was necessary to have Mr. Hoover speak twice in different dining halls.

I call especial attention to the enthusiasm reported in this article. "Men of all parties in Boston loudly cheer former food chief." "Enthusiasm ran very high," says the article. "Mr. Filene * * * led the cheering," says the article; and then follows the remarkable economic policy that Mr. Hoover announced on that occasion, and I submit that policy to my good Republican friends who expect to support Mr. Hoover. I hope Senators will listen to it.

Mr. Hoover says:

The conference has endeavored to find a plan for systematic organization of the forces that are making for better relationships, to encourage growing acceptance of collective bargaining by providing a method that should enable it to meet objections of its critics, and to aggregate around this the forces of conciliation and arbitration now in such wide use.

I hope some gentleman learned in the use of language and the meaning of language will kindly suggest what this first statement of Mr. Hoover means. I must be dull witted, for after some study I can not really determine that it has any meaning at all, and if any Senator can give it a meaning I hope he will do so. Mr. Hoover seems to be running on two issues, one favoring the League of Nations with apparently the Lodge reservations and the other a progressive economic issue. As this is his economic issue, it is important that voters should know what it is. To use Mr. Hoover's statement of this issue is unintelligible, and if Senators can aid me in ascertaining what he means I shall be glad to have their aid. But I continue to quote:

It—

And I might stop right there to wonder what "it" refers to. It may possibly refer to the conference, or it may refer to the "systematic organization" of certain forces, or it may refer "to better relationships," or it may even refer to "collective bargaining." Of course, it may be immaterial in Mr. Hoover's mind as to which one it should refer to. He does not disclose to us; but, at all events, I read:

It has sought to do this without legal repression but with the organized pressure of public opinion.

That is Mr. Hoover's economic plan, the announcement of an economic policy for you Republicans to put in your platform; and here is what he says it means to him. I admit that I must be a dull-witted man, for I am utterly unable to comprehend any meaning to it at all; but here is what Mr. Hoover says it means to him, and I quote him literally:

To me there is no question that we should try the experiment of the perhaps longer road, proposed by the industrial conference, for development of mutuality of relationship between employer and employee rather than to enter upon summary action of court decision that may both stifle the delicate adjustment of industrial processes and cause serious conflict over human rights.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator wait just one minute? I will yield to the Senator in just a minute. Then Mr. Hoover adds in further explanation of his statement of his economic issue, without which issue he says he will not accept a nomination for the Presidency:

To me the upbuilding of the sense of responsibility and of intelligence in each individual unit in the United States, with the intervention of Government only to promote the development of these relations, the suppression of domination by any one group over another, is the basis upon which democracy must progress.

I may interpolate here that if that is the only basis on which democracy can progress, I feel very sorry for democracy, because I challenge any Senator—and I am going to give the Senator from North Dakota the first chance at it in just a minute—I challenge any Senator to say what Mr. Hoover's economic issue as stated by him, or even his explanation of his own suggestion about this economic issue, actually means in English. I am reminded of the old lady who went to church and heard the minister preach. When she was asked her opinion as to what he said, she said, "Well, he talked about Bethesda and Bethlehem and Beersheba and Mesopotamia, and all those words sounded so well that I just thought it was grand." [Laughter.] So it seems to me that the best that can be said of this speech is that Mr. Hoover has gotten together in one sentence a number of words which in part are misused without really knowing what he intended to say. The remarkable part about it is that a Boston audience, according to this paper—Boston, of all places in this Republic, and men of all parties in Boston, the great educational center of the country—cheered wildly these remarkable so-called economic statements of the then prospective candidate for the Presidency on both tickets, though it is now understood that he will not accept the nomination except on one ticket; and the enthusiasm ran very high in Boston on the announcement of such a doctrine as that!

I want to say that I challenge any Senator, or anyone out of the Senate, to take Mr. Hoover's announcement of an economic platform as reported in this newspaper account and say what it means. It is a great source of regret to me, I am very sorry, that Mr. Hoover happens to be over 25 years of age. If he were under 25, he could compete with the other young Republicans of the country in getting Mr. Will Hays's prize, because surely this candidate, your candidate for President, would enter the competition on one of his two stated issues.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I now take pleasure in yielding to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course I do not intend even to make an effort to analyze anything that Mr. Hoover may say or has said, but I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee if his party has given up all hope of being able to induce Mr. Hoover to become the candidate for the Presidency on the Democratic ticket?

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not answer for my party about that, after the announcement of this economic issue of Mr. Hoover's, which statement of it I do not believe a man, woman, or child in America can understand, and I do not see how anyone could fail to support him! It may be that anyone that runs may read and understand that platform; but I think the faster a person ran the more sense he could get out of the platform as he read it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does not the Senator understand that if anybody could understand that uplifting and forward-looking conglomeration——

Mr. McKELLAR. That progressive platform.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (continuing). Its political utility for fooling the gulls would be gone?

Mr. McKELLAR. Possibly that is the only sensible purpose this statement of the issue could have—that this candidate for the Presidency had gotten hold of a dictionary and, as he expresses it, "aggregated" enough words—I believe I have usually heard the word "congregated" used, even with reference to words—he had congregated together enough words to make people read his statement and wonder what he meant. It may be a form of advertisement, at which your new Republican candidate for President seems to be a master hand. It may be that this announcement of an economic plank, a progressive plank, in your platform is meant for advertising purposes; but if it is not meant for that, then I do not believe the human mind can understand what it is meant for, or give it a substantial meaning.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does not the Senator know that the reason why this announcement was greeted with such stupendous enthusiasm in Boston was because they could not understand it? [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. The remarkable part about that, I will say to the Senator from Connecticut, is that Boston, with all of its intelligence and all of its learning, could not have discovered it was the mere collection of words rather than the statement of an economic issue. How Boston could have cheered the use of these words, as stated in this newspaper, will remain to me a mystery.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if it be true, as the Senator contends, that Mr. Hoover has made a declaration that nobody can understand, then he certainly is a very formidable candidate for nomination by both parties.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can only judge the matter by reminding the Senator that P. T. Barnum used to say that the American public love to be humbugged. I agree with the Senator. I think it is on that theory that this marvelous, remarkable announcement was made, an announcement that would kill any ordinary man in this country forever in the minds of his fellow citizens, an announcement of an economic platform that is without any intelligible meaning. I want to recommend, however, that if you Republicans do select Mr. Hoover as your standard bearer, when you come to announce your economic plank be certain to accept this economic plank as stated by Mr. Hoover. You can then be perfectly safe in giving it any meaning you please.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McKELLAR. I was going to yield the floor, but I shall be glad to answer any question the Senator may have to ask.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to remind the Senator from Tennessee of what happened during the war, when his party was in power. Mr. Hoover was able to charm not only the Members on this side of the Chamber, but he was able to charm even the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know so much about the last part of that statement. You had better look at the RECORD and see how the vote was before you make any such statement.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from Tennessee will take some of the hearings and read the statements made by the gentleman to whom he has referred, Mr. Hoover, he will find that exactly the same terms and the same phrases were used by him then that he is using now, and those phrases, let me say to the Senator, cost the American wheat farmers more than $2,000,000,000 during the war.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me, I will say to him that he is exercising an unfair advantage of me if, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture or as chairman of that committee, he heard Mr. Hoover use this kind of language before. It may be that the Senator is in a better position to determine his meaning than I am, who never read the hearings about which the Senator speaks, and it may be that the Senator can accept my challenge, to wit, to explain what this language means.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I can only judge the future by the past, and I can only interpret phrases by what they meant in the past. For instance, take the phrase "a stabilizing price." That was one of the phrases used by Mr. Hoover. It really meant to take from the American farmer the real price, the price to which he was entitled under the law of supply and demand, and leave the power in the hands of Hoover, or those who were associated with him, to take from the American farmer what I have stated, more than $2,000,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was that the meaning of the language that the present candidate for the Presidency used when he said "to aggregate around this the forces of conciliation and arbitration"?

Did he propose "to aggregate" these stabilizing influences in any way? I am curious to know what he meant, then. I am but seeking information. It may be that my lack of understanding of the meaning of words of the English language is at fault. It must be that when this man who is a candidate for the Presidency uses certain words he has some meaning, and I renew my challenge to any gentleman on either side of the Senate to give us the meaning of this great progressive statesman, who has been an active candidate of two parties for the presidential nomination, and has now only just confined his operations to only one of the great parties. I would like to know what he means.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, Mr. Hoover is a practical, successful business man, and I am not astonished that politicians do not understand the language he uses, the language of plain, direct talking. Having been a success, it is not at all improbable or impossible that politicians will not understand the sort of language he speaks. But the people of the United States will understand the language Mr. Hoover speaks.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, replying to my distinguished friend, I wish to say that I frankly admit that I am just a very plain politician. I do not claim to be one of the business citizens of the Republic who can understand this so-called plain language used by Mr. Hoover. My friend from Arizona is not a politician; he does not claim to be a politician.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to know how I would be here if I am not a politician.

Mr. McKELLAR. My friend from Arizona claims to be merely a business man and is a statesman. Now, I challenge him, the plain business man and the statesman of this body, and the defender of Mr. Hoover, to take this language and tell the Senate and the public what it means.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I can explain any kind of language. I have been working for a number of years with men who can decorate any proposition with the most gorgeous kind of linguistic plumage. It is no trouble for me to understand Hoover's language. But I have not yet been told what it is; I want to know when Mr. Hoover used it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will pass the article to the Senator and let him examine it at length, and after he examines it, I hope he will tell us what it means. I would like to have his interpretation of it. I pass it over to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I am not going to take up the time of the Senate. I will take it and look it up. This has been denied.

Mr. McKELLAR. Denied by whom?

Mr. ASHURST. I will tell the Senator in the cloak room or at the next Democratic caucus, when we hold one.

Mr. President, after examining the clipping I find I am mistaken. The interview has not been denied, so far as I know.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should take the criticism of Mr. Hoover by the Senator from Tennessee more seriously if he had made it before Mr. Hoover announced his intention to enter the Republican primaries. I do not care, however, to occupy the time of the Senate, under the circumstances, with a further discussion of that gentleman, but rather to address myself to the amendment now pending to the bill under consideration.

If I am correctly informed as to the facts, I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the amendment of the committee. Last autumn I deemed it my duty to criticize the police force of the city of Washington because it had organized and then affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. I regarded that act as not only unsound and unwise, but as decidedly inimical to the public welfare and inconsistent with the duties imposed by law upon a police force.

My attitude then aroused some resentment, but the position which I and other Senators then took was vindicated by the conduct of the Boston police force, followed by the verdict of the people of the State of Massachusetts, and I think it has been and is being vindicated everywhere in this country where such organizations exist, and are faced with the alternative of discharge of their duty or the need to follow antagonistic inclination.

Shortly after the Boston episode the police force of this city very wisely and patriotically consented to surrender its charter to the American Federation, and to keep itself aloof from all obligations akin to that resting upon them by virtue of such affiliation.

The city firemen, then having in contemplation similar action, doubtless influenced by the attitude of the police force, followed their example, and are therefore entitled to equal commendation.

As a part of the negotiation leading up to this desirable conclusion, the matter of compensation was considered, and a schedule of compensation agreed upon. That schedule was embodied in a bill presented by the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is chairman, and was enacted into a law by the Congress. Among other items of compensation this bonus was considered. My information is that it was agreed, expressly or impliedly, that this compensation should continue while conditions of living continued as they were at the time of the arrangement.

Assuming that to be true, Mr. President, and with every disposition to be fair to all men, I deem it my duty to vote for this amendment, because living conditions have not improved. On the contrary, they are constantly becoming worse, that being the inevitable consequence of this attempt to extinguish a fire by throwing oil upon it. I have had occasion more than once to emphasize the fact that an increase in wages, inevitably followed by an increase in prices, constitutes a vicious circle ever traveling upward, and bound in time to collapse under the inevitable action of the law of commercial gravitation. But because of the desire for immediate relief, coupled with the political influence which stands behind every such movement in these days, which is naturally supported by the retailers of the locality, who are the real beneficiaries of such legislation, Congress determined to pursue that policy.

I knew two years ago, when the $240 bonus was provided for, that it would necessarily lead to a demand for a $480 bonus, the natural outgrowth of conditions, not because the employees desired to embarrass the Government but simply because the $240 having been absorbed by the corresponding rise in prices $480 would be needed for the ensuing year, and should that be granted $960 will be required for the next year, and so on, until the structure reaches a height which its own weight can not sustain, and the inevitable collapse will result.

But as regards these forces the understanding should be respected. I am informed by members of the department what that understanding is, and having made it we should respect it, notwithstanding that it involves an increase in the total amount of our annual expenditures in the District.

Mr. DIAL. Who made the contract, and with whom was it made?

Mr. THOMAS. Perhaps it is not proper to call it a contract. The negotiations between the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia and the police and fire departments of the city, due to the action of the former in affiliating themselves with the American Federation of Labor, and the opposition which that developed, led to a general understanding, which culminated in the conditions to which I have referred. Such an understanding is binding upon me, in conscience, quite as fully as though it were a contract, although I concede that no power exists to make such an agreement binding upon a succeeding Congress or, indeed, upon itself.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I was on that committee at that time, and I made no such agreement, and no one was authorized to make any such agreement for me.

Mr. THOMAS. I may be misinformed, Mr. President. I have no first-hand knowledge about it.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. I was chairman of the subcommittee which reported the legislation, and in my conferences with the House Committee on the District of Columbia, and also in my talks with the police, it was the general understanding, as far as it could be, when they were getting this raise that it included the bonus and that it was to continue.

I so discussed this with them, and agreed, so far as I could, to that arrangement.

Mr. DIAL. I do not question the statement of the Senator from New York to the extent of whatever discretion he had. It was not in his power to bind the committee. He had no such authority, and no such authority was asked.

Mr. THOMAS. I have stated, Mr. President, that no one had power to bind the committee as to any such matter, and the committee has no power to bind the Congress. That I concede. But there is such a thing as a moral understanding, quite as binding upon some men as any other.

I am very much concerned about the tendency of public officials—municipal, State, and Federal—to organize and affiliate with outside private organizations using the strike as a weapon for enforcing demands. Inasmuch as we have made a good commencement to counteract it in the District, I am willing to stretch a point, if that is necessary to make it effective, by removing any possible cause for criticism or complaint.

The situation then confronting the country, and the District particularly at that time, was a very serious one. My distinguished friend the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and myself, neither of us claiming any superior degree of foresight, long ago directed the attention of the Senate and, through the Senate, of the country to this tendency, and he has done his best to correct it by appropriate legislation, thus far unsuccessfully. I wish we could put upon this bill and upon every appropriation bill we pass his proposal that the compensation provided for shall not be paid to any official belonging to an organization affiliated with an outside organization using the strike as a weapon, for no man can serve two masters; and it goes without saying that the obligation to support the Government and an obligation to obey an outside authority will inevitably conflict.

The man subject to both obligations must choose whom he will serve, and we know by experience that as between the Government and these huge industrial organizations the Government is generally given second choice.

We have but to read the dispatches in the morning paper from Chicago if we need an object lesson on the practical consequences of industrial organizations among public employees. A large part of the municipal force in that great city are on strike. They have picketed the city hall and are indulging in the usual methods of pickets with every individual having occasion to enter that public building owned by the people, built from the public revenues, and sustained by public taxation. Their demand is for increased compensation.

Now, I put it to any thinking man and woman whether it be possible to continue the exercise of any governmental function, however necessary nationally, to the States, or to the municipalities, if organizations of men and women employed to serve the public can by combination interfere with the usual course of governmental machinery and produce governmental chaos unless and until their demands are satisfied. It can not be permitted, and I regret very much that such a condition of affairs even seemingly receives exculpation or defense at the hands of United States Senators.

I think I may say without fear of successful contradiction that the first duty of every employee, from the Presidency down to the city scavenger, is to serve the public as required by the duties of the particular place which he occupies, and if he is unable to do so for any reason then his next duty is to resign. No government can exist which entertains or permits the organization of a force within itself sufficiently strong to defy its authority or to cripple its exercise.

The situation in Chicago is a travesty upon popular government, a condemnation of the right of a great community to look after its own affairs, and a humiliating reflection upon the integrity of American citizenship. Such organizations must be circumscribed if American institutions are to survive. We have made a good start in the District of Columbia with two organizations composed of men who have been convinced that patriotism is the first requirement, that public service and public duty are the objects for which they are employed, and that they shall receive for the time being a fairly adequate compensation. Let us not disturb this relation by even seeming to disregard it, for if we do we may be sure that our action will be taken advantage of and not entirely for the benefit of the public either here or elsewhere.

It is for these reasons that I shall support the amendment.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, it would be impossible for any one to make the point that I tried to make yesterday more clearly than has the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. He puts his finger on the very thing that I am most fearful of. These two departments—the firemen and the policemen of the city—that guard the property of the Nation's Capital and the lives of the officials here have dissociated themselves from any outside union influence. We increased their pay not for that reason but because of their excellent service. Now we propose to reduce their compensation. It is unfortunate and something which I am sure we will regret, not that I doubt the loyalty of these men to the service, but because of the discouragement that it will bring with it if we fail to adopt this amendment.

I discussed yesterday some points about the employment of these men. I said then that they had 30 days leave a year. I find upon inquiry that the firemen and policemen of Washington really are on duty every day in the year, including holidays, Sundays, and Saturday afternoons. Their labor averages 12 hours a day and they have, all told, only 20 days leave a year. I inquired from the District Commissioners this morning and was informed that since we passed the salary bill last December increasing the pay of policemen only 41 men have applied for appointment, and of this number 21 passed the physical test and only 9 the mental test. So despite the higher salaries only 9 men have passed the examinations. Those 9 were sent for to receive appointments and 6 responded. These 6 were appointed this week. So we have had 6 new policemen appointed since last December, and yet this very week there have been six resignations from the force.

I believe the best interests of the Government require that this bonus be allowed, and I sincerely urge that the Senate agree to the pending amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, with reference to the ever-increasing cost of living, to which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has referred, I have an article which appeared as a recent editorial in the Washington Post, which I will read. I think it is very apropos of the situation and of the subject now under discussion by the Senate. I read:

THE ULTIMATE CONSUMER.

The whole controversy between the miners and the operators over wages is about to be settled amicably. President Wilson has withdrawn the bituminous coal industry from Government supervision and regulation; the miners are to receive another advance in wages, aggregating $200,000,000, in accordance with the recommendation of the joint coal commission; the operators are to fix their own prices for coal, and everybody is to be benefited—except the public, whose coal bill next year will amount to $200,000,000 more than this year, not counting profiteering pyramiding on the increase granted to the miners.

The arrangement is perfectly simple. It consists in giving the miners a big boost in wages and passing the increased charge along to the ultimate consumer. Now, the anthracite operators, who are engaged in negotiating a new wage scale with their miners, want the Government to release them from its control, in which event it may be expected that the hard coal miners will get a good advance in pay, new hard coal prices will be established, and the ultimate consumer will get another material increase in his fuel bill.

Meantime, the machinery is being erected under provisions of the new railroad act for arbitrating the demands of the railway brotherhoods for wage advances, and the experience of the past leads to the belief that they will get a good share of what they ask. It will take $1,000,000,000 to meet the wishes of the railroad employees, which, of course, the railroads can not be expected to "absorb." As usual, the "absorbing" will be done by the public. Freight rates and railroad fares will be advanced, and again the ultimate consumer will pay. Every ton of coal, every bushel of wheat, every barrel of flour will reflect the increased cost of distribution, and the bill will be passed on to the people.

So it goes all along the line. The farmer is "getting his"; the laborer is receiving the "hire" of a bank president; capital is taking its toll in larger bites; the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker all are reveling in this orgy of high prices.

But where does the ultimate consumer get off?

What hope is there for him, and how long will he stand for being "the goat"? His food, fuel, rent, and clothing bills are going higher and higher, and just as he begins to hope for a reduction in the cost of living somebody takes another big slice out of the melon and gives him the rind. The only cheap thing he has found are his Liberty bonds, and there is danger of their becoming cheaper. Congress votes to sell 5,000,000 barrels of flour to the hungry people of Europe on credit, but the ultimate consumer has to pay cash at the corner grocery for a 10-pound sack. Congress is preparing legislation to authorize postponement by the allied Governments of the $500,000,000 annual interest on the money borrowed from the United States, but the ultimate consumer's landlord will not stand for a two-day postponement in paying the rent.

The crafts, guilds, professions, and classes are doing nicely under the high cost of living, for their takings are keeping pace with mounting prices, and possibly getting ahead a little. But the common people, who are neither of the aristocracy of labor nor the peerage of capital, are victimized. It will not last forever.

I agree with every statement in that article except the last statement—"It will not last forever." With that I do not know that I can agree. It looks to me as though it will last forever. I can see no indication of any change in this respect or of any halting of the ever-mounting cost of living. It seems to me that it is going to go on continuously and without end. I do not expect it to come to an end during my lifetime, even if I should live to be a very old man. There are children now living who are 5 years old, and if they should live to be 95 years of age I do not believe this ever-increasing cost of living will come to an end during their lives.

Organized labor has learned how to get what it wants. It learned it when the Adamson bill was enacted in 1916, and it has been profiting by what it then learned ever since. It appears that it will continue to make use of the knowledge which it then acquired. We are confronted with continual demands for higher wages, and it seems they must be granted or the entire business of the country and all the operations of the industrial world will come to a standstill and people will be confronted by conditions that mean starving and freezing.

Furthermore you can not make people work if they do not want to work. If people want to work only six hours a day, you can not make them work eight hours a day; if they want to work only four hours a day, you can not make them work six hours a day; if they want to work only three hours a day, you can not make them work four hours a day. If they want to work only five days a week, you can not make them work six days a week. We are confronted by these conditions, for which there seems to be no help.

While organized labor is continually demanding higher wages and shorter hours, and I think is in large part thereby responsible for keeping up the increased cost of living, I do not believe organized labor is wholly to blame. I think there are profiteers at the other end of the line, but so far there seems to be no way of checking their operations.

We have also in the country a class of rich people who stop at no excess of expenditure, who do not balk at paying any prices that may be asked for anything. They seem to revel in an orgy, a hysteria, of reckless spending of money, no matter what prices are demanded for things. They, too, I think, are largely responsible for keeping up the frightfully high cost of living. In reality, however, it is the decreased production of the world, more than anything else, that is keeping up the enormously high cost of living. So long as people will not work to the full extent of their ability the condition of decreased production will continue. I think in a year from now the cost of living will be at least 50 per cent higher than it now is, and that in a year from now the production of the world will be at least one-third less than it now is. The people of Europe are not going to work and producing commodities to the extent of their capacity. In large measure they are spending their time in idleness, in revolution, in petty warfare against each other—internecine warfare—and bickerings and contentions; they are doing almost everything except working. They seem to be relying very largely upon the belief that the United States will come to their relief and that they do not have to work. So long as those conditions exist the curtailment of production from which the world is now suffering will continue, and production is going to be even more curtailed.

While I do not believe in Congress yielding servilely to the demands of organizations of employees of the Government for increased wages, I think it is our duty to take cognizance of existing conditions of the times and voluntarily, without yielding to any attempt at coercion or dictation, see that employees of the Government are dealt with fairly; that they are given fair, reasonable, and adequate compensation for the services which they render. I think that applies to the policemen and the firemen of the District of Columbia. While I think we should proceed very cautiously and carefully about increasing the wages of Government employees, I do not think this is any time to decrease those wages; and I do not believe that any Government employees—that is, those of the ordinary rank and file—are receiving any greater compensation than is necessary for them to receive in order to have a decent, living wage.

I have recently been paying some especial attention to the increased cost of living; I have been making some investigations of that subject, in view of the demands that are being made by Government employees for increases of compensation, and in view of the fact that the annual appropriation bills are coming on for consideration. The high cost of living prevailing is simply frightful, staggering. Of course, people to whom it does not make any difference whether they spend $7,500 a year or $75,000 a year have no occasion to pay much attention to the cost of living; but I do not mind admitting that I am one of the few Members of this body who have to pay some attention to their expenses for living purposes.

I have generally been in the habit of keeping on hand, for my personal use, a couple of umbrellas; I usually try to keep one at my office and one at home, so that I may have one at either place in case of rainfall. I have bought quite a few umbrellas since I came to Washington. Up to about three years ago I could buy good umbrellas for a dollar apiece; that was all I paid for them; they were good enough for my purpose, because I lose them occasionally, either through my own carelessness or because of forgetfulness on the part of others. More than that, the low-priced umbrella suited better the size of my pocketbook. A few days ago I had occasion to buy an umbrella, and I went into a store for that purpose. The storekeeper wanted to charge me $5 for a plain, ordinary umbrella, but I would not pay it. The cheapest umbrella I could get in that store cost $2.50, and I purchased one of them. Three years ago or thereabouts I could buy umbrellas for a dollar apiece; a little after that they cost a dollar and a quarter apiece; last fall I bought one, and the cheapest I could get then cost $2, while this spring the cheapest I could get cost me $2.50. The merchant told me that when he placed an order a month or so previous for umbrellas he was able to get only 100 of the kind that he could retail at $2.50 apiece. He wanted to get 500 or 1,000 of them, but said he could get only 100. He could secure plenty of higher priced umbrellas, those that retail at $5 apiece, but of those that retail at $2.50 he could only get 100; and he said, "They are nearly all gone now, and after they have been sold I will have to charge people $5 apiece for umbrellas; that is the cheapest they will be able to get them for from me." He talked to me about other articles in his store and said that the price of everything was rising in proportion. He predicted that by next fall the cost of all the necessities of life that he carried would be much greater than now. He said, "The market price is rising; it is going up all the time. If I order goods now from the wholesaler, I have to pay much more for them than if I had ordered them three months ago." He predicted that everything would be much higher in the fall.

Last summer I had occasion to have some repairing done to an ordinary watch which I carry. I had dropped it and had broken off the lid; and I had occasion to have the watch cleaned and have some repairing done, just to the lid of the watch, not the works. It cost me $14 to have that simple, ordinary repairing done to the lid of the watch and to have the lid put back on the watch and to have the works cleaned. Furthermore, I had to wait three months to have the work done.

I could not get a watch from the jeweler to carry while mine was being repaired, and in order that I might have the time with me I had to buy an Ingersoll watch to carry during those three months. The cheapest Ingersoll watch I could buy cost $2.25; so that the repairs to my watch cost $16.25, and it took three months to have the work done. The jeweler at first did not know whether it could be done at all. He said, "This watch will have to be sent away; I have no employees here to do the work; I can not get employees." The large business houses in the great cities are short of employees. "Formerly," he said, "jewelry workmen worked about 54 hours a week, whereas now they only work about 40 hours a week, and are scarce and hard to get at that; and we have to pay much higher wages than we did a few years ago before we entered the European war." "So," he said, "I do not know when I can get this work done." But he sent it away, and it took three months to get it done, and cost me $16.25. A few years ago that same work, at the utmost, I venture to say, would have cost only $3 or $4. I tell you the increased cost of living is simply frightful. The cost of everything is much higher than a few years ago, and the cost continues to mount. Each and every month the cost of living is higher than it was the month just preceding. I do not know what it will come to. It has become a problem for millions of people to live.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's experience with the jeweler is duplicated in a very sinister way in many parts of the country in agriculture. The enormous wages which labor now commands in the cities and the increasing demand for that labor, largely because of its decreased productive power, is causing the already slender force available to the farmer to be still further depleted. A man who gets only $2 a day for following the plow but who can get $8 a day for laying brick or carrying mortar in the cities can not be expected to remain on the ranch or on the farm; human nature is not so constructed.

The New York papers a fortnight or so ago carried an item to the effect that many farmers in the State of New York were disposing of their live stock and agricultural machinery and abandoning their farms for the present because of their inability to secure help of any kind, adequate or otherwise. The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] informed me a day or so ago that similar conditions were largely prevalent in his State.

That being the case, it necessarily follows that the Senator's prediction regarding further decreased production of the absolute necessaries of life is inevitable, because the man who leaves the farm not only decreases the productive power of that farm directly by his abandonment, but he doubles the burden upon it by becoming a consumer in the city; and if this condition is not remedied it is inevitable that the present entire lack of equilibrium in the matter of compensation will result in very serious conditions next year because of a very extended shortage in agricultural production.

All of this simply bears out the fact that the eternal law of demand and supply, the regulation of compensation by what a man earns and by what the market affords, can not be violated with impunity any more than a man can disregard the laws of health or any other of the laws of nature.

Mr. MYERS. Undoubtedly the Senator from Colorado is correct about that. I know by experience something of the increased cost of living. For a long time it has been so that a Senator who kept a family here and was dependent upon his salary for a living was simply working for his board and clothes, and now it has become so that he can not even get his board and clothes out of it. He has to deny himself and family some of the substantial necessities of life or draw on his reserves, if he may have any. If this increasing cost of living goes much further, I shall favor a law to abolish the salaries of United States Senators and require them to serve for nothing, as members of the House of Lords do in the British Parliament. Then only those who are rich and could afford to serve here would come to the Senate. I do not suppose it would make any difference to the great majority of the Members of this body. I do not suppose that it would cause more than a dozen Members of the Senate to retire, while it would remove the temptation to men of slender means to come to the Senate at a sacrifice to themselves.

Realizing from experience this condition of affairs, I have some sympathy with Government employees who are struggling to maintain families on slender salaries. I do not believe in yielding to any unreasonable demands, nor in submitting to dictation, nor in being coerced or terrorized by the demands of organized employees of the Government for increases of salaries; but I think Congress should look at the matter calmly, deliberately, dispassionately, disregarding any attempted dictation or coercion or threats, and do what it thinks is right and just under the circumstances; and, while I think we should proceed very cautiously about increasing salaries in these times, yet I do not believe we would be justified in reducing any that are now being paid.

In yesterday morning's Washington Post I read that an agreement had been reached by the conference committee which, by authority of the President, has been considering an adjudication of disputes between the bituminous-coal miners and the coal operators of the country.

I learn from that article that the conference committee has agreed to recommend an increase in the miners' wages of 27 per cent, including the 14 per cent increase granted some time ago by Fuel Administrator Garfield. That increase of wages will amount to $200,000,000 per year; and, all restrictions on the price of coal having been removed, the operators will undoubtedly put that increase of cost upon the public. It simply means that during the coming year the people of the United States will have to pay $200,000,000 more for their coal than they did last year.

I read further in the same article that the next matter to come before the committee, which is completing the new agreement, will be the question of a shorter workday, and that the soft-coal diggers will attempt to get a seven-hour day. Of course, if they get a seven-hour day, that will curtail production and make the cost of coal even more than will the $200,000,000 increase of wages which will be put upon the consumers of coal next year. That comes from the increase of wage only. The reduction of hours from eight to seven would act as a still further increase of cost to the consumers, and that seems to be the tendency of everything and everybody. Why the bituminous-coal miners, if they get this increase of wages, should want a reduction from eight hours to seven hours a day is beyond me. I can not understand it. If the miners need the increase of wages to have a just wage, let them have it; but why a seven-hour day? I suppose the miners are paid by the piece—that is, by the amount of coal they produce—and they could certainly produce more coal and get more wages in an eight-hour day than in a seven-hour day. It would be to their interest, it seems to me, to work the eight hours a day and earn more; but it seems that they are determined to have a reduction to seven hours a day. I suppose they think that with the increased wages they will be able to earn enough in a seven-hour day to live in comfort and have a sufficient income, and that that is all in which they are interested, and that they will not work beyond seven hours a day, and that the people who will suffer thereby will just have to suffer and pay the penalty in increased cost.

I can not conceive of any other reason; and why things should be steadily going this way all of the time is more than I can understand. I only know that they are going that way all of the time, and I can see no hope of relief whatever. There does not seem to be a particle of hope of relief on the horizon. As I say, I think the increased cost of living is going to go on and on and on for many years, until starvation and suffering and want really confront and afflict many of the people of this country. There is nothing to all this talk that we get periodically from official sources to the effect that we have now reached the peak of the high cost of living, and that the cost of living has at least come to a standstill, and will soon go down. That is all stuff. I know better. We know that it has not come to a standstill, and we know that it has not reached the peak; and why those statements are periodically given out by officials in high authority is more than I can understand, because the people know better. They know such statements are not true.

They do not deceive the people.

As long as this condition of affairs seems destined to go on forever, as long as there seems to be no remedy, and as long as I myself am feeling the effects of it and know the effects of it by experience, I believe that it is only right and proper and the duty of Congress to give some consideration freely, voluntarily, and dispassionately to the needs of Federal employees for an adequate living wage. I am a believer in fair wages for wage earners. Therefore I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the committee amendment, the effect of which is to prevent a reduction in the wages of the policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia. Unless the amendment of the Senator from New York be adopted, the compensation of each policeman and fireman of the District will be reduced $240 per year below what it now is, and I do not believe that would be right or just. I hope the amendment of the Senator from New York may be adopted. I urge it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, in connection with the subject under discussion, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the report of the Congressional Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, which was filed on March 12, and a few days later the printed report was placed on the desk of each Senator.

On page 306 of this report you will find the reclassification of the salaries of the members of the police department. Referring to the bill increasing their salaries, which was approved December 5, 1919, you will find that under that bill the privates of class 1 received $1,460 each. I understand that at the time that bill was passed they received the bonus, so that would make privates of class 1 receive $1,700, including their basic salary and the bonus. Under the report of the Reclassification Commission, on page 306, you will find that for subprivates, who are comparable with privates of class 1, there is a recommendation for an annual salary of $1,680. The principal lines of promotion are from subprivate to junior private. You will find that the junior private, in this report of the joint commission, is comparable to the privates of class 2 in the bill which was approved December 5, 1919. The recommended salaries for junior privates are $1,740 to $1,800. The commission felt it necessary to have not what you would call a promotion, but an increase in salary after the junior private had served a year and had shown that degree of efficiency which would entitle him to an increase in salary, so that going from a subprivate to a junior private he would begin on a salary of $1,740, and that salary could be increased to $1,800, which, with the salary granted under the act of December 5, 1919, with the bonus, would be $1,800.

The line of promotion is from junior private to senior private, and the salary recommended by the commission of senior private, who is comparable to a private of class 3 under the act of 1919, is $1,860 to $1,920.

All of the recommendations in this report cover all the classes referred to in the act that I have been reading, which was adopted in 1919. I believe, Mr. President, that if Senators have opportunity or time to study this report, they will find that on its adoption it will relieve the Congress of a great deal of unnecessary work, because this report shows that what you are doing now will be unnecessary, because the basic salaries, as provided for in the act of December 5, 1919, with the bonus which you will now add to that basic salary, are comparable to the salaries recommended by this report.

I simply call the Senate's attention to this at this time because I believe some attention should be given to the report of the Congressional Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, filed here March 12.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I shall say, before asking the question, that what the Senator says touches the vital point that is now before us. Does not the Senator believe that the compensation should be provided for by fixed salaries and should not depend upon bonuses from year to year?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do, Mr. President. Of course, the recommendation the commission has made places me in this position, that I must support the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], because the salary recommended under the report of the Congressional Joint Commission would be about what the present basic salary is, with the $240 bonus now proposed.

Mr. WARREN. It varies somewhat. But let me say again that this raise was made, part of it, as recently as December, and the other part late in January, and a classification was made but not by the Reclassification Commission. Does not the Senator think that it should be taken up and should conform to the classification which the Commission on Reclassification has proposed? And if so, should it not be done by the proper committee in the District appropriation bill, which is now in the office of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, or by the Committee on the District of Columbia? In that manner we may do away with having the proposition of a bonus haunt us from door to door and from year to year, after we shall receive the report on classifications with known salaries, so that an employee taking a place may know what he is to get and need not depend from year to year upon a bonus which may or may not be provided.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that we not only ought to take this matter up in connection with the salaries of policemen but in connection with the salaries of all Federal employees in the District of Columbia. From my observation Congress has been handling this matter in the past by piecemeal, no scientific method being used at all in giving salaries to the employees in this District, and a bonus does not represent what the employee earns or what the employee is entitled to. It is a temporary sum that we say we will give to them, but which we reserve the right to cut off at any time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not sure I understood the Senator correctly, and I ask my questions in order that I may understand aright. Do I understand from what the Senator has said that the present basic salary, plus the bonus which these men will receive in the event the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York is adopted——

Mr. CALDER. Which they are getting now.

Mr. POMERENE. Which they are getting now—would be about the equivalent of the salary which is proposed by the Reclassification Commission?

Mr. HENDERSON. In some cases a little less and in some cases a little more, and in cases where we have provided these steps of increase in salary which we felt were necessary in order to hold and retain employees in the service, taking an average, it would be about what it is now. I do not think the difference is very material.

Mr. POMERENE. I sympathize with the proposition that there should be some legislation upon the subject of reclassifying and adjusting these salaries; but under the rules of the Senate and our time-honored way of doing business here, with unlimited debate, can the Senator tell us when that reclassification bill will finally become a law?

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Ohio, I will state that I was just going to tell the Senator from Wyoming that if I felt we could get an early hearing upon this report and upon the resolution that is now before the Senate, and which has been objected to a number of times, I would approve postponing this matter until all the salaries of the Federal employees in the District of Columbia could be considered. But I have no assurance, I will say to the Senator from Ohio, that we will be able to get any action on the resolution or on the report this session of Congress. We have repeatedly tried, and I want to say that I am going to try again just as soon as I can get the opportunity to do so.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, the Senator from Nevada knows that this commission is a joint commission; he knows that bills to take up such matters should originate in the House. He expects the bill to originate there, does he not? I do not say that it has to originate there, but that is the usual and better way.

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he was asking the Senator from Ohio a question.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Nevada alluded to the Senator from Wyoming and the taking up of the proposed classifications. The Senate stands ready to take those matters up at any time when opportunity offers. But courtesy to the House, the observance of usages, and our rules are such that we do expect that the same report made by one-half of your commission, going to the House, will receive its attention there, and then will come to us. Does not the Senator expect that?

Mr. HENDERSON. I expect that. But we have pending before the Senate a resolution which has been reported favorably from the proper committee, so that we would not lose the result of this work which has been carried on at an expense of nearly $75,000 for the last year, and we have been unable to get that resolution before the Senate because of the time-honored custom to which the Senator from Ohio refers.

Mr. WARREN. Now, will the Senator grant a moment more? The way to get that before the Senate is not to cut the ground out from under it by going on in the manner proposed. I do not want to use a word that would not look well in print applied to the present system of bonuses, but the move of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to bring it before us at this time simply tends to undermine the work of this Reclassification Commission, and to provide for a great number of men by a bonus who will, of course, ask for bonus continually, instead of systematically erecting a line of regular salaries and wages based upon efficiency.

Nearly all the clerks in the United States service are of class 1, class 2, class 3, or class 4, drawing basic salaries of $1,200, $1,400, $1,600, and $1,800, respectively. They have not been raised one penny since that system was inaugurated 35 or 40 years ago. These numbers not only have had no rise on account of the high cost of living but have had none on any other account in all those years. Shall you by bonuses favor some and leave those loyal people, who have been all this time standing by the Government, amid the stress and strain of war, month after month, and year after year, before we take up this reclassification and provide for all of them? That is the point I make.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I appreciate the fact, of course, that the Senator from Wyoming is a Senator of a very practical turn of mind, and a man who has done long and valued service in the Senate. But let us try to be really practical in this matter, and permit me to make this suggestion: We are now legislating on the subject of salaries and compensation. We are making an appropriation to pay these salaries. The Senator has presented an amendment to the bill providing for a continuance of the present bonus system to the employees who are beneficiaries under that amendment, and I want to commend him and the committee for having so done. I feel that it would have been a crime almost to have not provided for this bonus, and I regret that it was stricken from the bill in the House.

I do not mean to criticize. They acted under their rules and I have no further comment to make except to say that I think it was unfortunate that they did not make this provision.

Let me suggest this: You are providing here for a bonus for a very large number of employees, and the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] is simply to extend the bonus to a certain other number.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. But it is proposed to select a class which has had its salaries nearly doubled within three or four months and includes them with those who have not had a penny of raise in 35 years.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that may be; but that is not the fault of the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee. It is the fault of those who framed the law before so as not to include them. It is true, I dare say—at least it was last December—that we were waiting upon the report of the Reclassification Commission. But now that we are dealing with this subject we can provide for these employees, and an extension of this bonus, if it is just, and that is all I am interested in. If it can be shown to me that it is too much for these employees, I should be disposed to vote against it. But I have been impressed with the fact that the only fault that can be found with the bonus is that it has not been large enough under all the circumstances.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHIPPS in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me just a moment. Let me make this suggestion to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee. Let us adopt the amendment of the Senator from New York, assuming, of course, that it is not paying an excessive amount to these men. Then we will have so many provided for; and if the joint resolution comes up later, to which the Senator from Nevada has referred—and I hope it will—we can classify the employees as they ought to be classified, and we can adjust their salaries as they ought to be adjusted; and if the salaries which shall be adopted in that joint resolution differ with the provisions for certain employees contained in this appropriation bill, we can add a section repealing or modifying these provisions in the appropriation bill.

If we do that, then we will be taking care of these employees. If we are going to depend upon what the Congress may do with regard to the join resolution, it will not be clear that they will be provided for. Now I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not understand that the Senator from Wyoming is opposing the increase, from what he stated yesterday. What he objects to, as I understand it, is the inclusion of it in this bill. He thinks it ought to come in on another bill. As in the pending bill the bonus is provided for certain employees, and an exception is made, written into the provision, with regard to the Metropolitan police force and the firemen, does not the Senator think the action of the Senate would be interpreted, if we should adopt the proposal made by the Appropriations Committee, excluding the Metropolitan police force and the firemen from sharing in the bonus, that the Senate goes on record as being opposed to any bonus, and in the other House, when the proposition might come up to give them a bonus in the District bill, or any bill, it would then be cited that the Senate expressly excepted the policemen and the firemen of the District from the benefit of the bonus, although they provided for everybody else?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that it could not be so construed when there are almost numberless other exceptions to other classes of employees. In fact, the bonus only applies to those that have not been provided for otherwise, and to cover the gap between now and the time when we adopt a new schedule which may do away with the bonus question.

Mr. HARRISON. But the exception is provided there, and when you adopt your provision you go down on record as being in favor of the exception.

Mr. WARREN. This bill is full of exceptions. The Senator himself makes an exception.

Mr. HARRISON. It is full of exceptions, but it is full of bonuses granted to certain employees.

Mr. WARREN. The bonuses apply to those who have had no other increases and have worked here, some of them, for 30 or 40 years without any raise whatever, and we have provided that those who came here during the war and received a larger rate of pay shall not receive this bonus benefit.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming if he is in favor of the bonus next year of $240 to firemen and policemen?

Mr. WARREN. I am not in favor of a bonus to pay the firemen and policemen until the Committee on the District of Columbia, or the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which handles District matters, may go over the different classifications. If their salaries should be raised an amount which would cover the bonus, all right; if they should be raised more, all right; if some of them should be made less, then all right. But it does seem to me that we are slighting every loyal employee who has been here in Government service all these years with no raise until we adopted this matter of the bonus a few years ago. We raised this class of employees 40 to 80 per cent two or four months ago in regular salaries, and now we are asked to add enough more to more than double the pay of some of them with a bonus, while other employees have to wait still another year to get anything added except the paltry sum of $240 as a bonus.

Mr. HARRISON. They should not have to wait; they ought to be given the bonus.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I inquire of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] whether anyone opposed the bill increasing the salaries of the members of the police department, which was approved December 5, 1919, on the ground that they would get the bonus in addition to the salaries provided for in this act?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not recall the facts. I was here a part of the time, but I do not recall the facts. The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] can probably answer that question.

Mr. CALDER. No one opposed the increase in pay for the policemen.

Mr. HENDERSON. At that time everyone knew that when that bill became a law they would get the bonus in addition to the basic salary.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. CALDER. I presume they did.

Mr. WARREN. They did not know it. It was not understood. The bill itself provides otherwise, but after providing that those who have had the raise of $200 shall not be recognized by the bonus, it provides that in emergency cases the head of a department may for the time being allow the bonus.

If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, he and others speak of this matter as if lately discovered. I want to say to those Senators that I went personally to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to tell them at the time when we were having trouble here in the District that I believed that, in considering District matters in Congress the last term, we had not done justice to the firemen and policemen. The commission was speaking of the trouble it was having and the papers were full of reports of crime, and I asked its members if they would not go to the proper committee of the House—the District Committee—and take it up there, as they could do, because it is a half-and-half proposition, or has been heretofore. So I had every reason then to give those employees everything that I believed it to be right for them to have, and I believe my record in that respect is as clear as that of anyone here.

It may be that the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] or some other Senator has taken it upon himself to assure these men that they can have the bonus now and have the bonus hereafter, but they had no authority from the committee to do that. Not only did they have no authority from the committee but there is no knowledge on the part of members of the Committee on Appropriations that there had been such reports. I never knew it until this matter came up before the committee last week, and I have asked other members of the committee and I have not found one who knew anything about this implied promise that was being played upon in connection with those men.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand the Senator, at the time this act of December 5, 1919, was approved——

Mr. WARREN. I was very glad that came in. I was very glad to vote for it, and I would be glad to vote again for a change in that if it was presented here in the proper way in regular legislation and to conform to the classification if that is adopted for other Government employees; but I object to granting additional favors to a particularly favored class of employees who have already been so generously treated within three months. I object to putting on another proposition and still having a third rearrangement to consider when this matter of reclassification is taken up.

Mr. CALDER. May I say a word right here? I have no recollection that at the time this matter was up we discussed on the floor the fact that these bonuses were to be paid. I can say to the Senate that it was my understanding of it, and it was the judgment or the view of the conference committee representing the Senate in connection with their dealings with the House, it was repeatedly stated on the floor of the House, and I recall reading it in the records of the proceedings over there, and I believe everybody understood it here.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator does not mean that, surely. I am one of "everybody," and I certainly did not understand it, and I was here, and I supported the measure.

Mr. CALDER. I did not say they did. I said I believed they did.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not see why the Senator from New York believed that they did. The law as it existed at that time—December 5, 1919—affecting bonuses had this provision among other exceptions:

> Or shall receive during the fiscal year 1920 an increase of salary at a rate in excess of $200 per annum.

There is no one class of employees in the fire department, and there is no class of employees in the Metropolitan police, that did not receive more than $200 per annum increase.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I have before me a letter from the National Zoological Park——

Mr. SMOOT. That is not the Metropolitan police at all.

Mr. POMERENE. I know, but it is a part of the police force.

Mr. SMOOT. No; they are entirely in another place and not mentioned in this amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. These are police officers receiving no increase whatsoever in their pay. They did finally receive the bonus of $240.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean the Metropolitan police?

Mr. POMERENE. No; I do not. I said National Zoological Park police. There are eight of them, and they have received no increase. The sergeant receives $85 per month and privates $80 per month and later received this bonus, but they were not included in the number or the classes of the police officers who received any increase.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the Senator is wrong in that statement, although it is not effective——

Mr. POMERENE. I think these police officers ought to know what pay they receive, and I get my information direct from them. I have not gone to the department.

Mr. SMOOT. I think we had better let the law speak and not a report coming to the Senator from Ohio from anyone. Let the law speak for itself.

Mr. POMERENE. I would be glad to hear what it is.

Mr. SMOOT. Section 3 reads as follows:

> SEC. 3. That the watchmen provided by the United States Government for service in any of the public squares and reservations in the District of Columbia shall hereafter be known as the "United States park police," and their annual basic salaries shall be as follows: Lieutenant, $1,900; first sergeant, $1,700; sergeants, $1,580; privates, $1,360: Provided, That every watchman employed for such service at the time this act becomes law shall, in addition to the salary received by him for the period of service between August 1, 1919, and the time this act becomes law, receive for such period the difference between such salary and the salary payable to him under the provisions of this section for a period of equal duration.

I will tell the Senator if he wants to know what the salaries were before. I can not help what was reported to the Senator. I want to take the law as it is.

Mr. POMERENE. I have the letter here from the men who are supposed to be the beneficiaries under this legislation, or rather who ought to have been the beneficiaries.

Mr. SMOOT. They will be under the amendment we are discussing.

Mr. POMERENE. Under the bonus provision they are receiving the bonus, but they received none of the increase. That is what I am speaking about.

Since the question is raised, I propose to read this letter. It is dated February 13, 1920, and reads as follows:

> The undersigned, who are doing police duty in the National Zoological Park, wish to convey to your notice and ask for information as regards their standing as per section 3, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, November 17, 1919. The compensation we are now receiving is as follows: Sergeant, $85 per month plus bonus; privates, $80 per month plus bonus, from which we furnish our uniforms.
> The police doing duty in all the other parks in the District have received an increase in pay amounting to $1,360 plus bonus and are furnished with uniforms and other wearing apparel gratis. They are practically doing exactly the same work as the police in the National Zoological Park. It seems that we should be treated the same way; if there is no appropriation for our uniforms we should be granted an equivalent in compensation.
> We also beg to be informed why the park police were given the increase and why the increase failed to include the police of the National Zoological Park.

Mr. SMOOT. That information is not true. I will say to the Senator that whoever wrote it—I was going to say they wrote it knowing it was not true——

Mr. POMERENE. I do not think the Senator ought to make that statement. I have the signatures of these men to this letter.

Mr. SMOOT. I was not going to discuss the question of park policemen, but inasmuch as the Senator has brought it up I want to have it out right now. The law approved December 5, 1919, gives to the privates in the park police $1,360. That letter says the sergeants are getting $840 plus the bonus. Is that true?

Mr. POMERENE. I did not say that.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the Senator said.

Mr. POMERENE. No; I beg the Senator's pardon. I said the sergeants were getting $85 a month.

Mr. SMOOT. I said the privates, and the Senator said the privates were getting how much?

Mr. POMERENE. The writer of the letter says:

> The police doing duty in all other parks of the District have received an increase in pay amounting to $1,360 plus the bonus.

Mr. SMOOT. What was the increase? The Senator said they had not been increased.

Mr. POMERENE. I am speaking about these policemen in the National Zoological Park.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, the Senator's letter refers to another different class of employees. The Senator said——

Mr. POMERENE. I read this letter, and if there is any mistake about it it is the Senator from Utah that misunderstood me. I can read, at least, and I think I understand what I read, even if the Senator does not.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to refer to the class of police he first spoke of. The Senator referred to the park police.

Mr. POMERENE. I said the National Zoological Park police, and I had this letter before me at the time and was looking at it when I used the phrase.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator said the park police.

Mr. POMERENE. The RECORD will show.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I took the law and read what the park police were receiving. The privates of the park police were increased from $840 to $1,360; the sergeants receive an increase from $950 to $1,580; the first sergeant was increased from $1,200 to $1,900; and the lieutenant was increased from $1,900 to $2,000. This is the law in relation to the park police.

Mr. POMERENE. Is that the law with regard to the National Zoological Park police?

Mr. SMOOT. I am simply saying that is the law; and I will read it again.

Mr. POMERENE. I have asked the Senator a specific question. Is that the law as applied to the National Zoological Park police?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The watchmen in certain parks are provided for in another bill entirely—the sundry civil bill. If these men referred to by the Senator from Ohio are policemen, they have been authorized to act as such, but they are not provided for in this bill at all. They are provided for in another bill which is coming up hereafter.

Mr. POMERENE. One of the men who presented this matter to me has been doing duty in this capacity as a member of the National Zoological Park police for some years, as I am told, and he said they had received no increase whatsoever except the bonus which has been granted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I refer to section 3 of the law of December 5, 1919, which provides for the United States park police, and it is to them the Senator from Ohio referred in the beginning, and it was that reference which I was answering.

However, Mr. President, those men are not involved in this amendment at all. I myself think that the Zoological Park policemen ought to have their compensation increased. I will admit that there is some difference in the character of their work and that of the Metropolitan police; but it can not be said that when the increase was given to the Metropolitan police by the act of December 5, 1919, Senators did not know what the law was, because the bonus provision which was in effect at that time specifically stated that those who during the fiscal year had received an increase of salary at a rate in excess of $200 should not receive the bonus. As I have said, there is not a member of the Metropolitan police, there is not a member of the United States park police, but who in the act of December 5, 1919, received more than a $200 increase. Therefore, automatically they were cut off from the bonus.

Mr. President, the same provision applies to hundreds of employees in the different departments of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. Do I understand from the Senator that the privates of the Metropolitan fire and police departments have not received this bonus at all?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly they have received the bonus; but they received the bonus under the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. THOMAS. That was my impression.

Mr. SMOOT. But after the passage of that act they continued receiving the $240 because of the fact that they had not received an increase for that fiscal year; but on December 5, 1919, there was a special act passed increasing their salaries. Of course, they were provided with the bonus until June 30, 1920, by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for 1920; but the contention now is that when the act of December 5, 1919, increasing their salaries was under consideration it was understood that they should continue to receive the bonus and continue to be provided for in the legislative appropriation act for 1921. Of course, that contention can not be maintained.

Mr. CALDER. They now receive the bonus.

Mr. SMOOT. They will receive the bonus up to the end of June this year, because last year's legislative appropriation bill provided for that; but if there has been an increase in their compensation during the present fiscal year of more than $200, even if there were no mention made in this legislation of the Metropolitan police, they could not receive the bonus, because the law provided specifically that the bonus shall not be paid if there has been an increase in salary during the fiscal year of $200 or more.

I was saying, Mr. President, there are many among the hundreds of employees in the District of Columbia who will not receive the bonus next year. There are hundreds and thousands of employees that have not heretofore received the bonus. One reason why the limitation of $200 was put into the bill was that officials of the departments came into Senators' offices and took from them their clerks, for when salaries could be paid from lump-sum appropriations the departments did not hesitate to any great extent as to the salaries they offered. Clerks have been taken from the offices of Representatives, clerks have been taken from the offices of Senators, where their salary was $1,500 a year, and have been paid $2,400 a year and as high as $3,000 a year. The Government had to pay the salary in both cases. So it was decided, Mr. President, that there should be no transfer from one department to another unless there was a request and a permit granted for such transfer. In the same manner the new bureaus robbed the old departments of the Government of their best employees. While clerks were employed under statutory rates of compensation, the old departments of the Government could not increase the pay, but when the new bureaus were created, and Congress gave them lump-sum appropriations, the question of salary was left in the hands of the chief clerks of the bureaus, and they, as I have said, robbed the old departments of their most efficient employees. A law had to be passed to stop that practice. That is the reason why the law was passed forbidding the transfer of employees from one department to another without a request on the part of the department to which the employee was to go and the consent of the department from which he was taken.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me for just a moment, I will respond to the inquiry of the Senator from Ohio. I have here the estimates for the sundry civil appropriation bill, in which provision is sought to be made for 1 sergeant and 10 policemen and certain messengers, and so forth. They are paid out of a lump-sum appropriation, and those in authority can make the salaries what they please. They have recommended an increase in the salaries, but unless the matter is taken up by the committee and a greater sum than $115,000, which is the amount appropriated last year to cover the same ground, is appropriated for the next fiscal year, it will probably not be possible to increase the compensation. The $115,000 to which I have referred is a lump sum to pay the employees of the Zoological Park.

Mr. POMERENE. Is the Senator reading from the estimate upon which was based the sundry civil appropriation bill for the current year?

Mr. WARREN. The estimates to which I refer are for the next year but are the same as for the current year.

Mr. POMERENE. I am trying to find out why this condition exists. It would seem that the statement made in this letter is probably correct.

Mr. WARREN. But it has no possible connection with the item which we are considering in the pending bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I was speaking about the men, while the Senator from Utah was speaking about the law. Those are two different subjects.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason of that was that the Senator stated in the first place that he referred to the park police. If he had said the Zoological Park police the matter would have been clear.

Mr. POMERENE. I did not say that, and I had this letter before me at the time I was reading.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say that the statement made in the letter is not correct, inasmuch as I now understand it is for a different class of employees, who are not provided for in the bill under discussion. I have, however, not looked it up.

Mr. POMERENE. I accepted the statement which was made by these police officers, and I have no reason to question the statements they have made.

Mr. SMOOT. We were discussing the pending bill, and they are not provided for in this bill, and the Senator referred to the park police.

Mr. POMERENE. But statements were made here that the police officers generally had had a substantial increase, and I was pointing out a class that had not had any increase except the bonus.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course they are a different class of policemen, and their service is performed in a particular place, and from what I know they are not paid a wage to compare to what the United States park police or the Metropolitan police are paid.

Mr. POMERENE. That is very true; and that is why I am complaining about it.

Mr. SMOOT. But they are not provided for in the pending bill. When the bill in which provision is made for them is under consideration I will join the Senator in seeing that some change in their salaries is made. There is not any doubt that the Zoological Park police, to whom the Senator now refers, will receive the $240 bonus; they are not excepted from the provision providing for a bonus, and they are receiving it to-day.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes; they will receive the $240 bonus; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. SMOOT. And they will receive it under this bill for another year.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about it at all.

Mr. POMERENE. But these men can not pay for their uniforms and live on the salaries now paid them.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator as to that class of policemen, but I am not inclined to think that is the case with United States park police or with the Metropolitan police.

Mr. POMERENE. That is not the class about which I was talking.

Mr. SMOOT. That, however, was the class that I was discussing.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. The statement has been made, I think by the Senator from Utah, and I know by other Senators, that the matter of bonus was not considered when the bill increasing the compensation of policemen was under discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; I did not say that; I simply said that anybody who did not know that the legislation would prevent their receiving the bonus under the law did not know what the then existing law was.

Mr. CALDER. I have, Mr. President, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD here containing the debate in the House, and it was explicitly stated there by the gentleman who had charge of the bill that "the salaries mentioned and here fixed are plus the bonus." The House so understood and they passed the bill with that understanding. In the House report it is also stated explicitly that the bonus was to be paid.

Mr. SMOOT. Were any of the salaries raised in the Senate over the amount carried in the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. CALDER. No.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as that is concerned, I say that under the law that existed at that time they could not have received the bonus, because the law explicitly provides that if there is an increase in compensation amounting to over $200 during the year the bonus shall not apply; and everybody in the Senate, as I recall, understood that to be the case. They certainly did, if they knew anything about the law that was upon the statute books.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio referred to the fact that we ought to be just. So say I; we ought to be just not to only one class of employees but to all the employees of the Government. What are you going to say to the 104,000 employees outside of the police force? Are you going to say, "You can have $240 and that is all—$240 increase over salaries fixed 35 years ago, with no increase whatever; that is what you can have"? The Metropolitan police and the United States park police, however, did on December 5, 1919, receive increases all the way up to 74 per cent of their fixed salaries, and now it is proposed to add to that a $240 bonus. The Appropriations Committee, Mr. President, says that is not right; that is not just; and I do not believe that the 104,000 other employees of the Government will say that it is just. Why not take the limit entirely off? Why not allow the chief clerks to select employees in the various divisions and bureaus of the Government, and say, "Here is my pet, here is the man to whom I want to show a particular favor, and I will promote him; he is to be paid out of a lump-sum appropriation; he is now receiving $1,200, and, as he is my friend, I want to give him $2,500"? There is nothing, Mr. President, with the exception of where we have specifically provided that salaries shall not exceed a certain amount, to prevent such a thing being done; and it has been done in departments of the Government.

Under this bill, and under every bonus provision since the first one was enacted, that class of employee can not receive the $240 bonus, and he should not receive it. Now we are asked to select a few employees in the Metropolitan police and the United States park police service and say: "Notwithstanding you have received an increase in some cases of seventy-odd per cent during the present fiscal year we are going to give you for the coming year a $240 bonus." They will receive the bonus up to June 30, 1920; but if the amendment of the Senator from New York is adopted it means that they will not only receive this increase but they will receive the bonus up until June 30, 1921—as the Senator from Wyoming says, in some cases more than doubling their past compensation.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say in his last statement that they would receive the bonus up to 1921. Is that correct?

Mr. SMOOT. I said they would receive the bonus up to June 30, 1921, if the amendment of the Senator from New York is agreed to.

Mr. President, I wish we could have the Senators present. I wish we could talk to a full Senate. I wish these things could be understood by the Senators, and then I would not complain of a vote upon this or any other question.

I want to say to the Senators who are in the Chamber now that the Appropriations Committee have tried to do their very best and to be just to all of the employees of the departments. In this very amendment and in the first legislation granting a bonus the employees of the War Risk Bureau were given a bonus of only $120 instead of $240. Why make that discrimination?

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SMOOT. I want to answer that question myself, then I will yield.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was going to suggest why that was done.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will wait a minute, I will answer it myself. Why that discrimination? We went into a thorough examination of the salaries that were paid in the War Risk Bureau at the time that a provision similar to the pending one was under consideration. We found that the compensation paid to the clerks and other classes of employees in the War Risk Bureau amounted on an average to over $120 more than the wages paid in any of the old departments of the Government, and the Committee on Appropriations decided to be just to all the employees; so, in order to do so, the employees of the War Risk Insurance Bureau were given $120 and $240 was granted to the employees of all the old departments of the Government.

The employees of the various bureaus and agencies of the Government that have been created since the war, in the great majority of the cases, are paid from lump-sum appropriations, and the heads of those bureaus have the power to name whatever salaries they desire.

I wish the Appropriations Committee had time to go into all of these lump-sum appropriations. I hope to see the time when lump-sum appropriations will be eliminated from all of our appropriation bills, and when that time does come there will be hundreds of millions of dollars saved to the Government of the United States.

I do not want to do a wrong to an employee of the Government. I have no feeling against the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia. I know the chances they take, as referred to by the Senator from New York; but they took those same chances before an increase of salary was granted them. That is a part of their calling. I can not for the life of me see why they should receive a bonus because of the fact that they have withdrawn from some labor organization. Is it possible that we are endeavoring to offer a bribe to the employees of the Government of the United States to keep out of a labor organization? I think the suggestion casts a reflection upon every member of the Metropolitan police and of the United States park police. I believe the policemen saw the danger of belonging to an organization that might issue an order that would, if obeyed, leave the city unprotected, and withdrew thinking it was the best course to pursue. I do not say that such an order ever would have been issued to them, nor do I believe that this question ever would have arisen in the District of Columbia if it had not been for the strike of the police in Boston, Mass.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to state to the Senator that I think I can say that this increase in salary—either the direct increase or the bonus—was not in any way made in consideration of these men leaving the union. The District Committee had a hearing upon a resolution prohibiting members of the police force from affiliating with a union. That hearing was had, and no consideration was given to the salary proposition. The matter then rested in the hope that without the committee taking any action upon this resolution members of the police force who had joined the union would voluntarily sever their connection with it. They did so, and after that time the matter of salaries was taken up.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any doubt but that the statement of the Senator from Washington is absolutely correct, and I have enough confidence in the character of the Metropolitan policemen to say that it could not be otherwise.

Mr. President, if I did not believe with all my heart that the action taken by the Appropriations Committee in relation to this bonus proposition was correct I would not stand here and ask the Senate of the United States to support the committee. I hope to see the day when there shall be no bonus. A bonus is wrong in principle, and if there had been any other way to establish an increase in the compensation for all of the employees of the Government for the services they render the question of a bonus never would have been thought of. We entered the war, and the salaries of employees in private institutions all over the country were increased rapidly. The amount of salary was of very little concern to the employer. What he wanted was to get the men, get the goods made, and he knew that when the goods were made he could sell them at a profit no matter what he had to pay for the labor required to make them. Therefore when the Congress of the United States were face to face with a proposition existing in this country they had to act quickly, and, in my opinion, the only way that they could act quickly and give relief to the employees of the Government that needed it so greatly was to provide a bonus, and that was done.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I should like to ask him if he does not think that the principle of offering bonuses is more easily managed than increasing salaries permanently? The Senator knows as well as the rest of us how difficult it would be, if conditions were to change, to reduce a fixed salary; but as the bonus must be provided for each year, if conditions were to change it would be infinitely easier to leave off the bonus than it would to reduce the salaries.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is infinitely easier for Congress to do it, but it is not just. Why should a man who gives to the Government of the United States all that is in him, who works overtime, who remains with the Government until he knows the details of everything in the department in which he labors, receive only a bonus of $240, while a little girl who has never passed the seventh grade receives the same amount of bonus? It is not right, and no one can justly defend it. The Congress, however, was up against the proposition that it had to do something, and with bonuses the work itself can not be differentiated. It must be a bonus to one and all alike, and therefore, while it is a great deal simpler, while it could be expressed in legislation with the very least number of words, it is unjust to the men and the women who give all they have in them to the Government of the United States and are not watching for the hands of the clock to reach the hour of 4.30 so that they can leave their desk and have no concern for the morrow. So, Mr. President, I feel concerned about this amendment, and I hope that the Senate of the United States will support the committee in the provision that they have reported to the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from New York whether or not he intends to offer any other amendment to this committee amendment?

Mr. CALDER. Not unless the language in some other part of the amendment will prevent its becoming effective. If my amendment is adopted and becomes effective, I shall not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has the Senator in mind any amendment that he wishes to offer in addition to the one he has already proposed?

Mr. CALDER. There is some doubt in my mind as to the language on page 163, where it says that an employee who received an increase of more than $200 during the preceding year shall not be granted a bonus unless the head of the particular department recommends him for the bonus.

Mr. WARREN. That is exactly the language under which they are now being paid.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I asked the Senator from New York the question because I have not any doubt in my own mind as to what the result would be if the amendment he has now proposed is adopted and no other amendment is made to the amendment of the committee. Without a perversion of the law, it would not affect the salaries of these men one cent. Not one of them would get the bonus, simply for the reason that every member of the police force and every member of the firemen's force has received an increase of more than $200 during this fiscal year, and the amendment says that "where an employee in the service on June 30, 1919, has received during the fiscal year 1920, or shall receive during the fiscal year 1921, an increase of salary at a rate in excess of $200 per annum," he shall not get the bonus. There can not be any doubt about what that means. So the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from New York, without anything else, will not aid these men toward getting a single cent of the bonus.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. Is it not a fact that under the language of the provision on page 163 that would be taken care of?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was just going to read that. It has been suggested that there is certain language in the amendment that would take care of it. That language is the following:

> Such employees shall be granted the increased compensation provided herein only when and upon the certification of the person in the legislative branch or the head of the department or establishment employing such persons of the ability and qualifications personal to such employees as would justify such increased compensation.

It has been suggested that under that language the heads of the departments would give certain of these men the increase of $240. I want to say that that would be a perversion of the intention and purpose of that provision. It seems to me that the purpose is to provide that where any employee, by reason of peculiar ability or qualification, shows himself to be worthy of an increase, then it can be given.

Mr. NELSON. In an individual case?

Mr. JONES of Washington. In an individual case.

Mr. NELSON. Not a whole class?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not a whole class at all. That is not intended to give the head of a bureau or the head of a department the general power to regulate the salaries of his subordinates and bring them up to what they ought to be commensurate with the high cost of living.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. He said the police who are sought to be excluded from the operation of this amendment had received in excess of $200. Has the Senator information as to what their salaries are now?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It has been read here time and again.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I was not present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know it. The Senator was necessarily absent on business of the Senate. That is the trouble about discussing these things, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] said awhile ago; Senators are not here, and can not be here. They do not know the facts with reference to the particular subject under consideration. So they vote, apparently, as they are struck by the suggestion or statement that comes to them when they return to the Chamber.

I am not saying that these men are given too high a salary. I doubt if they are getting sufficient. But that same argument can be applied to practically all the employees of the Government, especially those who are getting under $2,400 or $2,500 a year. We want to do justice in this matter, and, as the Senator from Utah said, the main reason why this exception was put in here was to act justly and act fairly.

I want simply to emphasize what he called attention to, that there are hundreds of the employees of the Government who are getting small salaries, but who receive during this year an increase, by promotion or otherwise, of $200. They must drop the bonus beginning June 30. They do not get the bonus for next year. Is it fair, is it just, is it square dealing and square treatment for officials who have received five, six, seven, or eight hundred dollars increase during the year to be given a bonus beginning June 30, 1920, when the clerk who received a $200 increase, because he got that increase, will not get the bonus beginning June 30, 1920? There is the proposition that confronts us in this matter, and that is the proposition which confronted the committee, and the committee could not see where it was fair to do that.

Senators, if this amendment is adopted then we ought to strike out every part of the amendment from line 3 down to line 20 on page 163, and give to every employee who has a salary under $2,500 this bonus, no matter what increase he has had during the past year. If the Senate desires to do that, it ought to adopt the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. If it does not desire to do that, then it seems to me, in fairness and in justness to the hundreds and thousands of other employees of the Government, the amendment ought to be rejected.

Mr. President, the policemen do not want this unfair treatment. I talked with some of them this morning. They recognize that situation. I called it to their attention, and they said they did not want to be put in a class by themselves so far as treatment of that kind is concerned. They do not ask for different treatment from that given other employees of the Government. They do not want it, and they do not expect it.

If the amendment of the Senator from New York should be adopted, as I said, we ought to strike out all of this amendment of the committee from line 3 down to and including line 20.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. For my information, I ask the Senator if the policemen would get the increase proposed by the Senator from New York unless we further modify the paragraph referred to by the Senator?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have said that I do not think they would. They would not get a cent.

Mr. GRONNA. Unless there would be a perversion of the law?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; it could be done by a perversion of the law; the head of a department would give a blanket certification. That is not the intention.

Mr. GRONNA. So, as a matter of fact, it would not be of any substantial benefit to the policemen of this city?

Mr. JONES of Washington. In my judgment, it would be of no help at all—not one penny.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me, why, then, was the language which I have sought to strike out put in the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Because of the very fact that we wanted to enumerate the exceptions, just the same as we do with the War Risk Bureau—just the same as we do with the vocational educational force. They ought to be enumerated, because of the fact that next year it will call attention to the fact that we have this bonus but that these classes have been eliminated.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me again, I know of a whole group of men in the navy yard at New York who received an increase of pay of about $280, but who have not been mentioned specifically in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Nor do they get the bonus, because of the fact that they fall within the prevented class, having received an increase of more than $200.

Mr. CALDER. I know that is the case. I would be very glad, if my amendment is agreed to, to have the Senator from Washington offer an amendment striking out the language to which he refers. I would vote for it.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, I want to say to him that if the Senate adopts such an amendment I shall, I fear, not be able to protect any kind of a bonus when we get into conference. The House itself allowed the matter to pass out with little or no effort to retain it. The House found other ways of getting around points of order on other matters that went out on points of order, like, for instance, the commercial attachés; but this bonus went out cold, with no definite plan for its reintroduction, as in the case of other matters which went out on points of order and were taken care of. I read every word of the debate on this subject as it proceeded in the House to keep posted, as the chairman of a committee ought to do always, and I know it hangs by a thread; and if you load this up in the manner in which you propose to load it you will probably get no bonus at all. That will be the result of it.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me further, I asked the questions which I have put, and which the Senator was kind enough to answer, for the reason that personally I am in sympathy with the policemen of this city. I would be glad to do something which would be of substantial help to them. But I can really see that the amendment would be merely a subterfuge; that it would not and could not be of any substantial benefit unless we eliminate the restrictions entirely; and, of course, in that case all those who receive above $2,500 would get the $240 bonus, which can not be done.

Mr. CALDER. Oh, no; the man who gets over $2,500 will not get it.

Mr. STERLING. I was interested in what the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] had to say in reference to talking to the policemen of the city, and I wondered if those men had made any claim because of the more hazardous nature of their work or because of the longer hours in which they were employed; if any of them claimed at all that they should have additional compensation on that account?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They did not say anything about that this morning. Of course, those matters were gone into, however, when we prepared legislation increasing their salaries. In the general legislation that we passed that was taken into account, and I think very properly.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator has seen, perhaps, the report of the Reclassification Commission——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but I have not been able to examine it carefully.

Mr. STERLING. With regard to salaries of this kind. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] called attention to it this morning. The report shows that the salaries recommended by the Reclassification Commission would approximate the salaries provided with the bonus added thereto.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that, to my mind, has no bearing upon the question really at issue before the Senate. That is a proposition which will be considered when we come to reclassifying the salaries. We are considering now simply a bonus proposition, that we have had in our legislation for two or three years, and which was adopted in this legislation to meet conditions that have already been described. The question before the Senate now is simply as to whether we are going to follow an entirely different course with reference to the bonus itself from that we have been following heretofore, and whether, in the interest of one particular class, we are going to work an injustice to many others in the Government service whom we have been trying by this bonus system to treat fairly and to put on the same basis.

When the bonus system was first put in the act, my recollection is that it had the provision in it that if they had received an increase of salary of $200 they would not get the benefit of it. So those who had that increase did not get any bonus. Then, in the next act we inserted a provision again that any employees of the Government who had received an increase of $200 or more should not get the bonus. Therefore, any person who was getting a bonus for that year, but had received an increase of $200, dropped the bonus the next year. When we were considering the legislation to increase the salaries of the firemen and policemen, I was a member of the District Committee, not a member of the subcommittee, but I never thought anything except that while we increased their salaries they continued to draw the bonus to the end of this year, because the law had already provided it. We never thought anything about a change which would give them the bonus, notwithstanding this increase in salaries. I thought our bonus proposition, if carried at all, would be carried just as before.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. If the same increases had come over from the previous year, then these men would get the bonus next year, would they not, under the language of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the increase had been made last year and then they had not gotten above $2,500, if they had not received any additional increase, this year they would certainly get the bonus.

Mr. CALDER. So that if the present bonus system extends over the next fiscal year, ending June 30, 1921, these men can get the bonus?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That depends upon what provision we make in the law.

Mr. CALDER. If we follow the same language?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. So these men, in fact, will suffer a reduction in pay, whether you call it a bonus or otherwise, of $20 a month for a period of one year.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No more than other employees of the Government who got an increase of $200 will suffer a reduction in pay. They all suffer a reduction in pay. Anyone who got an increase of $200 by promotion and the bonus of $240 drops the bonus of $240 on the 30th of June. They get a reduction if the provision remains as it is in the bill. That is the proposition to which I am opposed. If the Senator's amendment is adopted, then I am in favor of striking out this other provision. It ought to be done in fairness and justice and square dealing to other employees of the Government.

Mr. CALDER. I would agree with the Senator, if this was not an unusual case. We are dealing, as I said this morning, with men who guard the property of the city, the Capital of the Nation, and the lives of our officials. We have had difficulty in the past in keeping up the morale of the force. We can not fill vacancies existing now, and I insist that if we reduce their pay the situation will become more chaotic.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the argument which comes with reference to all the various employees in the different branches of the Government service. That is the argument that appeals to us when we are fixing the salaries of the officials. It is the argument that appeals to me upon the proposition of a permanent increase in the salaries of these employees.

Just the other day a representative of one of the organizations of the Government came to me urging that we should increase salaries. Why? Because if we do not, they were going to lose the greater part of their force. The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] has an amendment pending before the Committee on Commerce now proposing to raise all salaries of civil engineers connected with river and harbor work. I am getting telegrams and letters every day stating that unless this legislation is enacted the Government will lose the services of those experienced men. That may be true. It may be true that they ought to have greater pay, but that, to my mind, does not apply to the question now before the Senate. I do not think anybody sympathizes more with the firemen and the policemen than I do. I may be dull, I may not be able to grasp the situation, but, to my mind, the situation is really this: Are we, by an express bonus provision, going to treat one class of employees differently from another class of employees? That is the only question to my mind that is involved here.

As I said, the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will not alone give these men a single dollar unless the head of the department perverts the law and does what he ought not to do and what Congress does not intend him to do. If the Senator from New York is going to amend the provision so that the firemen and policemen shall get this bonus, then it ought to be amended so that every other employee of the Government, notwithstanding an increase of $200 during the past year, shall also get the bonus. That is the question which confronts us. The committee tried to act squarely, honestly, and fairly with these people.

I may say just one word with reference to the question the Senator asked me and which was answered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] as to the reason why this provision was put in here. I was not a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations that framed and reported it to the full committee. My general understanding was that the amendment was presented by the subcommittee in substantially the same language in which it was reported to the House. So far as I was concerned, as a member of the committee I did not give any special consideration to the provision. My understanding was that it was thought best to present the bonus proposition substantially as it was reported to the House, and we reported it that way to the Senate. Just what governed the House in putting in these provisions I am not prepared to say.

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] says it is a special case. It is a special case. These men received special consideration at the hands of Congress. They have received exceptional increases in pay during the last year, and instead of that being an argument in favor of the retention of the bonus for them it is more of an argument against its retention. But if we give them this bonus and make this section clear that they are to have the bonus, we ought to make it clear that the other employees of the Government who got an increase of $200 shall also have the bonus.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I believe in paying all employees just compensation, and I believe this class have already received what they are entitled to. I was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia when this question came up some time ago. They appointed a subcommittee, and that subcommittee brought in a report increasing the pay for privates $500 and then graduated up from 33 per cent. At that time I thought the increase was excessive. I thought they ought to have some increase, but that that amount was excessive. I moved to cut the increase down. That motion was agreed to in the committee, reducing the increase about one-half.

Then the next thing they did was to move that that should have a retroactive effect to last August. I opposed that motion. I must say that I have very little respect for the ability of people who enact laws that have a retroactive effect. It is a bad premise, it is a bad precedent.

We ought to pass laws that would be an example to the United States. However, they antedated this to the 1st of August, and they got that amendment by. Then the matter went into conference, and they gave up the reduction which I obtained in the committee and they put the pay back to that recommended by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who was a member of the subcommittee. So they have received a greater increase in pay than any other employees of the Government so far as I am aware.

I sympathize with policemen in a proper way, but I do not believe in this Miss Nancy business of patting every employee on the back. People do not have to accept employment unless they want to, and they can quit the service if they see fit to do so. We sympathize with everybody who works, but everyone ought to work. I say that the proper way to get at this would be through the Committee on the District of Columbia. That committee recommended everything it could possibly think was necessary here. My recollection is that the testimony before us was that the policemen of the District of Columbia receive greater pay than policemen receive in the city of Philadelphia. My recollection is their duties there would be more arduous than here. I think the testimony was that a private here received by virtue of this increase something like $250 a year more than they received there. The same thing was true as to a fireman.

The duty of a fireman is not an arduous one. He sits in the house and plays poker or whatever game he sees fit to play. He has to go out only occasionally, and much of the talk about "the poor fireman" is absurd. Occasionally they go out and put out a fire, but day in and day out theirs is about the nicest job I know of. I passed along the other day and saw four of them sitting around a table playing cards. Not being an expert, I could not tell exactly the nature of the game, but they were certainly having a good time.

It is well here to talk about being just to the employees of the Government, and that is correct. No Senator ought to want to do an injustice to any employee. But the time has come when we should consider doing justice to the producers of this country. I sometimes wonder, as I sit here listening to the arguments, whether Senators remember that there is anyone else in the United States except the employees of the Government.

I heard my good friend, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], tell a while ago about his watch experience. He is in better condition than I was because he can deliver the coin, 14 wheels I believe it was, to get his watch fixed. My clock up home did not run well and I put it under my arm and went down to the tinker's establishment the other day and laid it on the counter and asked what he would charge to repair it. I said that sometimes it would run and sometimes it would not. He put his thumbs in the armholes of his vest and said "I will charge you $5." I said, "No; you will not." The idea of a man telling me he would charge me $5 for fixing my clock before he had picked it up and looked to see what was the matter with it. I would not mind paying $5, but it made me mad that the man should tell me he would charge me $5 before he even looked at the clock. So I picked up the little clock, put it under my arm again, and walked up the street.

That is what the people of this country will have to come to. We will have to say that we will not pay exorbitant prices.

Speaking about the police here not joining the Federation of Labor, I look on the policemen as patriotic citizens. They have all the ordinary intelligence of mankind. They are naturally selected for their intelligence, for their bravery, for their discretion. I think we have a good lot of policemen here who have profited as the result of the police strike in Boston and who saw the danger connected with that kind of a precedent, and therefore did not care to join the Federation of Labor. Not only that, I am one who does not believe it is necessary to give a man a premium to do his duty.

We speak of this Reclassification Commission. I do not know much about it, but I read in the paper the other day where they recommend a seven-hour day. If that is what they recommended, I hope we will never hear any more about reclassification. That is one of the reasons why the cost of living is so high now, because people do not half work. I believe in reclassifying the salary of every employee in the Government, looking over it in the proper way, and arriving at a proper and just compensation, considering all the interests of the employee and the interests of the Government. But if it has to be cut down in that way, if the Government employees are only to work seven hours a day, then I say I repudiate any such reclassification.

Talk about the high cost of living! It is getting to be so now that the people are quitting the farms and coming to town, and if we, the representatives of the Government, keep on increasing the pay of employees it is going to discourage the farmer and he is going to quit the plow, and he and his boy Tom are coming to town, too, in order to get some of this public pap. What we need is to do something to encourage them to stay on the farm, and we can do that by paying only just compensation to our Government employees. Sometimes I believe if we would say, "There will be no more increase for the present until the country gets back to normal, but, on the other hand, perhaps we will decrease compensation somewhat," we would not hear much more about wanting more pay.

The time has come when we will have to put on the brakes and apply the holdback strap and say we will stop paying out so much money. This bill, in the matter of increases in salaries, has already cost the people of the District of Columbia or the Government $334,000, I believe it was. Anyone who has had an increase of 33 per cent in the last few months ought to be ashamed, and others ought to be ashamed, too, to come here and ask Congress to do anything more.

I repudiate the action of some subcommitteeman going out and making a trade with somebody and coming in here and saying that the committee or the Senate is bound. I do not want anybody to arrogate to himself that privilege when I am on the committee. I am going to be modest about it, and I do not have much to say, being a new Member of the Senate, but I want, if the committee is to be bound, the authority expressly delegated to the one who says that some such trade has been made. So, Mr. President, I hope that the amendment of the Senator from New York will be rejected. As the Senator from Washington says, I feel that if it were passed, then we should have to go back over this whole matter, take up this chaotic condition of affairs, and revise the pay scale considerably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the amendment be stated again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the amendment reported by the committee, in line 1, on page 164, after the word "Alaska," it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Officers and members of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia and the United States park police who receive the compensation fixed by the act approved December 5, 1919; officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia who receive the compensation fixed by the act approved January 24, 1920.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I presume all the Senators present understand that the pending motion is to amend an amendment reported by the committee by striking out a part of the committee amendment. I have only to say that I hope the motion will not prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. CALDER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	France	McKellar	Sheppard
Calder	Gay	McLean	Smith, Md.
Capper	Gore	McNary	Smoot
Comer	Gronna	Myers	Sterling
Culberson	Hale	Nelson	Sutherland
Cummins	Henderson	New	Thomas
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Townsend
Dial	Kellogg	Overman	Trammell
Edge	Kendrick	Phelan	Underwood
Elkins	Keyes	Phipps	Wadsworth
Fernald	Kirby	Pomerene	Warren

Mr. CAPPER. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], attending the meeting of the subcommittee to investigate the schools of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. SMITH of Arizona and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina answered to their names when called.

Mr. MCCUMBER and Mr. WATSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. DILLINGHAM and Mr. HARRISON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CALDER and Mr. UNDERWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, is it in order for me to ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment of mine?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there will have to be a reconsideration before there can be a yea-and-nay vote, because a vote was had and the result announced by the Chair. I have no wish to delay the matter, but the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is on the floor addressing the Chair, wishing to contribute something to the matter before us. I have, however, no objection to a reconsideration at the proper time.

Mr. CALDER. I request a reconsideration of the vote taken a moment ago in order that we may have the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had not announced the result of the vote.

Mr. CALDER. Then I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York requests the yeas and nays on the amendment. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CALDER. I ask for a division.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words on the amendment before it is finally voted upon. I shall detain the Senate only a few minutes.

I do not know of any set of men who have to earn their living by their daily toil who are entitled to more credit for their work, and who have had to labor under greater difficulties, than the average clerk in the departments in Washington, due to the fact that his salary did not increase and that the cost of living for a period before the war, greatly exaggerated during the war, and continuing to-day has pyramided upward and upward. Therefore, I voted in the committee to report the bonus proposition that was stricken out in the House. I voted in the committee last year for the appointment of a commission to study and report to Congress a reorganization of the salaried forces of the Government, in order that the salaried man might have a fair and just compensation. It is idle to say that we can expect to go the whole limit. We can not place the Government employee on the basis of the salaries paid by private corporations that are making war profits. The burden of taxation to-day on the American people is enormous. We must meet our war indebtedness; we must pay our obligations; and therefore our hands are shackled, and we can not do absolute and exact justice to the Government employee without burdening the Treasury to such an extent that we will jeopardize the credit of the Government.

I believe that reasonable justice should be done when the time comes, but I am not in favor of playing favorites in this matter. That is all there is in the proposition that is pending before the Senate at this hour. It is a question of a plea for favoritism.

I do not contend that an increase in salaries of $240 is a fair increase to all of the clerks in the Government employ. For some it may be too high; for a vast number it is too low; but when it was adopted we were facing the exigencies of war. We did not have time to analyze and study this situation, and we adopted it as the only expedient that was available at the time. Now we have appointed a salary commission. They have spent a year in investigating the subject. They have made their report.

The Congress has not as yet had the opportunity to analyze that report and pass upon it. I have no doubt that it will be passed upon fairly and justly when the time comes.

The House, for one reason or another, failed to include in this bill the bonus of last year. It was subject to a point of order, and it all went out. This bonus that is reported by the committee, renewing last year's contract with the clerks on that subject, is not yet in the bill. Any Senator on this floor can make a point of order against it, and it must go out; and that is the end of the bonus to every clerk in the Government employ.

As far as I am concerned, I feel very kindly disposed to pay these policemen and firemen a just and reasonable wage. They are engaged in a dangerous pursuit. They have to be uniformed men, and, as I believe, the force here in Washington is a capable and efficient force; but they are no better than anybody else. Furthermore, they are not the only employees of the Government that have had an increase. Last year numbers of men in the Government employ were prevented from getting this bonus because they had had an increase, either by individual promotion or promotion as a class.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator has just stated that a great many clerks whose salaries have been increased during the past year have failed to receive the bonus.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If they have been increased over $200, they have.

Mr. CALDER. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the only thing that is standing in the way of the firemen and policemen receiving the bonus. There is nothing else here to prevent them from getting the bonus; but notwithstanding the fact that they got the increase you want to aid them to hog it for more and get them on a better basis than the others.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to conclude what I was about to say——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator spoke a moment ago of playing favorites. If the language on page 164 that I seek to strike out is eliminated, we will place the firemen and the policemen in exactly the same position that we place all other Government employees who receive an increase; and, if the Senator will permit me, I will say to him that in many departments of the Government, and I know in the War Department, any man who receives an increase during a fiscal year who has been getting that increase for a period of six months by general order of the War Department automatically obtains the bonus. That is the practice in that department, and it may be in others, so far as I know.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know about the War Department, but I can assure the Senator that if the clerks who have come to me have told the truth—and I assume they have—there have been a vast number of them cut out of this bonus because they have been increased $200, and their chief did not desire to give them the bonus.

Mr. CALDER. I simply ask to put these men on the very same plane as other clerks and employees of the Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If that were all that the Senator from New York is doing, I would agree with him; but, in my judgment, he is doing just the opposite. He is attempting to pick out a class and play favorites with them. That is all there is in this proposition.

Why, here are the clerks in the Tariff Commission. They did not get any bonus last year and they are not getting any this year. They are not included in this bill. Here are all the clerks in the War Risk Bureau. Last year, after careful investigation, because we concluded that their average salaries were better than those of the other clerks, we gave them a bonus of only $120. They came here this year and said that that state of affairs no longer existed, that they were not getting more than the average salary, and yet in the provision which the committee reported we held them down to the $120. Now, why? We had a good reason for doing that, and we ought to be sustained by the Senate.

This bonus provision was knocked out in the House. We wanted to put it back so that these clerks could get what they got last year. If we made one amendment to this bonus proposition, it was but just and fair that we should hear them all—that we should hear the men in the Tariff Commission, the men in the War Risk Bureau, the men in the machine shops, who complained about the very thing that the Senator is complaining about now and who want to have the privilege, when their compensation has been increased over $200, of getting the bonus themselves. Now, what would have happened if we had done that? If we had stopped to take in one man, if we did not intend to play favorites over last year, we would have had to hear them all. If that had been done, we not only would have delayed the bill, but we would have had to go into the consideration of a readjustment of salaries on a bonus basis when we had before us the report of a commission which was directed to investigate and recommend a readjustment of these salaries according to law.

This bonus is not a permanent matter. It is only temporary. It is intended only to last this year, with the idea that before next year's appropriation bill comes in there will be affirmative action by the Congress of the United States permanently readjusting the salaries under this Government as a matter of law.

I say, therefore, that what the Senator from New York proposes is absolutely unjust to the other clerks. It is unjust to the machinists in the navy yards, who are appealing to have this bonus proposition amended because they may have had a $200 increase in their compensation and can not come under its terms. It is unjust to the clerks in the War Risk Bureau. It is unjust to the clerks in the Tariff Commission, who are not getting any bonus at all.

It is unjust to the clerks in the Vocational Educational Bureau, who are not getting the full bonus. All of these people are in the same position.

Therefore, I say, why should we pick a particular class of men and make an exception in their favor, when the only purpose of the committee was to bring back the bonus as it was agreed to last year, on the same terms, as a temporary matter, so that we would not have to go into a salary readjustment until the committee had ample time to consider the full report of the commission that the Congress appointed to readjust the salaries?

That is all there is in this proposition.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question, as a matter of information?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am curious to know why the Senator said there were good reasons why the War Risk employees were given the $120 and not the $240.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the Senator the reasons. I shall have to go a little into the history of this bonus and explain it.

During the war the new bureaus of the Government—which I might designate, roughly speaking, as the war bureaus—were being operated under lump-sum appropriations. There was no limitation on the salaries. A lump sum was handed to the chief of the division, and he fixed his own salaries. Wages had gone up. Clerical employees were in demand. There were millions of men in the Army, and there was a shortage of clerks. They offered much higher salaries than were paid to the statutory clerks in the Government service, the men who had served the Government for decades. Now, when this bonus proposition came along the committee assumed, and had the right to assume, that in strictly war divisions or war bureaus the salaries had been placed on a war basis, and to a large extent that was true.

But in order by law to differentiate between the war conditions and the statutory roll of the old clerks we had to fix in the committee a time limit. We did not want to stop and pick out each bureau separately, but we fixed a time limit, and said that all bureaus and divisions that were organized and operating before that time should have the benefit of the bonus, and the new divisions which were operating under war conditions should not have it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just a minute, until I finish this statement. Of course, we were hitting at the temporary organizations. The War Risk Bureau is to be a permanent organization, but it came in after our time limit was fixed, and therefore fell with the temporary organizations, and they claimed the bonus. First they were cut out entirely, and they claimed that they were entitled to the bonus. We said, "Your basis of wages has been fixed during the war at a war compensation." They said, "No; it is fixed upon the basis of the statutory clerk." There the dispute rested. But we had a thorough investigation. We brought their representatives before us and had a complete statement of their pay rolls, the average pay of the clerk, and then we compared it with the old statutory rolls in the old departments of the Government, and we concluded—and it may be that we were right or it may be that we were wrong, but I think the judgment of the committee was correct—that if we gave them a bonus of $120 we would equalize them with the clerks on the old statutory roll.

This year they come and say that there is a changed condition, and that they are entitled to the full bonus. We did not give it to them, because we said that we could not go into this matter; that it was going to be fixed next year. We said, "We can not get off with it if we are going to reorganize all these clerical forces, and therefore we will let it stand on last year's determination, with the understanding that the day will not be far distant when this whole matter will be readjusted by law, as it should be, and not by bonuses."

I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that I offered an amendment giving the war-risk clerks a $240 bonus, and upon that amendment the investigation was made, and the committee took the action suggested by the Senator from Alabama. Afterwards an amendment was offered on the floor of the Senate, as the Senator may remember, and the $120 proposition was rejected.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senate rejected the amendment and sustained the committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask the Senator, upon the investigation did you find that the level of salaries in the War Risk Bureau was sufficiently above that of the old statutory roll?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] refreshes my memory. It was $124 above the statutory roll. So there is no question about that.

I do not mean to say that a great many of the $1,800 and $1,600 clerks who have families to support are getting fair compensation or adequate compensation in comparison with what clerks receive who are doing the same class of work in private business. I am not saying that at all. But we were not trying to play favorites. We were trying to adjust the matter on an equitable basis and make them all have the same basis.

I am not complaining of the Senator from New York that he is trying to pay these men too much wage, but my complaint against him and his amendment is that he is playing favorites; that he is trying to put one class in the bill and give them this advantage as against all the others. I think if we want this to go through—and it is going through practically by unanimous consent—we ought to stand on last year's determination, and then expect that we will do justice to these clerks in the future.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will yield a moment, I want to add to what he has said that the House committee gave this subject a great deal of attention, especially with reference to what has been said of the War Risk Bureau. They were sixty-odd days in subcommittee before they reported it and ninety-odd days before the bill came to us, every day of which was spent in looking up that and other matters pertaining to it, and we had it before us in the bonus proposed in the House of $120 to start with.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; the chairman is correct; and I can say this: If the Senate thinks these men are entitled to $240—and I am not combating it on the merits—then these other people are entitled to it, and instead of amending the bill it ought to be rereferred. Send it back to the committee and tell us to work out the problem as to the others. That is all there is to it. It is a question of putting them all on an equal basis, and as far as I am concerned when the proper time comes I shall be willing to give these men for whom the Senator is fighting a fair compensation; but when it comes to picking them out as a special class to be benefited by the bill above other people, I am not going to vote for it.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me, my contention is that they are picked out as a special class.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know that is the Senator's contention, but the facts do not sustain it.

Mr. CALDER. I have information that many of the departments gave their employees the $240, regardless of whether they received increases amounting to $200, and they based that upon the law.

Mr. WARREN. That is only in exceptional cases. That is not the rule, so far as I am advised, in any department. Where it was applied, it was under what you might term the contingency element of the subject, and of course in the war time matters in the War and Navy Departments, under the celebrated Overman Act, were considered with a liberal construction, so as to get along the fastest and the best they could.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me, in reply to the Senator from Wyoming I will say that I am advised that in the War Department all clerks who served six months under the advanced pay, even if they exceeded the $200, received the bonus, and that was the case for this fiscal year.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the War Department has made this ruling, that if the increase of the compensation in a certain fiscal year is made before the first six months of that year, then, at the end of the first six months, providing the clerk serves the six months into another fiscal year, he can receive the bonus in the following fiscal year; but the Senator can not say there is a case where a clerk in one of the departments, employed in the District of Columbia, at the beginning of a fiscal year worked six months and then received an increase of $240.

Mr. CALDER. My information is that if during the first six months of the fiscal year they receive an increase in excess of $200, at the end of the fiscal year, when the time comes to award the bonus for the following year, the bonus is allowed.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, for the next year.

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; and the thing will happen here with any policeman.

Mr. CALDER. No; because you specifically prevent them from getting it.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no difference at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the fate of the amendment to the amendment tempts me very strongly to make a point of order to the committee amendment itself. The fact that the subject was introduced into the bill by the amendment of the committee is the basis of all the trouble. The House eliminated the bonus. Before the House committee, I think, the bonus asked for was $480. The Senate committee has seen fit, and doubtless for the best of reasons, to restore the existing status, which is admittedly unjust, whose inequalities have been very graphically portrayed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Nevertheless, it is proposed, notwithstanding such inequality, to incorporate it into the present appropriation bill, at the same time eliminating an arrangement which was due to the negotiations between these two forces of the city government and the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I voted for that amendment entirely because of my information as to what that understanding was.

I shall not make a point of order against the amendment, because, having given the bonus, and the cost of living having automatically risen to a point where the bonus was absorbed, its recipients must continue to receive it until the general classification is effected. To take it away now would be to deprive them of a compensation which our own act here has largely contributed in producing, and I am disposed to continue it as long as conditions exist as they now are, because of the fact that the price of living has risen correspondingly.

A difficulty, however, about this method of attempting to relieve the needs of the civil service is that it deprives the recipients of the impulse for thrift, because they feel, and experience justifies the feeling, that whatever their financial shortage may be, Congress will relieve it by a bonus or by an increased expenditure.

A couple of young ladies from my State came to my office the other day to appeal to me to use what influence I might possess to secure their promotion, the plea being that they could not make both ends meet with the compensation which they received in their present positions. These ladies wore fashionable shoes of a fashionable color, silk stockings, one of them a silk dress, and both of them carried furs. They were dressed in a style my daughter can not afford. They were dressed quite as elaborately as the average woman of means you may encounter upon the street, to all of which I give my approval. It is perfectly proper and perfectly natural that women should wish to adorn themselves, and that each should be as well dressed as the others, but the difficulty lies in the effort to sustain the expense which such apparel requires and at the same time live upon the compensation given by the Government. The motive for such expenditure, Mr. President, consists in the fact that Members of Congress always are ready to relieve distress, and particularly the distress of organized employment, especially when the organization has already informed us that they are keeping a close watch upon our records and propose to disseminate it to their associates all over the United States in conjunction with the coming campaign.

If these people were given to understand that the economies of the Government required rigid frugality upon their part, these evidences of extravagance would disappear and there would be some return to reason. Just so long as they know they can apply here, just so long as they know that their statements, which are unquestionably correct, that their expenditures do not correspond to their incomes, will have results, just so long will the incentive to thrift and frugality be absent in their modes of life.

On the other hand, there is no question that the purveyors to what may be called the transient population of Washington also take advantage of our readiness to increase this compensation by fixing their rates for the needs of life accordingly.

There is another class of public employees, a useful class, a necessary class, who are suffering quite as much, if not more, because of their inadequate compensation. I refer to the officers of the Army and the Navy, many of whom, because of the demotions consequent upon the armistice and receiving a smaller salary, are compelled to resort to the most rigid forms of economy, some of them with large families being actually in need. We have in the Senate attempted to relieve that situation by passing a bill for their relief, but the House, from what I understand of its views on needed economy at the present time, has thus far taken no action upon it. This suffering is in some instances almost acute. Their economy is apparent in everything that goes to make up existence, in so far as economy is possible when you consider rents and the cost of living generally.

Speaking of rents, Mr. President, my attention was called yesterday by the wife of an Army officer to the rate of proposed rentals for a large apartment house now in process of construction which is called the Hadleigh. From what this lady tells me, and I have no reason to doubt her statement, it ought to be christened the "Holdup." It is a very large institution, partly completed. This lady was shown one of the smallest proposed apartments upon the plans, consisting of two rooms and a cell which by courtesy was called the breakfast room. The price demanded for this so-called apartment was $125 a month. One of three rooms and an attachment something like the cell to which I refer was $225 a month. The reason given is the expense of building material and of labor.

The unfortunate feature of the situation is, however, that these people derive their incomes by fixing enormous prices to those who can least afford it, because it is only those who are nearly destitute, a man and wife and family, who can live with any sort of decency, to say nothing of comfort, in two rooms and a cell. They are exploiting every class of the community which can least afford it for the purpose of obtaining enormous revenues to meet their so-called expenses.

I do not know who the men are who represent the corporation building this apartment house, but if that is their method, and it seems to be, they ought to be tarred and feathered and run out of the District of Columbia, although perhaps they are neither better nor worse than a great many others doing the same thing. But as long as this condition continues they will be encouraged by this proposal to increase the compensation of employees at the expense of the Public Treasury. We are largely to blame for it.

I do not know what this new commission is doing, if anything, with regard to the rent problem. As far as I am able to ascertain from newspaper reports, they are acting very much like a congressional committee of investigation—they are hearing people and doing nothing else. A man by the name of Oyster, I believe, is at the head of the commission. It seems to me if that Oyster would only open his shell and get down to bedrock and inquire into conditions such as I have mentioned regarding the proposed Hadleigh apartment, and enforce the law which the Congress enacted some time ago creating that commission, it might go a long ways toward assisting us in solving the problem of increased compensation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 164, in line 1, before the word "officers," insert the word "except"; and on the same page, line 6, after the figures "1920," insert the words "who shall be included and shall receive increased compensation at one-half the rate allowed by this section for other employees."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the provision brought in by the committee would eliminate all the bonus to the policemen and the firemen. The amendment which I suggest to the provision is that they be allowed a $120 bonus, cutting the proposition as suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] from $240 to $120. It would seem to me that it would be fair to these men to give them at least a $120 bonus. It is very true that we increased these men's pay, but it is not denied that to-day they are not receiving as much as policemen and firemen in Chicago, New York, and other cities.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] stated in his speech that when the Reclassification Commission considered this matter they thought they were going to get this bonus in addition to the increase as allowed by law, and that with the bonus of $240, together with the salaries that they now receive under the law, they would receive no more than they would get if the law should be written according to the report of the Reclassification Commission.

I care nothing about the suggestion that some of the department clerks did not receive as much bonus as these men would receive or receive nothing and these men receive something. I believe that every employee in the Federal Government to-day should receive a bonus. I believe that the employees in the War Risk Insurance Bureau should receive a $240 bonus, because I can not understand how they can live in the city of Washington on the inadequate salaries which are paid them.

There is this difference between the clerks in most of the departments and the firemen and the policemen in the city of Washington: A majority of the employees in the War Risk and the Treasury and the various other departments are single people, whether they are men or women. In most instances they are without families. The policemen here in most instances are married men with families, and the same is true as to firemen. I can not understand how any Senator can imagine a man with a wife and two or three children living in Washington on $125 or $135 or $150 a month.

It does seem to me that it is all wrong for the Senate to eliminate this bonus proposition as to the policemen and the firemen. Even though there are Members of the Senate who might have voted against the $240 bonus, it would seem to me that now they could vote for an amendment which would insure them a $120 bonus. I have seen these policemen and you have seen them in the wintertime standing on the streets with the mercury below zero going up against such climatic conditions as that, risking their lives in the discharge of their duties. Firemen have risked their lives in fires on many occasions. Clerks in the departments do not do that.

These men with such conditions imposed on them, it seems to me, should be adequately paid, and the facts are revealed that they are not on a similar basis with any other city in the country. I hope the amendment will be agreed to in order that, at least, they may get $120 bonus while we are paying $240 bonus to many of the others.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will yield a moment I will say that the House committee gave this subject a great deal of consideration, especially with reference to what has been said about the bonus. The subcommittee had hearings on the matter and it was considered by the main committee, and it was only after full consideration that this attitude was taken by the committee. Therefore I trust the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi will not prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the committee amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the other side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has counted the other side.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand the rule, a certain per cent of the number present can ask for a yea-and-nay vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One-fifth of the Senators present.

Mr. HARRISON. A certain number have requested the yeas and nays. I am asking that those who are opposed be counted, so that we can see whether one-fifth are in favor of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, guided by the observation that it has had of proceedings in the Senate, is constrained to hold that those who are called upon to second a demand for the yeas and nays must constitute one-fifth of the Senators who are present in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks for a division on the amendment proposed by him to the committee amendment.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry. Is it too late to ask for the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it is now too late, inasmuch as the decision of the Chair has been announced upon the division.

Mr. SMOOT. The yeas and nays were refused.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays were called for, and the request was not seconded. A division was then called for. The vote was taken upon a division and the result was announced by the Chair. In the opinion of the Chair it is now too late to again ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. What did the vote show as to those voting for the amendment and those voting against it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There were fewer voting for the amendment than voting against it.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask what was the number voting for it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not now recall.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Glass	McNary	Sheppard
Brandegee	Gore	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Gronna	Nelson	Smoot
Comer	Hale	New	Sterling
Cummins	Harrison	Nugent	Thomas
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Townsend
Dial	Kellogg	Page	Underwood
Edge	Kirby	Phelan	Warren
Fernald	McKellar	Phipps
Gay	McLean	Pomerene

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CAPPER, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. KEYES, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. TRAMMELL answered to their names when called.

Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. ELKINS, Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. STANLEY, and Mr. FRANCE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the amendment reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 164, line 1, before the word "officers," it is proposed to insert the word "except," and on line 4, after the numerals "1919," it is proposed to insert

"who shall be included and shall receive increased compensation at one-half the rate allowed by this section for other employees."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this amendment confines the $120 increase merely to the police force of the city of Washington. It does not go as far as the $240 bonus allowed to other employees, but only provides for a $120 bonus.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment proposed by the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent. I have promised to take care of him with a pair while he is absent for the rest of the afternoon, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and therefore withhold my vote. I understand that my announcement counts me as present for a quorum.

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GAY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] is absent on official business, and that he is paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK].

Mr. GLASS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I am compelled to withdraw my vote, as I observe that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted.

The roll call resulted—yeas 13, nays 31, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 13, the nays are 31. Five Senators are present announcing pairs, as follows: Senators EDGE, JONES of Washington, TOWNSEND, GAY, and DILLINGHAM. Therefore the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to the amendment of the committee is rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, my amendment as offered applied only to the policemen, as, of course, Senators know. If that amendment had been adopted, I had intended to offer a similar amendment touching the firemen; but, in view of the vote, I shall not offer the other amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It should have been offered in its order in the reading of the bill, but I was in the chair at the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 19, it is proposed to strike out the word "librarian" and the comma, and in line 16, before the word "enrolling," it is proposed to insert the word "librarian" and a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I was on the committee which reported this bill. Since the committee adjourned, a matter has been called to my attention in which I think a grave injustice has been done; and therefore I am going to offer an amendment, which I ask the chairman of the committee to carry to conference.

Ever since the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia has been established the chief justice of that court has been allowed, as in the case of nearly all the courts in the country, $500 more than the associate justices. The chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has been allowed $500 more than the associate justices. The chief justice of the Court of Claims has been allowed $500 more than the associate justices. This $500 extra has been allowed them by reason of the fact that they are the chief justices of their respective courts. The House has made provision for the chief justice of the Court of Claims; but, on page 156, line 15, in the case of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, it will be noted by the chairman that the chief justice only gets the same as the other justices, $8,500, when it should be $9,000, because that has been the rule ever since the court was established; and, on page 157, line 4, the salary of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia should be $8,000 instead of $7,500.

It is manifestly unjust that the men who are the chief justices of these great courts, who ever since the establishment of their courts have received this $500 extra, should have had that amount left out, for some reason, in the House.

I therefore move to amend by inserting, on line 15, page 156, where the words "chief justice" occur, $9,000 instead of $8,500; and, on page 157, line 4, I move to make the salary of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia $8,000 instead of $7,500, thus allowing them just what they have had for years, ever since their courts were established.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not want to antagonize the Senator, but I will simply say that the last law that was passed fixed the salary as it is now reported in this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is right.

Mr. WARREN. This changes the law.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is where the injustice occurs. The salary was increased, but in making the appropriation the extra $500 which is allowed to the chief justice has not been provided for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 156, under the subhead "Court of Appeals, District of Columbia," after the words "chief justice" and the comma on line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$8,500" and to insert in lieu thereof "$9,000."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as I understand, that is the salary that is fixed in the law?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes. If the Senator will notice——

Mr. JONES of Washington. From a remark made by the chairman of the committee, I thought he understood it differently.

[A pause.] Apparently I do not understand this matter yet, from what the chairman tells me.

Mr. OVERMAN. As the Senator will remember, the Judiciary Committee in reporting the bill increased by the sum of $1,000 the salaries of the judges of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and also the salaries of all of the judges throughout the United States. Now, in framing this bill the $500 extra that has always been allowed to a chief justice was not taken into consideration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is, the law that the Judiciary Committee reported did not give the chief justice——

Mr. OVERMAN. Five hundred dollars extra.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In other words, you are changing the law and legislating in this bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President; I am asking the Senate to give them the same amount that they have had ever since the courts were established, and which I suppose every chief justice in the United States gets—$500 extra. I have no doubt that they get it in the State of Washington. I ask the Senator to let it go to conference.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought, from the Senator's first statement, that the law which the Judiciary Committee reported had fixed their salaries——

Mr. OVERMAN. No; we did not take into consideration the question of this extra $500 which was allowed before, but we just increased the salaries of the judges $1,000. The $500 extra which they had been getting before was not taken into account in that bill, and therefore I am providing for the extra $500 now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What did you provide for the chief justice in that bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Nothing at all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. You did not provide any salary at all for him?

Mr. OVERMAN. Only the $8,500.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, that fixed his salary at $8,500?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; but the $500 extra has always been allowed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know; but your legislation fixed the salary of the chief justice at $8,500?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now you are proposing to raise that salary in this appropriation bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. We only propose to give him what he and his predecessors have been getting for 50 years.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is not what I am trying to get at. What I am trying to get at is this: The law gave him, as I understand it, $8,500, and you propose to give him $500 extra.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me see if I understand the position of the Senator from North Carolina. I may not understand it. The statute increasing the salaries of judges made an increase of a thousand for each of the judges, and that would still leave the salary of the chief justices $500 in excess of the salaries of the other justices.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is, if the law provided, for instance, that the chief justice should receive $500 more than the others, then an increase of a thousand on all, of course, would give him $500 more than the others.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. That is what I understand the position of the Senator from North Carolina to be.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is true, but under the law they have this $500 extra, which is provided for all the courts.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me ask the Senator this question: Before the judiciary act was passed, did the chief justice, not according to appropriation bills but according to law, get $500 more than the other judges?

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, yes; and the Judiciary Committee, in fixing the salaries, did not take that into consideration, but fixed the salaries of all the judges throughout the United States, and did not repeal the law which allowed them the $500 extra.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to say that the bill that the Judiciary Committee reported increased all the salaries $1,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That would, of course, still keep the chief justice $500 ahead. Now, you are making the appropriation to conform to that?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the second amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 157, under the head of "Supreme Court, District of Columbia: Chief justice," it is proposed, after the words "Chief justice," in line 4, to strike out "$7,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$8,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the committee amendment, on page 45, beginning with line 12 and extending to line 24.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Beginning with the fiscal year 1921, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall, as soon as possible after the close of each half of each fiscal year, levy upon the Federal land banks and joint stock land banks in proportion to their gross assets an assessment equal to the amounts expended from all appropriations on account of salaries (including any additional compensation) and expenses of the board and its appointees and employees for the half of the fiscal year then closed. The board, in making such assessment, shall assess exclusively against either class of banks such expenses as may be incurred exclusively on behalf of such class. Such assessments shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma moves that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to shall be reconsidered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know whether that motion at this time is in order or not. I will say to the Senator that he can have a direct vote upon the amendment when it reaches the Senate.

Mr. GORE. I am aware of that.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that this is a provision that was prepared by the Federal Farm Loan Board. I introduced a bill for this purpose in the Senate, and it passed the Senate. There is not an objection made by any bank that I know of in the United States to paying the expenses for examinations, just the same as the national banks pay for the examinations made of them.

Mr. GORE. I understand this covers the entire expenses of the system, does it not?

Mr. SMOOT. No. It costs $143,000, and it applies to all the banks in the Federal reserve system. It amounts to scarcely nothing. But why should the Government of the United States pay for the examination of these banks? The Government never pays the expenses of the examinations of the national banks. There is no reason why the Government should pay for this, and it amounts to so little to all of the banks of the country that not a bank in the United States has objected that I know of. The Federal Farm Loan Board called my attention to it before I introduced the bill, and I might say that the Federal Farm Loan Board prepared the bill.

Mr. GORE. Does the Senator consider that this is limited purely to inspection?

Mr. SMOOT. That is all the expense there is to it, the cost of the investigation of the bank, just as examiners examine national banks. It means $143,000 for all of the banks under the Federal Farm Loan Board.

Mr. GORE. You mean the land banks?

Mr. SMOOT. The land banks, both the joint-stock land banks and the Federal farm land banks.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to this language:

An assessment equal to the amounts expended from all appropriations on account of salaries (including any additional compensation) and expenses of the board and its appointees and employees for the half of the fiscal year then closed.

Mr. SMOOT. It continues:

The board, in making such assessment, shall assess exclusively against either class of banks such expenses as may be incurred exclusively on behalf of such class.

That is all the board does. They pass upon the examination as to the condition of the banks and upon the banks' resources and liabilities, and those banks are examined just the same as the national banks are examined to-day. But under the law as it was originally passed there was $143,000 appropriated for this purpose each year, and the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board tell me that there is no objection by the different banks of the country whatever to the payment of the expenses incurred.

Mr. THOMAS. I think, Mr. President, that if the purpose of this amendment is as stated by the Senator from Utah it is not only proper but necessary. He says that this assessment is to be made to liquidate the expenses of the examination of the banks.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all it is for.

Mr. THOMAS. But the phraseology requires a deduction by an assessment equal to all appropriations on account of salaries. Certainly the examination of a bank does not cost as much as the salaries of the oppointees and employees of the board.

Mr. SMOOT. Some banks are larger than others, and they want to base the assessment upon the amount of salaries paid.

Mr. THOMAS. But the entire assessment is to be the equivalent of the salaries.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the language.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I am rather inclined to think—in fact, I am firmly of the opinion—that the Senator from Utah has not accurately stated the meaning of the amendment. I am for the amendment, but it clearly means not the expenses of examination of the banks, but the expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course the Federal Farm Loan Board makes the examinations as the reports may be made, and that is the final judge of the condition of the banks. I had forgotten about this until it was called to my attention by the Federal Farm Loan Board. I do know this: That it was discussed at the time the bill establishing the Farm Loan Board passed the Senate, and there was no objection whatever to the favorable report of the Secretary of the Treasury at the time. I think, however, that it passed before the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] was Secretary of the Treasury, although I do not remember the date.

Mr. GLASS. I recall discussing the matter while I was ex officio a member of the Farm Loan Board, and I agree that it ought to be done; but we ought not to do it under a misunderstanding as to what is contemplated. It really means to defray the expenses of the board and its appointees and employees, just as is done in connection with the Federal Reserve Board, and as ought to be done, in my judgment.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about it at all.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I understood this amendment to mean what the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] says it means. I did not understand it to bear the limited meaning suggested by the Senator from Utah. It is more comprehensive than his suggestion would indicate. I object to it on that ground.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think that all of these banks should be administered here by the Federal Farm Loan Board and pay no expenses whatever toward defraying the cost of the examination?

Mr. GORE. In the first place, this Federal land bank system is a new system.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not very new now.

Mr. GORE. It is new and, in a sense, it is an experiment. The system has not been launched very long, and I think it is perhaps not running steady on its keel yet. It ought to be encouraged by the Government. I do not think it ought to have a subsidy, but I think the Government ought to be generous toward this system. It ought to be made to succeed, if it can succeed, and I do not think it just or necessary to levy upon these banks a tribute to maintain the expenses of the system. I think the Government can well afford to do that much. Mr. President, we do not levy a tax upon the national banks to maintain the office of the Comptroller of the Currency here in Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. However, the national banks pay for inspection.

Mr. GORE. They do pay for inspection?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. If this were limited to that, perhaps it might be justified.

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, but the amount they charge for inspection more than pays the expenses of the inspection. The Senator must know that.

Mr. GORE. That may be true. That is not the point involved in this controversy, however. The Government defrays the expenses of the salary of the Comptroller of the Currency and the expenses attached to his office, and no tribute is levied on national banks for maintaining his office here in Washington, and we ought not to levy tribute on these farm banks in order to maintain the Federal land bank board here in Washington.

The fact that the Federal Farm Loan Board recommends this system ought not to be conclusive. It is a question which should be decided by the Congress, and if this land-bank system is earning a surplus sufficient to defray these expenses, it is earning too much. That money ought to be left in the hands of the borrowers. It ought to be represented in a reduced rate of interest. The purpose of this banking system, Mr. President, is to afford the farmers a system of long-time credits at as low a rate of interest as is consistent with the situation of the money supply of the country, and if the system is charging more than is necessary to realize that rate of interest, if it is earning a profit sufficient to meet this large appropriation, then interest rates ought to be reduced instead of this appropriation being made.

I think the Federal Farm Loan Board has an erroneous conception of its own functions and of the principles of this land-bank system. I do not think this policy ought to be adopted at this time. It certainly ought to be remitted to the future, until this system is well established, and that is the reason why I have moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amount that was estimated is $143,000, and that would be about one-thousandth of 1 per cent of the rate of interest that was charged for these loans. How does the Senator think that is ever going to affect the rate of interest? Not only that, but this is assessed upon the joint-stock land banks as well, and the joint-stock land banks of this country have made outrageous profits.

Mr. GORE. I am not certain, Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I am certain.

Mr. GORE. I am not certain but that this is a matter of principle and not a matter of a few dollars and cents.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we have the Federal Reserve Board, and they sit here in Washington, and the banks pay for their expenses. I say they are just as new as the Federal farm land banks, and there is no attack made upon them.

Mr. GORE. The analogy does not hold. Ultimately the surplus earned by the Federal reserve bank will go into the Treasury of the United States, after the surplus equals the capital stock, as I remember it. But whether the Government pays these salaries before it goes into the Treasury or after it goes into the Treasury is not very material.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not understand that this amendment affects the law regulating the salaries of the Farm Loan Board. Those salaries are paid by the Government.

Mr. GORE. It does not affect them at all.

Mr. McLEAN. Of course, that is the advantage they have over the other system. More than that, the Federal Government has now issued, I think, something like $300,000,000 of nontaxable bonds which are a direct subsidy to this institution.

I am sure we all sympathize with it and want it to succeed and to be granted every consideration possible; but it seems to me, since my attention has been called to it, that the expenses, as stated by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], might well be paid by the system in view of the fact that the system is prosperous, and the Government has already granted the system a subsidy in the issue of nontaxable bonds. There is already pending in Congress a bill removing the subsidy of bonds issued by the joint-stock land banks, and I think it ought to be removed.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I realize that this Federal land bank system is a unique system and it has been shown certain extraordinary consideration by the Government. I think it ought to have been shown that consideration because it was designed to fill a peculiar niche in our system of credit institutions. It had to be fostered by the Government in order to be brought into existence. I know there are those, too, who have never been reconciled to the institution of this system.

There are those who would like to take away those advantages which enable it to exist and which enable it to compete with private concerns, who would like to load it down with fees and charges and other encumbrances that would make it undesirable and prevent it from filling its peculiar function in our system. I am in favor of the system and want it to succeed, and I do not want to place it in a situation where it can not meet the purposes for which it was instituted.

Mr. SMOOT. This amendment would never interfere with it at all. I will say to the Senator now that if there is a single bank in the United States that has made any objection to this, I would like to know what bank it is. I do not believe the Senator has received a single scratch of a pen from a bank in the United States objecting to it. They all recognize the fact that it ought to be paid by the banks, and I think it ought to be.

Mr. GORE. I do not know what is the attitude of the banks toward this amendment, and I am not concerned as to their attitude. I want the farmers of this country to enjoy the benefits of a system of long-time credits at low rates of interest. That is what I am concerned about. It may be true that those in charge of these banks might be willing to destroy the advantages of the system and equalize it with those private institutions, destroying the very object for which this was created. I am not in sympathy with that, and I think that if the officers of the banks are in sympathy with that kind of a scheme they might well consider changing the personnel.

Mr. McLEAN. I simply want to say that this system will not affect the rate of interest which the borrowers under the system have to pay to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee was adopted.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Why would it not be in the interest of clarity and perfect understanding to have the amendment so worded as to indicate that for the purpose of inspection the assessment shall be levied, but not to cover the whole expenses of the entire system, because if I can read the language aright as now written it means that the assessment shall be laid upon these banks to defray the expenses of the entire system, including the salaries of the board itself.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not understand that. I have not had my attention called to it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Listen to the language. I will read the amendment and emphasize that particular part when I come to it:

> Beginning with the fiscal year 1921 the Federal Farm Loan Board shall, as soon as possible after the close of each half of each fiscal year, levy upon the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks in proportion to their gross assets an assessment equal to the amounts expended from all appropriations on account of salaries (including any additional compensation) and expenses of the board and its appointees and employees—

If that does not cover the whole business, I would like to know what does.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that my attention is just called to this matter. I was not aware that the provision did involve the salaries of the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It covers the whole thing.

Mr. McLEAN. That would be $50,000 a year, or a little more. I think the Government now pays the direct salaries; but that is all.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The contention of the Senator from Utah was that we are going to make an exception of this system as against other bank systems and assess the banks to pay the salaries and office expenses of the board here in Washington, as well as inspection and other incidental expenses connected with the whole system.

Mr. McLEAN. Putting it on the same basis as the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SMOOT. If it were amended as suggested by the Senator from South Carolina it would read as follows:

> In proportion to their gross assets, an assessment equal to the amounts expended from all appropriations on account of salaries (including any additional compensation) other than the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is all right.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, this amendment was discussed by the subcommittee. I suppose that the amendment is in the form that it was in the committee, and it is perhaps my fault that I did not take time to carefully study it. I understood, however, that the provision was to pay the expenses of examination. I agree with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] that this is an innovation. I can see no reason why the Federal land banks should pay the salaries of the Federal Farm Loan Board any more than the banks should pay the salaries of the people here in Washington who are administering the banking affairs under the provisions of our banking laws.

Mr. GLASS. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. Why should the member banks of the Federal reserve system, then, be required to pay the salaries and expenses of the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. GRONNA. I am surprised that the Senator, having been Secretary of the Treasury, should ask that question, for the simple reason that they are permitted to make a profit, which is not the case with the Federal farm loan banks. If the Senator will pardon me, there is not a Senator here who does not know that this law, when it was passed, was for the purpose of giving a small subsidy in order to supply the small farmers with real, cheap money. We all admit that. It never was intended to be a business which would yield profits.

There is not a Senator here who does not know that we can easily go too far in extending credit and increase the bond issues, and that is my objection to the joint-stock land banks; they have been permitted not only to make profits but to make large loans and enormous profits. We can not justify the proposition which will permit either the joint-stock land banks or the Federal farm land banks to issue bonds to such an extent that it would cause complaint so that too many bonds exempt from taxation are issued. That would simply mean the repeal of the law. This law was passed for the purpose of helping the poor man, the small farmer, the farmer who could not afford to go to the money centers and get cheap money. It never was intended for the big farmer, who is able to get a loan at low rates.

This law was enacted for the sole purpose of stabilizing interest rates to the small farmer, and to encourage men to go into the industry to establish homes and to increase production.

I believe it is wrong in principle, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has said, to compel the Federal farm loan associations or the Federal farm loan banks to pay for the administration of the business here in Washington, and I never so understood it. If I had I should have objected to it.

If the amendment is now properly before the Senate, unless it is amended I shall make a point of order against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. No amendment to the amendment itself is in order at this time.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Utah will remember that when this question was discussed I asked that the joint-stock land banks and the Federal farm loan banks be separated and that each pay its pro rata share of the expenses for inspection. I think that is in the amendment

Mr. SMOOT. In proportion to their gross assets.

Mr. GRONNA. But I can not understand why we should insist that these banks, any more than other banks, should be compelled to pay the salaries of people here in the city of Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. They do that now under the Federal reserve system.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator knows that those banks are permitted to make profits.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator himself ought to know, because he was on the committee, that they are permitted to make only a limited profit, and when that limit is reached the earnings of the bank go into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with that.

Mr. GLASS. If we want to hold to this amendment we ought to hold to it upon the argument and not upon any mere matter of sentiment. No Senator can point out where the adoption of this amendment will increase the rate of interest to the farmers of the country one penny, because it will not do it.

Mr. GRONNA. I am glad to have the Senator say that.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has answered his own argument or answered the argument made by those who agree with him. It is true that the profits of the Federal reserve system are limited and that the excess over that limit passes into the Treasury of the United States, so that whether we pay the salaries of the Federal Reserve Board out of those earnings before they pass into the Treasury of the United States or permit them first to pass into the Treasury and then pay the salaries out of the Treasury, is entirely immaterial.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent that the vote may be reconsidered.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a motion to reconsider pending now.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand it now, the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is to reconsider the vote, upon which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] says, if it is reconsidered, that he proposes to raise a point of order upon it, so that it may go out. While ordinarily I am always willing to reconsider a proposition in order that there may be discussion, yet if the reconsideration shall take away from the Senate the power to act upon this proposition, which I believe to be absolutely just, that these banks ought to pay what the Federal reserve banks pay, then I do not believe it is proper for us to exempt them from doing it. Therefore, with that parliamentary situation confronting us, I do not feel inclined to vote to reconsider. If the provision could go through as it did before without a point of order being raised, I should be very glad to have the vote reconsidered in order that further information may be presented, if any is at hand, but I can not vote for the motion under the notice which has been given.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I had not expected the Senator from Michigan to vote for it, as I understand he has always been opposed to the farm-loan banks.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator is entirely mistaken as to that. I have never been opposed to them. I voted for them, but I felt at the time they were organized that they would be of little value to the State of Michigan, for instance. I stated, however, that there were sections of the country where I thought the establishment of farm-loan banks would be of great benefit, and therefore I was willing that they should be organized. I repeat, however, I stated that I did not think they would be of great benefit to Michigan.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator knows now that he was mistaken about that, I think. I have a statement in my office which shows that the State of Michigan has taken advantage of that law almost to as great an extent as any other State.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is one reason why I would not object to the establishment of the banks, as I never have done. I do not want that anything be done now that will be at all detrimental to the banks; I am simply asking for justice in the treatment of these banks, as in the case of other banks of the country.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is after 5 o'clock; we have had a rather trying day——

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me just a moment, I have a request to make.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator desires to offer an amendment, he can hardly do that, inasmuch as an amendment is already pending.

Mr. EDGE. I was going to explain, if the Senator will give me just a moment before he makes a motion to adjourn, that engagements make it impossible for me to be here to-morrow, and I simply want to secure, if possible, unanimous consent to offer an amendment, not with the idea of discussing it now, inasmuch as another question is pending, but in order to have the amendment properly before the Senate when we reach a position where it may be considered. At that time, in my absence, some other Senator will unquestionably present it. I simply desire unanimous consent that it may be properly offered to the bill.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has a right to offer it, of course, and to have it lie on the table.

Mr. EDGE. I offer the amendment. It is my understanding, however, from the brief conversation I have had with the Senator from Wyoming, that it will not develop any discussion, and for that reason I had hoped that it would be adopted to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands, the proposed amendment has been printed and is now on the table.

Mr. EDGE. I understand that; but it is my understanding that it has to be offered again after the committee amendments have been disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a motion pending. The Senator from New Jersey must therefore defer his amendment until that motion is disposed of.

Mr. EDGE. I will be very glad to do so; but I understood that the Senator from Wyoming was about to make a motion to adjourn, and for that reason I wanted to have the amendment before the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I take it for granted that the matter now before the Senate must first be disposed of unless adjournment should put it over, in which event it would be taken up to-morrow exactly as we leave it to-night. I do not understand that the Chair could entertain another amendment while a motion is pending and unacted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming is quite right. A motion to adjourn is in order, if the Senator desires to make it.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 1, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 31, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God and our Father, with whom nothing is impossible, without whom we are nothing, strengthen us by the power of Thy might for the duties of the hour. Guide us by the light of Thy wisdom to do Thy will here now and always. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman rise to make a correction of the RECORD?

Mr. GRIFFIN. No; I desire to make a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 13333, introduced by me on the bonus question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the bonus question. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, are they the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. GRIFFIN. My own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an able and instructive article upon land monopoly and its evils as discussed by Miss Anne Martin, a woman candidate for United States Senator, printed in Reconstruction.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a short speech by myself on the McFadden rural credit bill, H. R. 12678.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the speech about?

Mr. SNYDER. It is in relation to the McFadden rural credit bill and has to do with a new scheme for financing the products of farms.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Where was this speech made?

Mr. SNYDER. It has not been made; I have it here, and I am asking permission to insert it in the RECORD without delivering it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the rural credit bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, to disagree to all Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Agricultural appropriation bill, to disagree to all Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman how it happens they have only three conferees? The practice has been about that bill for years to have five. I think at one time it was seven.

Mr. WALSH. That is discretionary.

Mr. HAUGEN. The Senate determined on that number——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But the Senate has got nothing to do with the House.

Mr. HAUGEN. My recollection is that we have had three from each House—the practice has been to have the same number from each House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The practice in the House has been for five, and at one time, for some reason which I have forgotten, there were seven appointed.

Mr. HAUGEN. Not on an Agricultural appropriation bill. I think that was on another matter.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri appreciates the fact that the House can not limit the discretion of the Chair in appointing conferees.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know, but still I have the right to get some information if I could.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly; we have not appointed the conferees.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know. I had a talk with the gentleman from Iowa here day before yesterday and he said there would be three appointed.

Mr. HAUGEN. No; I said the Senate had appointed three; that I did not know what the number would be appointed from the House, but I understood the practice is to appoint the same number from each House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman think that because the Senate had appointed three we ought to appoint three?

Mr. HAUGEN. What does the gentleman think about it himself?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think there ought to be five.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman think one House ought to have five and the other side three? It is immaterial to me, of course.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not care what the other House does.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa in regard to two or three of these increases.

Mr. HAUGEN. Very well.

Mr. RUBEY. The Senate has increased the appropriations about $2,370,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. No; the Senate has increased it $2,470,407, but the gentleman is also aware that it cut a number of appropriations, as, for instance, the seed item of $239,416 and others, which will bring the increases up close to $3,000,000.

Mr. RUBEY. The net increase is something like $2,370,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Two million four hundred and seventy thousand four hundred and seven dollars.

Mr. RUBEY. Well, that being quite a large amount, we must remember that this is an Agricultural appropriation bill, which is an investment rather than an expenditure. I want to call attention to two or three increases made by the Senate. On page 105 we have an appropriation for the eradication of the corn borer; the Senate makes provision for $500,000, $250,000 of which shall be made immediately available. That is exactly what I asked for in the House when we were considering the bill in the Committee of the Whole. It went out, of course, on a point of order because of the $250,000 made immediately available. Now, the committee agreed to my amendment for $400,000 for that purpose, but it went out in the House on a vote, a very close vote at that, and I hope that the conferees will see their way clear to agree to this appropriation of $500,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. My recollection is that the Committee of the Whole made it $300,000, and it went out in the House. Now, my position is that we should either appropriate an adequate amount or not appropriate anything. So far as the $250,000 is concerned, it does not go far enough. That is my individual view, but the conferees must necessarily represent the House.

Mr. RUBEY. When the gentleman says the committee made it $300,000——

Mr. HAUGEN. That is my recollection.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman's recollection is not correct if he refers to the Agricultural Committee. The Committee of the Whole——

Mr. HAUGEN. I mean the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RUBEY. The Committee of the Whole, at my suggestion, adopted my amendment of $400,000. On a very close vote, with just a few votes difference, it went out, and it shows plainly that the House would have agreed to this amendment except for the fact of their desire to economize, and for the further reason that many of the Members were given to understand that the probabilities were that the Senate would take care of the situation. The Senate has taken care of it and has made this appropriation, and I sincerely hope that the conferees will agree to this appropriation, because I think it is very important. The spread of the corn borer will have a very disastrous effect upon the corn production of the country.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman will recall that the matter was then pending before another committee, and for that reason the Committee on Agriculture did not give consideration or did not report on the proposition. It came up in the Committee of the Whole. Three hundred thousand dollars was agreed to. I opposed the amendment on the ground that if we appropriate any money whatever we should appropriate an adequate amount. I do not know what showing was made before the Senate. However, that is a matter that will have to be given consideration by the conferees.

Mr. RUBEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I would like to call his attention to the amendment on page 49. This is the amendment in regard to the grazing provision. The Committee on Agriculture, as the gentleman will remember, brought in in its bill a provision for appraising the grazing lands of the West, and it went out on a point of order. The amendment was finally worded differently and agreed to, and is found on page 49. This authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to appraise the grazing lands in the forest reserve and make the appraisal the basis of the rates charged. That amendment will bring into the Treasury something like $2,000,000 additional annually. Now, then, what I want to say is this, that the House agreed to that amendment; the Senate knocks it out. I want the gentleman to agree that before he will accede to the wishes of the Senate in regard to this matter he will give the House an opportunity to vote on it.

Mr. HAUGEN. The amendment referred to is a House provision, and it goes without saying that the House conferees will insist upon the House provisions staying in. Whether it can come back to the House or not I do not know. There are 282 amendments. All of them will have to be given consideration.

Mr. RUBEY. This is an important amendment. It means that it practically makes the Forest Service self-supporting if this amendment is agreed to, and I sincerely hope that the gentleman will insist on House provision and come back to the House before he agrees to accede to the Senate in this regard.

Mr. HAUGEN. The House may determine whether it shall come back to the House before an agreement is reached. As the gentleman knows, I am in accord with his views on this grazing proposition.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. LAZARO. The Senate has adopted an amendment known as the Comer amendment, which deals with grades in cotton. I am not prepared to say whether it is a good or a bad amendment, but I do believe it is of sufficient importance to deserve careful consideration. Will the gentleman tell the House something about this amendment and whether or not the House will have a chance to consider it?

Mr. HAUGEN. A part of it is new matter. A part of it was reported by the House Committee on Agriculture. The last paragraph to the amendment is new matter, and a very important matter, and one that should receive very careful consideration before it is agreed to. I am not sure whether it should be adopted or not. I think that is a matter that should be largely determined by the parties interested. My opinion would be that Representatives from the cotton sections of the country should give us the benefit of their judgment and suggestions on the amendment.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman will admit that the people of this country and of the world are very much interested in the production of cotton, because it means whether or not the people shall have sufficient clothing.

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly; but, after all, the Representatives coming from the cotton-producing States are more interested than others.

Mr. LAZARO. All I want to know is whether the gentleman will give the House a chance to consider it?

Mr. HAUGEN. If that is the wish of the House; if not, I should want to confer with other Members to ascertain what their desires are in the matter.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I agree with the gentleman that it is a very important matter. It was not considered in the Senate. The RECORD shows it had no consideration there. It has not had any consideration here. It is my opinion that the amendment ought not to be agreed to; but that is just the opinion of one man from a cotton State, and I hope, if I may express the hope, that the conferees will not agree to the Comer amendment.

Of course, the first paragraph, making the present law permanent, is all right, but I mean the latter part, known as the Comer amendment. It ought not to be agreed to unless it is thoroughly considered by one House or the other, and it is perfectly clear that it was not considered by the Senate, and the House has had no chance to consider it. I take it, and I express the hope, that the conferees will not agree to it.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is new legislation. It was subject to a point of order in the House and probably in the Senate. I believe it is generally agreed that no new legislation should be incorporated in the bill unless it clearly expresses the sentiment of the House.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands the regular order. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]?

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman withhold it for a moment?

Mr. GARD. I will withhold it.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I call the gentleman's attention to the cotton-futures amendment put in by the Senate.

Mr. HAUGEN. That matter went out on a point of order in the House.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. This cotton-futures act, with this amendment, the first part, four or five lines, has been in operation not quite one year. The trade has been perfectly satisfied with it. Apparently we have at this time as good a regulation of these exchanges as we can expect to have, and it having been in operation only about a year, and giving satisfaction so far, it seems to me it would be very unwise to adopt the latter part, which is the Comer amendment, which is an untried affair and bound to affect not only the cotton producer but every dealer in cotton and every manufacturer of cotton goods. Coming from a cotton-producing State, I feel that this great industry should not be subjected to an experiment that has had no consideration from the other body and which has had none here, but we ought to allow the law that has existed to continue to operate, because otherwise nobody would know what would happen if we adopted this far-reaching policy known as the Comer amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the Senate has increased this bill something over two and a quarter million dollars.

Mr. HAUGEN. Two millions and a half.

Mr. MONDELL. Nearer two and one-half million, the gentleman from Iowa says. From a rather hurried examination of the bill, it would appear that about every amendment in the way of an increase and in the way of new legislation that anyone had in his mind, or had a disposition to offer, or did offer in the Senate was accepted. I have such confidence in the conferees on the part of the House that I shall not catechize them or ask them to give an expression of opinion in regard to these amendments and increases, but I do feel confident that these gentlemen realize the temper of the House in these matters. Ordinarily it is not wise to accept in the form of an amendment legislation on an appropriation bill, wise or otherwise; and the House, after careful consideration of this bill, brought it in with appropriations that a great majority here believed were quite sufficient for the work of the Agricultural Department.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] has referred to this expenditure as "an investment." Well, a large part of it is an investment in the services of gentlemen whose services are more or less questionable from the standpoint of any real substantial public service, and that is a kind of investment that at this time ought not to be popular. I am sure that the conferees will have that in mind, and will have in mind the temper of the House, desirous of holding these appropriations within reasonable limits, and not increase them simply because here and there some one may desire to have us embark upon some new and questionable and experimental enterprise. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, and Mr. LEE of Georgia.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Committee on Banking and Currency was called.

AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I call up House bill 12711.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], from the Committee on Banking and Currency, calls up House bill 12711. This bill is on the Union Calendar; and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12711) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, with Mr. SANFORD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12711, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 of the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and June 21, 1917, be further amended by striking out the semicolon after the word "business" at the end of subparagraph (d) and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and which, subject to the approval, review, and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, may be graduated or progressed on the basis of the amount of the rediscount and discount accommodations extended by the Federal reserve bank to the borrowing bank."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this is a bill to provide a means of checking inflation—the inflation or expansion which has come about through the too great use of the rediscounting privileges of the Federal reserve system. The bill is very short. It adds only five lines to section 14 of the Federal reserve act, the section which defines the powers of the Federal reserve banks. One of those powers is "to establish from time to time, subject to review and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, rates of discount to be charged by the Federal reserve bank for each class of paper, which shall be fixed with a view to accommodating commerce and business." It seems to me it was unnecessary to put such a provision in the law, for the Federal reserve banks would naturally have had such power anyway, as all banks possess it, whether expressly granted or not; but being in the law, it seems to be limiting and to deprive the Federal reserve banks of a power which commercial banks possess at least to a certain degree, namely, of asking a higher discount rate from borrowers whose demands are greater than a normal amount. Commercial banks are not allowed to loan an amount greater than 10 per cent of their capital and surplus to any one borrower unless the loan is secured by shipping documents or warehouse receipts representing commodities in process of marketing, but within that limit and within the limits of the usury laws they have the right to charge one borrower a higher rate than another if they think the circumstances warrant it. This bill gives the Federal reserve banks this right, but through uniform rules applying to all member banks without discrimination or favor. It provides that the rates of discount "may be graduated or progressed on the basis of the amount of rediscount and discount accommodations extended by the Federal reserve bank to the borrowing bank."

The suggestion for this amendment came from the annual report of the Federal Reserve Board, which discusses the subject of expansion of credit at some length and states that it must be checked, but "with careful regard to the economic welfare of the country and the needs of its producing industries."

Some banks, generally in the big cities and frequently also where there is a good deal of speculation, have rediscounted far beyond the rediscounts of the average member banks.

In fact, if all banks of each district should ask the accommodations that a few have persistently demanded it would be impossible to meet the demand. The directors of each Federal reserve bank are by section 4 of the act required "to extend to each member bank such discounts, advances, and accommodations as may be safely and reasonably made with due regard for the claims of other member banks."

Now I yield to my colleague from Peekskill.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if this amendment would empower the Federal Reserve Board to discriminate between different banks in the amount of accommodation by way of rediscount or discount that the Federal Reserve Board extended to the member bank?

Mr. PLATT. Only by rules and regulations applying equally and uniformly to all of them.

Mr. HUSTED. Does not the gentleman think that those regulations should be set out in the bill and not left to the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. PLATT. I do not think so, and for this reason: Before the Federal reserve act was passed no national bank could rediscount or become indebted to a greater amount than its capital—section 5202, Revised Statutes. When the Federal reserve act was before the House in 1913 the point was originally overlooked, but it was soon discovered that such a limit would destroy its purposes, because very often a bank having large deposits would have to rediscount beyond the amount of its capital and surplus, and so an amendment was offered on the floor which made an exception of obligations incurred under the provisions of the Federal reserve act. There were other exceptions as to the indebtedness of the bank. For instance, deposits were not regarded as indebtedness under the limitation.

Mr. HUSTED. However good that purpose may be, I do not think we should empower the Federal Reserve Board to discriminate in these matters between different member banks, because that is a power which could be grossly abused.

Mr. PLATT. I have not fully answered the gentleman's question yet. When we passed the Federal reserve act with that amendment in it there was no limit left on the amount to which a bank could rediscount. It could rediscount ten times its capital and surplus if the Federal Reserve Board would allow that to be done. Now, we propose to allow the Federal reserve banks in each district to fix a limit or line of discount, perhaps, in proportion to the capital and surplus, and allow member banks to borrow at the published rates up to that line; but if they go higher than that they shall pay a slight increase on the excess above that line.

Mr. WINGO. There was so much confusion in front of me and to the right of me and to the left of me and behind me that I could not hear the answer which the gentleman made. Do I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] asked if it was possible for the Federal Reserve Board to make a difference in the amount that two different banks might have in the way of rediscounts? Take, for illustration, two banks having the same capital stock and the same surplus. Is it the idea that the Federal Reserve Board might grant a rediscount limit of $50,000 to one and $100,000 to the other?

Mr. HUSTED. That is the idea, exactly.

Mr. PLATT. No; two banks having exactly the same deposits and the same capital and surplus——

Mr. WINGO. Let us assume, then, that two banks have the same deposits, the same capital stock, and the same surplus, but under different conditions in different parts of the country. What would be the gentleman's interpretation of the language in such a case as that?

Mr. PLATT. Necessarily the Federal reserve bank would have to treat them exactly alike if they had the same capital and the same surplus and the same deposits and were in the same district; there would be no possible way by which they could be treated differently. The rule must apply equally and ratably to all banks in the same district having the same capital, surplus, and deposits. They would be treated exactly the same.

Mr. HUSTED. The bill does not say so.

Mr. PLATT. Unless one was situated in a reserve city and the other in the country, when the city bank would have a little larger reserve with the Federal reserve bank and possibly might be given a larger limit, if the line of credits should be based on reserve requirements.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. My understanding of the Federal reserve act as it exists now is that the Federal Reserve Board has the power under the law to fix a discount rate, which must be uniform within the region.

Mr. PLATT. On each class of paper; yes.

Mr. MADDEN. That there is a uniform discount rate within a certain region; that is, they have one uniform rate on the Pacific coast.

Mr. PLATT. On each class of paper; yes.

Mr. MADDEN. But what they do is applicable to everybody within the region.

Mr. PLATT. Yes; exactly.

Mr. MADDEN. And it must be uniform?

Mr. PLATT. It must be uniform for each class of paper.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, as I understand it, this bill provides for so amending the law as to authorize the Federal Reserve Board to make a regulation——

Mr. PLATT. The Federal reserve banks of each district.

Mr. MADDEN. The Federal Reserve Board, through the Federal reserve bank, which is the same thing.

Mr. PLATT. The board is to supervise it.

Mr. MADDEN. By approval of the board, which is the same as giving the board the power to make the regulations. Now, this will give the Federal Reserve Board the power, through the Federal reserve bank, to say that any bank within a certain region shall be given a limit of credit for rediscount.

Mr. PLATT. That is the idea.

Mr. MADDEN. And that does not exist to-day.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know whether it does or not. Some lawyers think it does.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman from New York will permit——

Mr. PLATT. This makes it clear that it does.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me make my statement. I do not want to be interrupted. Then the gentleman can give his side of it.

Mr. WINGO. I am not giving any side of it. The gentleman from New York is stating what the law is and I want to suggest one provision he, I fear, has overlooked.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, under the regulations that this bill authorizes the Federal reserve banks to make, if a bank within the region wants to borrow more than the limit fixed for its credit, say, twice as much, or 25 per cent more, the Federal reserve bank can say that for that additional amount sought to be rediscounted they must pay an additional discount rate, and that puts it within the power of the Federal Reserve Board to play favorites.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no.

Mr. MADDEN. Anywhere in the United States, and, in my judgment, there ought not to be any such power given.

Mr. PLATT. Absolutely not. They must make uniform rates applying to all banks equally and ratably.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; but they can give the right to rediscount more than the limit, and this gives them the right to fix a limit.

Mr. PLATT. There is no limit assigned now.

Mr. MADDEN. But this gives them the right to make a limit.

Mr. PLATT. But they have the right now to shut off absolutely on a bank.

Mr. MADDEN. They would still have the right to refuse and play favorites.

Mr. PLATT. No; there is no chance to play favorites.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will yield, in view of the statement about the law, will the gentleman permit me to read a few lines from the now existing law?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. WINGO (reading)—

To establish from time to time, subject to review and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, rates of discount to be charged by the Federal reserve bank for each class of paper, which shall be fixed with a view to accommodating commerce and business.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I said, with a view to accommodating commerce and business, and the gentleman has not stated anything different.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman did not intend to say what he did. He said it would give the Federal Reserve Board a right that they have not now. They have the right now——

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman has not repeated what I said. I said they would now have, under this bill, a right by regulation that now exists under the law, and they would be the body to fix the law instead of Congress. That is what I said and what I say now.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is talking about one statement that he made and I am talking about the first one that he made. If the gentleman will permit, under the law now they can shut them off entirely. They can now fix, if they want to, a rate of discount uniform solely as to the class of paper. They can say to one bank we will take all of that paper that you want to rediscount and say to another bank they shall not have any at all.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas under what conditions the Federal reserve banks can to-day refuse to discount all the paper that any commercial bank desires to send it or commercial paper or trade acceptances?

Mr. WINGO. The Federal Reserve Board? The Federal reserve banks are owned by the banks. They have directors, and the Government has supervisory control. The experience of the banks has been that the wishes of the Government and the selfish interests of the banks themselves have had a tendency to keep down speculation, as we have found in the past, and there is no limitation except by raising the discount rate, and that sometimes works hardships.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman knows there are several kinds of paper which the Federal reserve banks take and some that they can not take at all, but there is no limitation on the bank, as a member of the Federal reserve bank, as to certain kinds of paper it can take. The only way they could be limited would be to have some regulation such as proposed in this bill, so that a Federal reserve bank could say to banks of some sections of the country, "We will take what paper you have," and to another section of the country, where it would be needed, "We will not take any of your paper." This bill would give them the power.

Mr. PLATT. They have the power now.

Mr. SNYDER. If they have, they never dared to use it. The only reason now that they want it is because the Federal barrel is full, and they want a new arrangement, so they can stifle business by cutting down in certain sections of the country where money is needed and putting it somewhere else. Unless this bill is well explained and it is demonstrated that it has not given the power to the Federal Reserve Board to crush out industries in one section and plant them in another, the bill ought to be killed.

Mr. PLATT. The Federal reserve bank has got the power now to refuse discounts. It has the power to say to a bank that wants rediscount, you have got all you are entitled to. They have gone to New York City to some banks and told them that they could not have another cent. It is drastic. We do not want to have it so drastic. We want them to have a chance, so that they can say, "Yes, you can have a little more, but you must pay a little more"; so that they can go to their customers and hold them down as to speculative and unnecessary loans.

Mr. SNYDER. No one objects to that, if the Federal bank desires to curtail a man's rediscount by raising the rate in a certain zone. That is all right, if you use them all alike.

Mr. PLATT. That is what this bill does, and it plays no favorites.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand the purpose of the act is to prevent the use of speculative schemes and to escape the great danger of speculation.

Mr. PLATT. That is one of its purposes. The large loans, the great rediscounts, come from banks that have connection with speculative centers frequently.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman have any information that some of the interior banks in the country send deposits over to New York to be loaned on call while they were reducing loans in the local communities?

Mr. PLATT. That probably has been done, but I do not think to any large extent.

Mr. McKEOWN. In trying to curb speculation, is not the danger where an emergency should arise in some particular banking district because of great need for money? The money is badly needed, and you will cause them to be deprived of these loans in order to try to remedy something that might exist in some other part of the country.

Mr. PLATT. Just the contrary. We do not want to be compelled to shut down on loans completely. That is why we are passing this bill.

Mr. SNYDER. If that is the reason for it, and the gentleman admits that the bank has the power to do it now, then there is no occasion for this legislation. Some of us believe that this does exactly the thing the gentleman says it does not do, and if the Federal Reserve Board now has the power to do the thing the gentleman says it has this will give them the legal or fixed right to do, what is the use of it?

Mr. PLATT. The Federal Reserve Board attorneys think it is doubtful whether they have this power now, and the board does not like to use powers about which there may be a doubt.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to cite a short concrete case?

Mr. PLATT. I think I would better finish my statement, then the gentleman can ask any question he desires.

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman will permit a very brief question, I am sure that it will clear up what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. PLATT. Very well.

Mr. BLACK. If I understand the present law, if the Federal reserve bank wants to rediscount, we will say, agricultural paper of a certain class, it may fix a rediscount rate of 6 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. But that rate continues regardless of how much a member bank may borrow. If it is $1,000,000, the rate will be 6 per cent, and the same rate would apply if it was only $200,000.

Mr. PLATT. Exactly.

Mr. BLACK. If I understand the meaning of this bill, it is to allow the Federal reserve bank to fix what is called a graduated rate.

Mr. PLATT. On rediscounts above a certain line.

Mr. BLACK. So that it might announce to the member banks that hereafter there would be a 6 per cent discount rate on a certain class of agricultural paper, up to a certain percentage of the bank's borrowing capacity, a certain percentage of loans, and that then over that it shall be 8 per cent, and that over a certain amount it shall be 10 per cent. I understand that to be what the graduated plan means.

Mr. PLATT. The idea, of course, would be to raise it in quarter and half percentages.

Mr. BLACK. I am not intending that that shall be an exact illustration of what could be done, but that would illustrate the principle. The trouble now is that if you advance the rediscount rate you have got to advance it to all alike, and thereby penalize productive industry by making the interest rates too high.

Mr. PLATT. Exactly. You have to penalize small banks, or average banks, which have not discounted up to their line in order to curb the few banks that have gone above it.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; and the whole question of interest enters into it. The purpose of the amendment is to fix this graduated rediscount rate so that the man who has done only a reasonable amount will not be penalized by reason of the present law.

Mr. PLATT. That is the idea.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I think I better not yield now. The gentleman can ask his questions after I am through with my statement.

Now, having "due regard for the claims of other member banks," the Federal reserve bank directors may refuse further loans to a bank which has asked very much greater accommodations than other banks, and that power has been exercised, but it is rather drastic, and it would often be better if additional accommodations could be extended, but at an advancing rate, which would make certain that the loan would not be continued longer than needed. Without such a means of checking expansion, where checking is most needed, the Federal reserve banks can only raise rates on all member banks in order to get at a few, and that seems hardly fair to the great majority of member banks which have not rediscounted anywhere near the limit which would be set for the normal rates. The idea is that normal maximum rediscount lines will be determined by a rule applying to all member banks in a district alike, and that the graduated rates will apply equally and ratably to all member banks rediscounting in excess of that line.

I think not many people will attempt to deny the necessity of checking expansion or inflation wherever it can be done without harming productive industry. A good deal of the most excessive borrowings are doubtless used for financing speculation or for new ventures that are of doubtful economic value to the people at such a time of stress as this. Our gold reserves are at a dangerously low ebb, and the Federal Reserve Bank of New York has several times been below or right down at its legal requirement. The demand for credit continues beyond expectation and perhaps beyond reason—at any rate beyond the limits of safety. It must be held in check if we are to get through the critical period without serious trouble.

I am not disposed to criticize the methods by which the present expansion came about, through rediscount rates on Government war paper lower than the bond-interest rates, so that member banks had an inducement to rediscount, for I do not see how the enormous war loans could have been floated in any other way. The great bond issues and the high taxation applying only to certain classes brought about the present inflation and did not serve to check expenditure after the close of the war. In one campaign, that of the fourth Liberty loan, we sold bonds equal to the total amount of currency in the country of all kinds—gold, silver, greenbacks, Federal reserve notes, and bank notes. It was only possible to do this by borrowing and rediscounting and spreading the issue over some months through the previously issued Treasury certificates. The bonds are not all paid for yet by the people who bought them, and the banks are loaded with them, tying up funds which they would otherwise have free to loan. On top of that came the Victory notes, and if we should have another big bond issue no one could tell what would happen.

What people fail to realize is that the critical financial period comes after a war is over—generally more than a year afterwards. Look at the chaos in Europe. Read Fisk's Critical Period of American History or, better yet, the first two volumes of Beveridge's Life of John Marshall for the period following the Revolution.

The trouble is that people do not understand the seriousness of the situation. The war is over, the soldiers coming home. Everybody is rejoicing, money seems plentiful, and business is booming.

The war economies are thrown aside. Are not the high war prices soon to be reduced? Are not the war taxes soon to come down? It is natural that people should feel that they can spend freely again, but it does infinite harm. The tremendous expenses of the war can not be stopped at once. The war industries must be eased down to avoid widespread bankruptcy and the men employed in them must be given a fair chance to find other employment. The peak of the Civil War debt was not reached until August, 1866, more than a year after the war was over, and the greatest depreciation of the greenbacks came considerably later. The peak of the debt of this war was apparently reached a few months ago, about a year after the armistice, but we have scarcely yet been able to pay off any appreciable amount of the great floating debt represented by Treasury certificates. Until that is substantially reduced the country can not feel safe.

We are far better off than the countries of Europe. Our currency is on a gold basis, and since last May we have been sending gold in large amounts to South America and to the Orient to pay our debts; but we have been at the same time selling to Europe on credit and are only just now beginning to receive some small payments in gold. No payments commensurate with the enormous debt Europe owes us can be expected for some years.

We are at the critical period financially right now and everything depends upon whether we can check speculation and unnecessary expansion and can gradually bring our banking conditions to a normal basis. This bill offers a means to that end and should be passed.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman understands, of course, that in the State of New York a rate higher than 6 per cent for commercial and business paper would be usury?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. That is, a bank can not charge over 6 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. That is the law, as I remember it.

Mr. SNYDER. Suppose in the gentleman's town his banks could loan up to their 8 per cent reserve and the Federal reserve banks should say to the gentleman's bankers, "Your rate from to-morrow on is 7 per cent for rediscount," how much paper does the gentleman think the bank could take in under such a condition as that?

Mr. PLATT. Of course, that probably would not be done, but it might be done.

Mr. SNYDER. The Federal reserve bank is charging 6 per cent for rediscount now, which is the full rate which we can charge for commercial paper.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman must know that that is the unfailing practice of all central banks in Europe, like the Bank of England, to charge a higher rediscount rate than the commercial rate. You do not want to induce banks to rediscount. That must be something to which they will resort only when they really need to. There should be no actual profit in it.

Mr. SNYDER. I must say that that is an entirely new theory and policy.

Mr. PLATT. That is the uniform practice of every central banking institution.

Mr. SNYDER. So that the gentleman's bank in Poughkeepsie, if he desires to rediscount, must pay a premium for doing so?

Mr. PLATT. It should do so.

Mr. SNYDER. If this bill the gentleman is presenting here gives the right to do it, I am more against it than I was before.

Mr. PLATT. The right exists now, and the board intends to exercise it when it gets a chance, as you will see from reading its reports.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman, in order to satisfy those of us who believe that discrimination can be practiced under the provisions of this bill as drawn, whether he would agree to an amendment to insert the word "uniformly" before the word "graduated" in line 9? I am convinced that discrimination can be practiced under this bill as it has been drawn, and I think it could be safeguarded.

Mr. PLATT. That is fully covered in other parts of the Federal reserve act.

Mr. HUSTED. This is an amendment which is not in here.

Mr. PLATT. Well, I will consider that when the time comes for amendment. I do not believe that it would do much harm for it is fully covered by the law—section 4, I believe.

Mr. OSBORNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. OSBORNE. Referring to this very matter of uniformity in the treatment of banks, the illustration was made by one gentleman who preceded me of two banks of the same capitalization and the same amount of surplus, uniformity of treatment requiring that they should receive exactly the same consideration in extent of discounts. My inquiry is this, Whether uniformity in treatment might not involve certain other questions—the question of the business of the two banks, the nature of their business—which would be ample reason for preventing the Federal reserve banks from giving the same amount of accommodation to one bank which properly they might give to another?

Mr. PLATT. That might happen. One bank might have business which was largely speculative and they might shut down on further loans to it. They have that right now.

Mr. MACCRATE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. MACCRATE. Would it be possible to limit this bill so that it would not cover discounts already made if they are to be renewed? For instance, a great many banks encouraged their depositors to buy Liberty bonds, and they guaranteed to carry those Liberty bonds for 80 or 90 per cent for a certain period. Now, if they find that the Federal reserve discount rate is being raised they must go to their borrowers, whom they have encouraged to buy these Liberty bonds, and say, "We are sorry, but our rate has been raised, and therefore we will have to raise your rate." Some of the banks who have encouraged their depositors to buy these Liberty bonds might find that they are losing depositors because they can not keep their guaranty——

Mr. PLATT. They can keep it if the rate should be the same.

Mr. MACCRATE. But would it be possible to provide that it should not attach to discounts heretofore made if they should be renewed?

Mr. PLATT. No, I think not; because the people ought to pay for their bonds, and many people will not pay as long as they can borrow on bonds more cheaply than on other security. The smaller purchasers of Liberty bonds have taken care of their bonds long ago or sold them. You can go into most any bank and can not find any fifty or hundred dollar bonds coming in now. They have been paid for long ago or sold.

Mr. MACCRATE. Some of the large banks hold those bonds to the extent of millions of dollars.

Mr. PLATT. People ought to pay for their bonds instead of spending their money for luxuries. The collateral bond rate ought not to be lower than the commercial rate. That is the very cause of inflation or expansion.

Mr. MACCRATE. As a matter of fact, banks that encouraged depositors to buy Liberty bonds may find their efforts have hurt their credit with the Federal reserve.

Mr. PLATT. Their guaranty to the purchaser of the Liberty bond which was extended has already expired. Now, does the gentleman from Massachusetts want some time?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BACHARACH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes; had requested a conference with the House of Representatives and had appointed Mr. STERLING, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. BECKHAM, and Mr. HENDERSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2528. An act to grant certain lands to the city of Pocatello, State of Idaho, for conserving and protecting the source of its water supply and as a municipal park site.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following order:

Ordered, That in accordance with paragraph 3 of Rule I Mr. CURTIS, a Senator from the State of Kansas, heretofore designated in writing by the President pro tempore to perform the duties of the Chair from day to day be authorized to perform such duties during the present absence of the President pro tempore.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to agricultural fertilizer distributors or users a supply of nitrate of soda, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, am I entitled to an hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The opposition is entitled to an hour.

Mr. PHELAN. I will ask for that time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PLATT. How much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has used 37 minutes.

Mr. PLATT. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PHELAN. If nobody else wants it I would like to have that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. PHELAN. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, a good deal has been said already about this providing for discrimination. I will call the attention of the gentleman, and especially the gentleman from New York who apprehended that, that section 4 of the bill absolutely prohibits that, referring to the board of directors of the Federal reserve bank of any region. It says:

That said board shall administer the affairs of said bank fairly and impartially and without discrimination in favor of or against any member bank or banks, and shall, subject to the provisions of the law and the orders of the Federal Reserve Board, extend to each member bank such discounts, advancements, and accommodations as could safely and reasonably be made with due regard for the claims and demands of other member banks.

That settles the question, and it is provided that they must provide for one as well as for another. They can not provide for one bank and not as to another. Now, why is this proposition brought forward? I can show you very quickly why it is brought forward. If you will look at the condition that existed about last January you will see that there was borrowed at the Federal reserve banks of the United States $6,241,000,000. Now, of that there was borrowed from the Federal reserve banks in the city of New York $3,454,000,000 and there was borrowed from the bank in Philadelphia $647,000,000, leaving out that area there was only $2,139,000,000 borrowed from all the rest of the banks in the United States. Well, now let us look for a minute a little further. That was borrowed on paper secured by United States security, $5,245,000,000 of it, and nearly all of it was borrowed in those cities on that paper. What is the result? Why, those banks got to where their gold reserve was not sufficient for the Federal reserve notes they had out and the Federal Reserve Board ordered an increase of the discount rates in order that they might stop speculation and the overborrowing that was being done in certain quarters. And what was the result? They had to put up the discount rates on every bank, on every farmer, and on every man in this country that borrowed.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. In one minute. I want to finish this statement.

This was the rate they prescribed: Certificates of indebtedness of the United States, 4¾ per cent; notes secured by Liberty bonds, 5½ per cent; bank acceptances, 5 per cent; commercial paper of all kinds, 6 per cent; agricultural paper, 6 per cent. And at that time the agricultural districts were borrowing very little money, and there was no sense in the world in making them pay 6 per cent, and they could have gotten money out of the Federal reserve banks at 4½ per cent but for the fact that one or two institutions were borrowing eight, or ten, or twelve times their capital stock and surplus from the Federal banks in these centers, and the result was they were being sent to the Federal reserve banks all over the United States to get the money.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if a very large part of this borrowing in New York City and Philadelphia, to which he refers, was not for the purpose of purchasing certificates of indebtedness from the Government of the United States in order to aid the Government?

Mr. STEVENSON. Let us see about that.

Mr. HUSTED. That is where they were sold.

Mr. STEVENSON. There was discounted in New York three billion and more, and there was only $85,000,000 of customers' paper. Eighty-five million dollars was discounted by the local banks for their customers on the United States paper attached and then rediscounted. The balance of it, $2,980,000,000, secured by United States bonds and other paper of that kind, was discounted directly by the banks.

Mr. SNYDER. What I am interested in having the gentleman tell us is how much of that $2,800,000,000 was made up of certificates of indebtedness of the United States?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know; but there was so much that the Federal Reserve Board came up and said, "Here is a speculative era, and we are going to stop it," and they put up the discount rates, and they stopped it to a considerable extent. They got an excess over their gold reserve, and what was the result? They went to the Federal reserve bank at Atlanta, in an agricultural district; at Dallas, in an agricultural and stock district; at Kansas City, in an agricultural and stock-raising district; in Minneapolis, an agricultural district; in Chicago, which deals with the agricultural interests; to Cleveland and Boston, and they borrowed $115,000,000 from those centers, and there had to be somethng done to stop it, and that rate was put up. They are now reducing those things; but the proposition is simply this: Are you going to allow a few money centers, a few large banks, to have all the money the Federal reserve banks can issue, and then leave nothing for the rest of the country, for the agriculture of this country, and then, when you want to stop it, put up the rate on commerce and agriculture in order to put the rate up on the speculator? That is the proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. If the Government was unable to finance this three billion of a deficit which it is now carrying in certificates of indebtedness, what would happen?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Government would default. That is what would happen. I do not think the gentleman needs any opinion from me in order to know that.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman knows the Government could not finance its own certificates of indebtedness, but had to borrow the money somewhere?

Mr. STEVENSON. To be sure.

Mr. MADDEN. And then the discount was made at the place where the Government was compelled to borrow?

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman will agree with me that the rate of discount was raised by the Federal reserve banks, not because they were securing certificates of indebtedness, but because they were milking this country in order to furnish the speculator that money and to loan on call, and that was what the Federal Reserve Board said had to be stopped. What was the result? It resulted in people who wanted to borrow on the agricultural paper paying 6 per cent and people in Minnesota and South Carolina paying it, when there was no necessity for it. That is what it resulted in. This proposition proposes to regulate that, so that there will be justice between the different banks.

There is another thing I want to call your attention to in relation to that. When they exceeded their gold reserve in issuing Federal reserve notes in New York and went to borrow from the country, what was the result? If that is allowed to go on indefinitely they will borrow at Atlanta until it gets to the gold-reserve limit, and then at Dallas and at Kansas City, the same thing, and at Chicago and Minneapolis, and at St. Louis and Cleveland and Boston, and pretty soon they will get the money in this country loaned up in one bunch over here, loaned up to where there is not a Federal reserve bank in the United States can issue another note, and then what will become of the Government's certificates of indebtedness? Where will the money come from to finance them when you get to the point where one set of banks has gotten all the money in this country? There is no escape from it.

What is this proposition? It is simply this: The directors of the Federal reserve banks of the fifth district will say, "If you want paper, if you want money, you can get it up to, say, 100 per cent of your capital and surplus at the minimum rate of 4½ per cent. If you want to get up to 125 per cent of your capital and surplus, we will put it up to 5 per cent. Now, is not that fair? Shall the bank that only borrows a little be penalized and put up to a higher rate because some other fellow wants to borrow it all?

Mr. HUSTED. Is it the purpose of this bill to stop margin speculation? Is that the real purpose?

Mr. STEVENSON. No, sir. The purpose is to prevent any one banking institution from absorbing all or the majority of the capital of any reserve bank, to the exclusion of the other banks in that region, without its being penalized. It is to make them deal justly, and you will notice the very section we are amending says that they shall have regard to the needs of commerce in fixing their rates of discount.

Section 4, that I quoted awhile ago, says there shall not be any discrimination as between banks. Well, if you let one bank borrow 300 per cent of its capital and surplus—and some have borrowed ten times their capital and surplus, as I am informed—if they make a profit on ten times their capital and surplus should they not pay a little more for the privilege? And should we not write into the law a provision that will make it a little less expensive for the bank that borrows only 50 per cent of its capital and surplus?

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. I know many banks in New York State have borrowed heavily from the Federal reserve banks in order to assist the Government in floating its loans. They did not have the money and they had to borrow it from the banks. Now, if it is the proposition of the gentleman to force those banks to liquidate their loans when they put up their money to patriotically aid the Government, then I say that this bill, instead of working justice, would work very gross injustice.

Mr. STEVENSON. If you take the gentleman's argument, the more money the bank borrows and the less it leaves for the other fellow, the less it ought to pay. That is his proposition, whereas it is the other way. The less a bank borrows the cheaper the rate it ought to have, and that is the rule in all the banking concerns that ever I have been connected with, that the man whose credit is good and who does not borrow very largely aways gets the cheapest rate. That is a business proposition. But you do not put in any discrimination at all. Discrimination is prohibited. All those borrowing within the same limit get the same rate.

Now, what is the situation to-day? The farmers of the South are making their loans to-day. They are making them under this rate and it had to be put high. They are making them under a rate that had to be put up, so the Federal Reserve Board said—and said it unanimously—to stop speculation. They are making them on the basis of the banks having to pay the Federal reserve bank 6 per cent interest. The Federal Reserve Board will tell you that if it was not for this situation they could get it for 4½ per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNBAR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the inflation of our national currency, due to the issue of Federal reserve notes, has been increasing to an extent not fully realized and continues to increase with steady progress not calculated to enable the regional reserve banks to serve in times of threatened financial and industrial panics the purpose for which they were intended.

The financial and circulation statements issued by the Secretary of the Treasury reveal:

The inflation of currency during the last six months to have been an increase in Federal reserve notes of $490,380,835, a decrease in our gold supply of $223,960,125, and of silver money

$28,159,623, making a progress toward currency on a paper basis as follows:

Increase of Federal reserve notes	$490,380,835
Loss of gold	223,960,125
Loss of silver	28,159,623
Total	742,500,583

Should the same financial operations continue for the next six months we shall in a year's time from September 1, 1919, to September 1, 1920, have inflated the circulating medium on a paper basis of approximately $1,500,000,000. The increase has been with almost uninterrupted continuity, evidenced as follows:

Federal reserve notes Mar. 1, 1920	$3,255,213,250
Federal reserve notes Sept. 1, 1919	2,764,832,415

There was an increase in the issuance of Federal reserve notes in five of the months and a decrease in one month from September, 1919, to February, 1920, inclusive, as follows:

	Increase.	Decrease.
September, 1919	$121,456,100
October, 1919	72,411,860
November, 1919	100,951,625
December, 1919	236,137,145
January, 1920		$169,903,870
February, 1920	129,327,975
Net increase		490,380,835
Total	660,284,705	660,284,705

During the present month the increase in the issuance of Federal reserve notes to March 25 amounts to $37,605,000, although in the same time there has been a decrease in Federal reserve bank notes of $28,396,000, but an increase during the fiscal year of $21,800,000.

The inflation of the currency since July 1, 1918, has been as follows:

Federal reserve notes, Mar. 1, 1920	$3,255,213,250
Federal reserve notes, July 1, 1918	1,847,580,445
Increase in 20 months	1,407,632,805

Our supply of gold and silver bullion and coin has been depleted as follows:

GOLD.

July 1, 1918	$3,076,482,515
Mar. 1, 1920	2,720,767,607
Decrease in 20 months	355,714,908

SILVER.

July 1, 1918	731,832,323
Mar. 1, 1920	551,333,776
Decrease in 20 months	180,498,547

From July 1, 1918, until July 1, 1919, there was an increase in the Nation's gold resources, but the decrease since the beginning of the fiscal year amounts to $374,309,861.

The circulating medium as of July 1 and March 1, 1919, was as follows:

	Paper.	Specie.	Total.
Mar. 1, 1920	$4,562,369,841	$3,243,941,959	$7,806,311,800
July 1, 1919	3,941,181,713	3,647,292,058	7,588,473,771

More than $567,000,000 of the above increase noted in paper was issued by the Federal Reserve Board.

According to Bulletin No. 32, under date of March 26, 1920, published by the United States Council of National Defense, the Federal Reserve Board has quoted that the export of gold from the United States for the first 10 days of March, 1920, amounted to $28,316,952, and the imports only $8,010,354, showing a loss of gold for the first 10 days of March amounting to $20,306,598. The board also announces that since January 1, 1920, the export of gold amounts to $119,182,202 and the imports to $28,316,953, resulting in an exhaustion of our gold supply amounting to $90,865,249.

Our present monetary condition is, I believe, cause for the gravest concern. Contemplation of these figures, taken from governmental reports, reveals a large expansion in the inflation of currency on a paper basis. Unfortunately this inflation continues to-day, and if present conditions continue to prevail in the future we can not see the end, unless the Federal Reserve Board, realizing the dire calamities which will surely befall our financial and industrial institutions, casts an anchor to the windward and conserves our resources while there is yet time. [Applause.]

Inflation of the currency is associated with inflation of prices and is one of the elements productive of the high cost of living. It seems strange that in time of peace one of the factors in the present high cost of living should be the inflation of our currency. Yet it is true. It therefore behooves us, in order to reduce the high cost of living, to reduce our inflated currency so that it may represent real instead of fictitious value.

During the last months the Federal Reserve Board has undertaken to check the expanse of credit and the increased issue of Federal reserve notes by raising its discount rate, supposedly for the purpose of checking the frenzy, too prevalent, of stock speculations. Too much credit is used for speculative purposes. One has but to read the events on the various stock exchanges to be appalled by the amount of credit required for speculative purposes in the unproductive but necessary monetary centers.

If trading on stock exchanges were limited to investments, and "bulling" of the markets and the covering of shorts materially curtailed, much relief might be offered, with a resultant deflation in currency.

It seems to me that if the Federal Reserve Board would exercise a more careful control of credits extended for speculative purposes and endeavor to obtain the cooperation of banking officials the monetary inflation would cease and enable more credit to be diverted for industrial purposes.

We hear much in these times about increased production, economy, and thrift. Unfortunately human nature in America at the present time is mad in the indulgence of luxury and extravagance. [Applause.] We seem to expect much of the artisan and laborer, but by far the greater remedial results can be obtained by the practice of economy and thrift among the middle class and the rich. It is they who in their personal expenditures consume and expend.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute more?

Mr. PLATT. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. DUNBAR. The purpose for which the Federal reserve banks were organized was to afford relief where financial and industrial danger threatened. By its beneficial provisions we were able to finance our war credits on the scale necessitated, but now is the time to put our house in order, and we must not continue to capitalize credit available and be unprepared for future emergencies. Money and credit to be used for speculative purposes should be withheld at least for a time and preparations begun to deflate the currency to a volume sufficient for legitimate business enterprises. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SNYDER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On March 29, 1920:

H. R. 909. An act for the relief of Ellen Agnes Monogue; and

H. J. Res. 316. Joint resolution relating to supervision of the Lincoln Memorial.

On March 30, 1920:

H. R. 5346. An act for the relief of the Eastern Transportation Co.;

H. R. 12467. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes;

H. R. 946. An act for the relief of James A. Showen;

H. R. 1317. An act for the relief of Robert T. Legge; and

H. R. 12954. An act providing for the relief of populations in Europe and in countries contiguous thereto suffering for want of food.

AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

Mr. PHELAN. And I yield the gentleman eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I have not had sufficient time to arrange my data and reduce my materials to writing. On a subject of this kind it is very essential and necessary, in dealing with figures and money matters, that a man should commit his statements to writing most of the time.

I have begun to take quite an interest in matters relating to banking and currency, and especially in the subject of money. When you once get to studying it a little—and I have always studied it a little, theoretically—you will find that it is one of the most interesting subjects that can be produced. In fact, the stories of the Arabian Nights are not more interesting than the stories you find in the financial maneuvers of many of the people of this country and of other countries. What an interesting story it would make to tell how, some time before last Christmas, Lord and Lady Swathling came over from England to put their young son in an American school, and incidentally to help in some matters that were then pending in this country, and then to recite how one day he walked down to the Treasury of the United States, and, like Aaron of old, knocked on the bronze doors, which opened, and lo! from thereout began to flow United States gold to all parts of the earth.

I am not going to discuss that question particularly, because it is not pertinent to this bill; but it shows the interesting character of things that occur in connection with high financial matters.

I may say that I do not have the confidence in the Federal Reserve Board and their opinions that some of the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency have, and which some of the Members of this House have; and I lost my confidence in them when they advised Congress to pass what is known as the Edge law, for the purpose of incorporating companies to do an international speculation business, and because they represented to the Congress and to the committee that the purpose of it was not for speculation, not for building up industries in foreign countries, but for the purpose of stabilizing foreign exchange. You remember when that discussion was had.

Now, what has come about under that law with respect to stabilizing foreign exchange? As a matter of fact, it was a species of deceit on the part of the Federal Reserve Board to impose upon Congress with any such statement as was made at that time. I do not want now to refer to what I happened to say at that time, because it probably does not amount to very much, but I did state at that time that the purpose of that bill was to take American money and build factories in foreign countries for the purpose of manufacturing goods with cheap labor and to import those goods into the United States for sale at an immense profit.

Already in the Kingdom of Czechoslovakia they have recently erected a large cotton mill. The natives have gone to work, very laudably indeed, in a factory built by American money. Where do they expect to get their market? In America. Whether or not that is going to be a good proposition for the American workingman and the American capitalist, unless they have their money invested abroad, I can not say.

But, getting down to this bill, the bill now before the House is H. R. 12711, recommended for adoption by the Committee on Banking and Currency in its Report No. 678.

Page 138, section 14, of the Federal reserve act enumerates the powers of the Federal reserve banks pertaining to open-market operations. Among them—subdivision d—is the power—

> To establish from time to time, subject to the review and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, rates of discount to be charged by the Federal reserve bank for each class of paper which shall be fixed with a view to accommodating commerce and business.

It is proposed by this bill to add to what I have just read the following words, to wit:

> And which, subject to the approval, review, and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, may be graduated or progressed on the basis of the amount of the rediscount and discount accommodations extended by the Federal reserve bank to the borrowing banks.

As a reason for this legislation the Federal Reserve Board, in their sixth annual report to Congress for the calendar year ending December 31, 1919, say that—

> There is in said subdivision (d) no authority for establishing graduated rates based upon the total borrowing of a member bank, and consequently when it becomes necessary to advance the discount in order to curb the demands of those banks rediscounting with the Federal reserve banks in very large amounts the same rate would have to apply to the moderate requirements of other member banks who may rediscount with the Federal reserve banks infrequently and never excessively. Thus the application of rate advances as a corrective or deterrent to certain banks tends to raise the current rates to all.
> The board therefore recommends to Congress that an additional power be granted it by adding to subdivision (d), section 14, a proviso that each Federal reserve bank may, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, determine by uniform rule, applicable to all its member banks alike, the normal maximum rediscount line of each member bank, and that it may submit for the review and determination of the Federal Reserve Board graduated rates on an ascending scale to apply equally and ratably to all its member banks rediscounting amounts in excess of the normal line so determined.
> In this way, in the opinion of the board, it would be possible to reduce excessive borrowings of member banks and to induce them to hold their own large borrowers in check without raising the basic rate.

The Federal reserve banks would thus be provided with an effective method of dealing with credit expansion more nearly at the source than is now practicable and without unnecessary hardship to banks and borrowers who are conducting their affairs within the bounds of moderation.

I shall vote for this bill, not because it grants additional power to the Federal reserve banks but because it does not.

One of the chief recreations of the numerous professorial boards that infested Washington during the war was the chasing and capturing of phrases. More genuine glee beamed in the eye of a member of the professoriate when he invented a new phrase than even before possessed him in the capture of a butterfly on the college campus. So the phrase "graduated or progressive discounting or rediscounting" placed in the Federal reserve act, while it will adorn the rhetoric, will not increase the power.

In my humble judgment, if this power of progressive discounting does not already exist in section 14d as it now stands, it certainly stands out powerfully in the power given to every Federal reserve bank in section 14 of the act, which is as follows, to wit:

> Said board shall administer the affairs of said bank fairly and impartially and without discrimination in favor of or against any member bank or banks, and shall, subject to the provisions of law and the orders of the Federal reserve board, extend to each member bank such discounts, advancements, and accommodations as may be safely and reasonably made with due regard for the claims of other member banks.

Therefore, will anyone seriously contend that the alleged power asked for in this bill to the effect that discounts "may be graduated or progressed on the basis of the rediscount and discount accommodations extended by Federal reserve banks to the borrowing banks" is not already covered by the existing power giving said banks the right to extend such discounts as may "safely and reasonably be made"?

No power over the subject could be broader. It would certainly include the power "to determine by uniform rule, applicable to all its members alike, the normal maximum rediscount line of each member bank" and to submit to the Federal Reserve Board graduated rates on an ascending scale to apply equally to all its member banks rediscounting amounts in excess of the normal line so determined. This contention is unquestionably sustained by the law department of the Federal Reserve Board, which has recently held, in construing said section 4, and especially the words "may be safely and reasonably," that such words imposed upon the Federal reserve bank an obligation to make only those discounts which "may be safely and reasonably made"; that "the length of the line of any one particular borrower appears to be a pertinent consideration in determining both the safety and reasonableness of a discount"; and that "a Federal reserve bank may properly decline to discount for a member bank the paper of any one borrower on the ground that the Federal reserve bank has heretofore discounted for other member banks what it deems a sufficient amount of that particular borrower's paper."

Necessity not existing for this legislation, there appear but two reasons for asking it, the first one of which is the ease with which the Federal Reserve Board obtains legislation from Congress, and the second to enable the board and its supporters to lay the blame on Congress for not passing this alleged enabling law in time to avoid a crash, if any.

The administration of the Federal reserve act is responsible for the high cost of living.

That our highly elastic currency has been inflated by the Federal Reserve Board would perhaps not be so exact as to say that it has been stretched and is now close to the snapping point. Uncle Sam stands back of the Federal reserve bank dollar, so that the individual need have no fear except as he is one of the taxpayers who stand behind Uncle Sam and who in a crash must sustain the loss.

Is the low-priced dollar the cause of the high price of living or is the high cost of living the cause of the low-priced dollar? We do know that they appear together, and we do feel sympathy with the colored gentleman who wrote from Enid, Okla., saying, "This rubber goods in the banking law am making things bad for our farmers." [Laughter and applause.]

I see I am not going to have time to go into the matter that I expected to go into. That is this: I make the charge upon this floor that the administration of the Federal reserve act has been the cause and almost the sole cause for the high cost of living in the United States. If you to-day are paying $125 for a suit of clothes worth $40, charge it up to the Federal Reserve Board. If you are paying $12 or $15 or $20 for a pair of shoes, charge it up to the administration of the Federal Reserve Board. Sunday I saw an old lady picking her way along the street. Instead of shoes she was wearing cloth overshoes which were nearly worn out. When you see anything like that on the streets of Washington, charge it to the Federal Reserve Board. They, and they alone, in the administration of this act are to blame for the high cost of living.

How is this money made? Talk about inflation! How many of us understand what inflation is? It is not strictly inflation. It is too much elasticity. It has been stretched almost to the snapping point. Now, do not any of you get alarmed because I am taking out a little bit of money from my pocket and putting it on the table here. Here are a number of Federal reserve notes which I hold in my hand. I lay them upon the table. Various gentlemen, for the purposes of illustration, have handed to me a number of bills of exchange and drafts. They have been down to South America and have bought up all the leather in the country. They have bought up all the wool in the country. Other gentlemen have bought up all the lumber in the country. As a matter of fact, they are hoarders. I am not charging them with that personally, but for the purposes of this illustration. Now gentlemen hand me a number of imitation drafts, of notes, and of bills of exchange, based upon their illustrative operations and based upon the price not at which they purchased the stuff but on the price at which they are selling it to the manufacturers and to the people of the country. What is done with all these drafts? They are put in the member bank. From the member bank they are transferred to the Federal reserve bank. The Federal reserve bank takes them and goes down to the Treasury and passes them in and takes out Federal reserve notes. So what is all this money based on? There is a 40 per cent gold reserve, but the rest of the money is based upon these drafts, notes, and bills of exchange, the foundation for which is a large hoard of wool and of leather and of lumber and of the necessities of life. You will notice that the gentleman who preceded me said that nearly 70 per cent of all these loans were in the city of New York, where the speculators are, where the hoarders are, where the men are who have piled up millions of dollars by this machinery, and are continuing to do it in time of peace and paying us in this counterfeit money issued by the Federal reserve bank. No wonder it has so little value. What will happen when the price of these things goes down? What will happen to the money which is based upon them? No one knows what will happen; but the crash will come some day.

Here is the point I want to make: What is the interest in this whole thing? Why should these high prices be kept up? Why should the price of wool and leather be kept up? The bankers who have issued and guaranteed this money are interested in the price being maintained. What is back of this money? Why, this leather and lumber and wool and these other things against which this currency has been issued. If the price of those goes down, what happens to this currency? They will never let the price go down, never in the world.

Now, they talk about rediscounting. That amounts to nothing whatever. The men who want to speculate will get their money somehow. This bill will not do a particle of good in that regard. The only remedy is liquidation of some of these things. Let some of them pay their bills to these banks. Let there be a curtailing of the issuance of these Federal reserve notes which I hold in my hand. There is no limit provided by the law. Not even the sky has been provided as the limit for the issuance of this money. So long as they go on bringing in the wool and the leather and all this other material and issue these bills of exchange against the holdings of the same for high prices and trade the same for this cheap money, then there will be no reduction in the high cost of living. [Applause.]

Mr. WELTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. WELTY. Is not that money worth 100 per cent in gold?

Mr. KING. Every one of these paper dollars will purchase just as much as a gold dollar in this country, but that is not the point.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill permits the Federal reserve banks, subject to the approval and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, to graduate or progress interest rates on certain standard bases. Under the Federal reserve act as it stands on the statute books to-day the Federal reserve banks, subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, can make different rates of interest on different kinds of paper, but they can not graduate the rate or progress the rate on the same kind of paper. For example, if they put a 6 per cent rate on commercial paper in the New York Federal reserve district, they have got to charge every member bank the same rate. They must charge every bank that comes up for rediscount 6 per cent, it does not matter how much rediscounting or how little rediscounting the particular bank wants. Every bank which comes up must pay that 6 per cent.

If this bill becomes a law it will permit the Federal reserve bank, subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, to progress that rate. In other words, it has in view that the Federal reserve banks, if they see fit to do so, may grant a certain normal line of credit. They may establish what they call a normal line of credit based on some standard such as the capital and surplus, or perhaps reserves, of a particular bank, or possibly upon the assets. It is left to the Federal Reserve Board to establish the standard, but the standard must be based upon the amount of rediscount and discount accommodations.

For that normal line of credit they will charge the prevailing rates—in the case I mention 6 per cent. If a particular bank wants to get more credit than it will be entitled to under that normal line of credit established, it may, if the Federal bank sees fit to do it, be required to pay a little higher rate of interest. Let me give you an example. Say a certain member bank under the rules laid down is entitled to a million dollars rediscount from the Federal bank as a normal line. If that bank borrows a million and a half, the Federal reserve bank may charge that particular bank something extra on the excess. It would charge the normal rate for the first million but may charge a little higher rate for the next half million.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman stated that the Federal reserve bank, subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, would have the power to establish the standard upon which the advances would be made. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think the standard should be fixed in the bill itself?

Mr. PHELAN. No; I went over that with the members of the Federal Reserve Board, and it is extremely difficult to tell what the best standard would be.

Mr. HUSTED. That is the reason I asked the gentleman the question.

Mr. PHELAN. It is a matter to be determined only from experience.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it not possible under the terms of this legislation that the Federal Reserve Board might, for example, refuse to advance more money to a bank with a capital, say, of a million dollars, surplus, and undivided profits than it would to a bank with a capital of $500,000, surplus, and undivided profits?

Mr. PHELAN. That would depend upon the standard they take, and the standard they take will be taken with the idea of giving the banks credit to the extent they ought to have the credit.

I think it is not unlikely that they will take the capital and surplus as a basis, but it may be that the reserves would make a better basis. I have not the slightest worry that there is going to be any discrimination by the Federal Reserve Board or the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. HUSTED. I do not see how they can establish a basis of that kind without practically discriminating against some banks. I do not see how it is possible to do it. Where you progress your rates on the basis of deposits you would work injustice to some banks. On the other hand, if it was on the basis of capital stock and undivided profits it might work an injustice. I think that whatever the basis is it should be fixed in the bill.

Mr. PHELAN. I disagree with the gentleman, although at the beginning I had some doubts along that line. After working on the thing two or three days I came to the conclusion that it was better to leave the matter open and let the Federal Reserve Board, which has had much experience, work it out itself. In this Federal reserve system it is important to get flexibility, and if we make the law too rigid we are likely to handicap rather than to help.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. BRIGGS. In the experience that the Federal Reserve Board has had with the Federal reserve banks, to what extent have borrowing banks in certain localities exceeded the limit of the normal borrowing privilege?

Mr. PHELAN. There has never been any excess, because there has never been any normal line of credit established. Under the Federal act as it stands it is not possible to establish a normal line, because when you establish a certain rate of interest on a particular class of paper you have got to keep the rate, no matter how much the particular bank borrows. I think I will explain to the gentleman in what I am about to say.

The purpose of the act is to give the Federal reserve system—the Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board in particular—a better control over the distribution of credits and a better control over the credits themselves. They are confronted with this situation to-day: Some banks will get rediscounts in a very large volume, and there is no way that the Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board can cut down credit to those banks except by shutting off altogether or raising the rate for everybody else as well as them. Take an example. Suppose some bank has obtained a large line of credit from the Federal reserve system and used that credit in a way which is not for the best interests of the country as conditions are. Suppose the Federal reserve banks or the Federal Reserve Board wants to put some restraint on them. What can either do? It is possible to do either one of two things—either say to the banks, "You will get no more credit," and shut off abruptly, which may prove disastrous, or else say, "We have got to push up the rate of interest on you and everybody else at the same time, although the other banks may be using their credit in a proper way. If we shut off altogether on a particular number of banks, refusing to give them additional credit, it may prove ruinous to those banks, because if the public finds out that they can not get paper rediscounted it is likely to give the banks a bad name and bring trouble on them."

Under the bill we are now considering, if it becomes a law, the Federal reserve bank can say to a bank, "We want your bank to hold back, but if you want more credit you have to pay more. We will give you a certain amount at 6 per cent, but if you use more than that you must pay 6½ or 6¼ per cent." They can put the rate on without shutting off additional credit altogether.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. Would the Federal Reserve Board inquire of the bank as to the collateral on which it makes its loans?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. Can they inquire whether the collateral represented some tangible real value, or can they inquire as to whether or not it is similar to collateral described in this morning's paper where the Stutz Motor Co. has a total value of assets, including good will, amounting to $4,000,000, while the security value of the Stutz Motor Co. is represented by $37,000,000?

Mr. PHELAN. The Federal reserve banks, as a matter of practice, require that the various kinds of paper which come to them from member banks shall be accompanied with a statement, and that in that statement shall be told the purpose for which the money or the credit obtained is used, or has been used, by the individual, partnership, or corporation which gets it. The Federal reserve bank, therefore, has that information on all of the paper that comes up to it. To get down to the Stutz Motor Co., I think I know the kind of transaction that the gentleman has in mind, and if I am correct paper of that kind can not be taken by Federal reserve banks under any conditions. If the note is all right, if the commercial paper is all right, it can be rediscounted by the Federal reserve bank. To be all right it has to be paper based on a commercial transaction. That means that the money or the credit obtained must be used in some commercial transaction such as the purchase of goods, the raising of agricultural products, the distribution of goods, but if that money is borrowed for stock-market purposes, if it is borrowed to carry loans, then that kind of paper is not rediscounted.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further right there?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. I meant, as the gentleman suggested a moment ago, that the Federal Reserve Board will inquire for what purpose the money is to be used after it is obtained on a loan.

Mr. PHELAN. They inquire in a way. They do not exactly inquire, because they require that statement when the member banks come up to get the rediscount.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. All they require to know is what is to be done with the money after it is borrowed?

Mr. PHELAN. Either what is to be done or what has been done with it and any other information desired.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. They do not inquire as to the character of the collateral which I deposit when I obtain the loan?

Mr. PHELAN. They may, but that is not the important thing. That is the hard thing to explain about the Federal reserve act. Let me state the basis of the whole Federal reserve act, and if the gentleman can keep this in mind that act will clarify itself amazingly. It can not be kept in practice to the letter, but, in general, this is the basis of the Federal reserve act: The Federal reserve banks extend their credit, loan their money for productive and distributive purposes, and, outside of Government bonds and some other slight exceptions which are not important, all of the credit and all of the money that goes out of the Federal reserve system, speaking broadly and not holding to the letter, goes out for production and distribution. That is the basis of it all, and it is intended that no money and no credit, with the exceptions mentioned, shall be distributed from the Federal reserve system for the carrying of stocks, for the carrying of commodities for speculative purposes, for the carrying of real estate, or anything of that kind.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. In a moment. The theory of the Federal reserve act is this, that if the Federal reserve bank credit is extended and money loaned finally through the member banks to those who are going to produce something or sell something, then the person who is primarily liable on the commercial paper, through the very act of his manufacture, through the very act of his production, through the very act of his distribution, will get back the means whereby he can pay his obligation when it is due. The Federal reserve bank will then always be in good shape, because things are always moving; its assets are always liquid; but if at any time we permit to creep into the Federal reserve act any proposition whereby money can be loaned on real estate or on stock-market securities and a rediscount given to a Federal reserve bank, we are likely to face a situation where the Federal reserve banks may have good enough assets, but where they will be unable to meet their obligations when due. As I say, the whole principle is based on production and distribution. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BRIGGS. Has the gentleman any evidence of the extent of the use being made of these credits through this excessive borrowing and loans?

Mr. PHELAN. They are used in various ways.

Mr. BRIGGS. I mean whether they are used in speculation or along the lines suggested by the gentleman for legitimate purposes.

Mr. PHELAN. I will answer that as well as I can. Of course, the whole financial system of the country is a complex system. When the member banks go to the Federal reserve banks, leaving Government obligations out of it for a moment, and get their credit, they must furnish paper of the kind I have described—commercial paper.

The transaction is based on production and distribution, but when the member banks get that money or credit with whatever credit they have got, there is nothing to prevent their loaning the money on stock-market transactions, and if the Federal reserve banks give them too much credit, even though the credit is strictly in accordance with the Federal reserve act, they can, of course, sometimes extend credit for operations in the stock market. I will tell the gentleman how this bill is going to work, for that brings me right to the crux of the whole situation. Banks loan their money for productive purposes to people who want to produce something, to people who want to sell something. They also loan their money to men who want to engage in stock-market transactions, and they loan their money to men who want to carry big stocks of commodities for speculative purposes, and they loan their money for other things. We are putting in the hands of the Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board a power to put a brake on some place when they find conditions are getting bad, and conditions have been bad. They can say to the member banks, "We are going to graduate these rates. If you want something beyond a normal line of credit, you have to pay something extra for it." The minute they do that they send out a warning to every bank in the United States that credit is getting a little tight, or that money, as the term is used, is getting tighter, and immediately every wise banker, every wise board of directors, will say, "We better look after our own house and put it in order; we better watch out when they are pushing up the interest rates, for they may push them higher." What will the wise, prudent banker do when he gets that warning? He will look over his assets and loans and see what are the best. What will he determine? Will he say that stock-market collateral is the best? No, indeed; he will not. Will he say that a loan made to somebody to carry a big stock of leather or wool or something of that kind, hoping for a rising market, is the best kind of a transaction for his bank to engage in? No; he will not, because he knows if hard times come along, if some trouble arises, the thing that is going to be thrown on the market is stock-market collateral. He knows that when people start to economize, when they begin to stop their purchases of things, they are first going to stop the purchase of luxuries. If he is a prudent banker, he will determine that the safest thing for him to have his loans out on is the kind of transactions that are based on production and distribution of necessary things. In other words, when he has to cut down, the thing that he will try to keep in his portfolio will be commercial paper, the proceeds of which are being used for the production of necessary things.

Now, that means exactly—that is one of the purposes of this act, to permit the thing to be done gradually; gradually if danger threatens—there will be a reduction upon the amount of loans that go out upon the stock market, there will be a reduction upon the amount of loans that go out in the purchase of luxuries, there will be a reduction in the loans made to carry commodities for speculative purposes.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman contend, under the provisions of this bill, that the stock exchange loans can be controlled?

Mr. PHELAN. Can be controlled?

Mr. HUSTED. Under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. PHELAN. Well, I do not contend anything in particular can be controlled. I doubt if Congress——

Mr. HUSTED. Would it not be very easy to do it if we wanted to do it, and could there not be a provision that the Federal reserve banks would not rediscount to banks unless they had the statement that over and above a certain amount of money should not be loaned on stock exchange transactions?

Mr. PHELAN. We can pass such a law if we desire to do it, but I doubt very much the wisdom of passing a drastic bill.

Mr. HUSTED. The trouble about such a bill is you are going to hurt the legitimate part more than the speculative part, because the banks usually—I do not say all banks do it—but banks usually loan where they get the highest rate of interest, and they get that high rate of interest on stock exchange loans, and if any loans are going to be reduced they will be the commercial loans instead of the stock exchange loans.

Mr. PHELAN. I disagree with the gentleman, and I want to call his attention there so the record will be straight. I call attention again that no paper based upon stock market transactions, no paper the proceeds of which shall be used for stock market speculations can be rediscounted by the Federal reserve bank, so that under the power of the Federal Reserve Board and Federal reserve banks there is no question in the world that they can proceed at once to have some check upon speculation. But, to answer the gentleman again, I believe that that is all that the Government can do. When men stand upon the floor of this House or stand elsewhere and criticize either legislators or administrative officials I think they fail to realize what is at the base of the present condition. It would be impossible, as every one of us who stops to think knows, to do everything by legislation; and in my opinion in the present condition of affairs to-day it is impossible for us to do the biggest part of it. If we are going to have conditions right in this country, the people of this country ought to do it themselves, without waiting for the Congress, the President, the administrative officials, or anybody else. [Applause.]

And the future safety of our business conditions in this country lies in just two words, and those two words are "production" and "saving." [Applause.] If we are going to go through the next few years or probably the next decade, and get through without serious trouble, the people of this country have got to apply themselves to production; they have got to produce more and they have got to save more. If the people of the country will produce more and save more they will do themselves more good and the whole country more good than all the legislative bodies in the United States, including the Congress, can do. [Applause.]

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that a Member a while ago stated that in some instances national banks of this country had been able to borrow from the reserve system an amount of money which equaled the capital and reserve of that institution. Can the gentleman tell us whether that statement is correct; and if so, why the Federal reserve officials permitted that sort of thing to be done?

Mr. PHELAN. I will not say any particular bank has done that, because I do not know, but theoretically it is possible. The gentleman asks why the Federal Board has not stopped that. It is an extremely difficult position in which the Federal Reserve Board and banks are placed. If a member bank comes to a Federal reserve bank with commercial paper to discount, it is difficult to say that they will refuse it. If they do, it is likely to have a disastrous effect upon the bank, because people will say that if the bank can not get its paper rediscounted there must be something wrong with it. The only way to do it now is to put a check on it by raising the interest rate, and if they raise the rate of interest on one bank they have to raise the interest on the others. By this bill they can do that in reference to a particular bank on its excess credit, without subjecting the other banks to the penalty for normal. As I stated, the secret of our economical situation lies in greater production and greater saving, and this bill, I think, is the most effective piece of legislation that has been suggested to help along that situation. I do not make any wild prediction of what might be done or will be done under the provisions of this bill, but I do say that it affords an effective means whereby the Federal system—whereby the member banks, the Federal reserve banks, and Federal Reserve Board joined together—can put a check upon expansion of credits and can do it without at the same time doing unnecessary injury to anybody.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. I agree absolutely with what the gentleman said about the real and only cure for existing evils lying chiefly with the people and consisting in greater production, greater thrift, and greater efficiency. I believe that the margin of speculation is a very great evil of the present day, and I believe it causes a large part of our troubles. I believe that can be cured to a great extent by legislation, but I do not think that this legislation accomplishes anything toward that end or will affect it at all. I would like to see the committee bring in some legislation that would do some good in that regard.

Mr. PHELAN. Well, that is one problem. But this legislation does give opportunity to curb unnecessary expansion of credits.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman stated a moment ago, if I understood him correctly, that the passage of this act would place the Federal reserve banks in a position to prevent an overrediscount of a particular bank by charging a higher rate of discount to that particular bank without affecting other banks.

Mr. PHELAN. That is not exactly my statement.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, that is the gist of it. Now, while we have the power to do that under this amendment to the law, what would prevent the banks that had not exercised the right which they might have for rediscount from making the loans to borrowers who had been refused by the banks because of the high rediscount rates, and thereby accomplish the very purpose which this bill is said to endeavor to avoid?

Mr. PHELAN. That is a very pertinent question. And in answer I will say to the gentleman that if those handling our financial situation, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks and a great many individuals outside, see that such a condition is taking place and see any danger in it or any evil in it, the situation can be met under this bill, just the same, by lowering the normal line of credit so that they will put a premium upon a larger amount of credit given. Or, if that fails to operate and they find that this undue expansion, for other than good economic purposes, did take place, they can raise the interest rate on everybody. The beauty of this bill is that it permits flexibility and elasticity. That was one of the things that was sought in the adoption of the Federal reserve act, namely, to give a certain flexibility to our financial system. This is a simple addition to that act, which will give opportunity for still greater flexibility.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. I recall that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] stated at the outset of the debate that the chief object of this proposed legislation was to prevent the further expansion of credit, and I would like to know if, in the opinion of the gentleman, this object would be accomplished in the event this bill should be passed?

Mr. PHELAN. I will answer the gentleman. I do not want to say exactly that this bill has for its purpose the further curtailment of credit. Conditions may occur where we ought to have an expansion of credit. But to-day it seems that we ought not to have an expansion of credit. If I may add a word, I think a more accurate statement would be "to give a better control over credit," and if present-day conditions are such that we ought to stop further expansion, then this bill will give the opportunity for preventing the further expansion of credits. You asked me what I thought would take place?

Mr. RHODES. I asked you if you thought that the object stated by the chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], would be accomplished by the passage of this bill?

Mr. PHELAN. Well, I hope that the purpose of the bill will be accomplished. I have confidence that the directors of the Federal reserve banks and the members of the Federal Reserve Board will use this power and other powers they have to get the situation back as soon as they can to normal. But I want to call this to the gentleman's attention: Much has been said about the inflation of our currency and that sort of thing. Why, it is the easiest thing in this world to deflate our currency and deflate our credits. All the Federal Reserve Board and Federal reserve banks would have to do would be to refuse to give out any more

Federal reserve notes; to call in some that are out; to raise their interest rates very much higher on the credits that are out, and you will get a deflation of your currency and credits that would absolutely amaze you.

But there is another side to this proposition. While it sounds very well to say that we ought to get a deflation, you must remember if you have got a big balloon inflated, and you prick a hole in it, it is going to collapse, and one of the difficulties of the present situation is that if they adopt too drastic methods to get deflation they will probably do more harm than good by those drastic methods. Now, what we hope is that with the power we have given them and with the power we are giving them the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks, so far as lies in their power, will contribute to bringing back conditions to something like normal. But, again, I do not want to allow this to pass without saying that the Federal Reserve Board and all the Federal reserve banks and all the Government officials and all the Government agencies are utterly powerless to bring about a proper economic readjustment if the people themselves are not going to contribute and do their share.

Mr. RHODES. Well, could not that deflation of the currency to which the gentleman refers be accomplished under existing law without the necessity for passing this bill?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes, indeed; in some degree.

Mr. RHODES. I see that the report says that the board is undertaking to check the expansion of credit.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. And the debate has not been directed to that proposition, but has been directed more to the question of conferring additional powers upon the Federal reserve banks to equalize the matter of increasing the rates of discount.

Mr. PHELAN. I tried to address myself to that question when I said that if this bill goes into operation the Federal reserve banks can gradually discourage the wrong kind of loans and gradually contract the credit that is now outstanding. I tried to explain that to the gentleman.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; I will yield all my time if the gentleman wants it.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman think this gives any power to the Federal reserve banks that the member banks do not possess among themselves?

Mr. PHELAN. In dealing with their own customers?

Mr. PLATT. In dealing with their own customers or dealing with each other.

Mr. PHELAN. Why, my recollection is that in a general way the member banks have exactly this power if they want to exercise it.

Mr. PLATT. The Federal reserve banks would have it if we put in the specific statement which seemed to imply that they have got it.

Mr. PHELAN. We have been careful of the Federal reserve banks and have put in provisions which would clearly indicate that we wanted no discrimination among member banks. Because of that the Federal Reserve Board, and I think very properly, feels if it permitted a graduated tax it might be against the spirit of what we originally intended.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Under the present arrangement, or under the present law, if they undertook to put on this graduated tax it would have to apply to all, irrespective of the purpose of the loan?

Mr. PHELAN. Under the present law they can not graduate the tax.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand.

Mr. PHELAN. If they have the 6 per cent rate on agricultural paper, they have got to give that 6 per cent rate to the bank that borrows $100 or to the bank that borrows $10,000,000, if some bank borrows $10,000,000, or else they have got to stop the bank that borrows $10,000,000 somewhere along the line and refuse to give it any more credit.

Mr. McKEOWN. The thing I am interested in is whether, on the passage of this act, the board would graduate the rate, and if that would be used to the detriment of the agricultural communities in the effort of the board to check speculation in some stock in some speculating center?

Mr. PHELAN. No; I think absolutely not.

Mr. McKEOWN. In other words, in the making of the rule applying to discounting banks in stock districts where they speculate in stocks, whether the effect on the graduation or limitation will not be used as a precedent to impair the borrowing capacity of an agricultural community?

Mr. PHELAN. The act with this amendment will give such flexibility that it will not act to harm agricultural production. In my opinion, if the act is in operation, if the Federal reserve banks endeavor to act under it, the effect will be to help the production of necessary things rather than to injure. That is one of the purposes; that is, to help throw our credit into the production of necessary things, which is one of the things that we all desire in order to bring down the present high cost of commodities and the present high cost of living.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes, first, to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, in considering the details of this bill the broad aspects of the situation may not have been observed. Last Friday the Federal reserve ratio fell to 42.7, the same that it was on the 20th of February, and within a shade of the low level, 42.5, that it reached on the 27th of February and the 12th of March.

The situation in a nutshell is this: Last fall it was discovered that such an immense amount of money in this country was being used for speculating purposes that the greatest orgy of gambling that the world has ever known was in progress. It is true that the tulip speculation in Holland and the John Law speculation at the time of the Mississippi bubble may have been more intense, but in the aggregate of volume there never was such speculation in the history of mankind as is now on foot.

This has been in part made possible by the misuse of certain provisions of the Federal Reserve System. The system was intended for time of emergency, but it has been resorted to for speculation by stock gamblers, and the result is you are standing on the edge of a precipice. Your doctors are the Federal Reserve Board. They are the experts to whom we have intrusted authority in this matter. They started last summer to meet the situation by raising the rediscount rate. They say now, "We need more power." Let us not befog the real issue by disputing over details. The men that we must trust in this crisis tell us they need this power. If they can not be believed, who can be believed? For heaven's sake give them the opportunity to save us, if they can. [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 of the Federal reserve act as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and June 21, 1917, be further amended by striking out the semicolon after the word "business" at the end of subparagraph (d) and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and which, subject to the approval, review, and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, may be graduated or progressed on the basis of the amount of the rediscount and discount accommodations extended by the Federal reserve bank to the borrowing bank."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 1, line 10, after the word "the," to strike out the word "rediscount" and insert in lieu thereof the word "advances."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PLATT: Page 1, line 10, after the word "the," strike out the word "rediscount" and insert the word "advances."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of that amendment is to make the bill read exactly the same as the Senate bill. We do not want to have the two bills read differently. This word "advances" covers a little that is possibly not covered in the word "rediscount." The banks borrow, for example, directly on 10-day notes, and I question whether the word "rediscount" covers that.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not contend, does he, that this word "advances," as used in the Federal reserve act, means the same as the word "rediscount"?

Mr. PLATT. No; but——

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is proposing to strike out the word "rediscount" and insert instead of it the word "advances." Certainly as a member of the committee I shall object to such a change as that without the committee considering what the effect will be.

Mr. PLATT. But the Senate committee——

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman knows that we have had to call the attention of the Senate committee repeatedly to errors in its bills. The word "rediscount" has a different meaning from the word "advances."

Mr. PLATT. The word "discount" means the same thing as the word "rediscount."

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman mean to say that the word "discount" means the same thing as "rediscount"?

Mr. PLATT. As applied to the Federal reserve banks, I do, which can not discount their own paper. They mean in that case exactly the same thing.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Would not the end you have in mind be attained by inserting the word "advances"?

Mr. PLATT. It would be; and it would be better to have it read exactly as the Senate bill reads instead of having to pass it two or three times.

Mr. MADDEN. What objection is there to having this bill go to conference?

Mr. PLATT. It is a short bill, and a conference seems unnecessary. That matter was discussed, and the Senate bill was written somewhat differently because of the fact that the word "advances" covers something that the word "rediscount" does not cover, and it needs to be covered. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] can explain that.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; if the gentleman will yield to me just a minute.

Mr. PLATT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman can not yield his time. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MADDEN. While I am talking against this amendment I want to talk generally against the bill. I did not get a chance to do it during the debate allowed for that purpose.

My judgment is that this amendment ought not to be adopted. In the first place, under the law as it now exists, wherever a discount rate is made by the Federal reserve bank it must be made to all banks alike within the region on similar paper. If this amendment is adopted, it will give to the Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board the power to make regulations under which they will have the right to say that any given bank within a region, that may have exceeded the limit fixed by them for rediscounts, and that wishes to rediscount more than the limit fixed, must pay a higher discount rate; and it is said by the committee that this proposal is made for the purpose of enabling the Federal reserve banks or the Federal Reserve Board, or both combined, to restrict credits and thereby bring back normal conditions. They say further that the reason why it is proposed to do this is that some particular bank in a given region may have rediscounted more than its proportion of the paper that has been rediscounted within the region, and that other banks have been discriminated against by reason of the fact that they have not exercised the power they might have exercised by calling for rediscounts in order that circulation might be granted to them and that they might thereby be enabled to make additional loans to their customers. But suppose that this amendment to the law is passed and that the right is granted under the law to make the regulations proposed, and that the power is exercised by the Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board, which will give them the right to say to any bank or to all banks within a region that they shall have what they have not got now, a fixed limit within which they shall have the right to rediscount their paper, but that when they have reached that limit there shall be charged to them an additional rate of interest on any excess over the limit fixed. Now, we will assume that there are 900 banks in a region and that only one of the 900 banks has reached the limit, and that it is the only bank in the region that seeks to rediscount in excess of the limit fixed, and the Federal Reserve Board exercises its power under the regulations to charge an extra discount rate in order to prevent this bank from making additional loans, the purpose being, of course, to contract credits. Is there anything to stop the other 899 banks, which have not anywhere near approached the limit of their authority to rediscount, from making the loan to the borrower, or from rediscounting their paper in the Federal reserve bank? You have not reached the trouble here. You have not reached the cause at all. Instead of giving the Federal board the power to contract credits you have opened the way for borrowers everywhere within the region to go to the banks with whom they have not been doing business at all and to borrow to a greater limit than they have had the power to borrow from the bank with which they have been doing business and whose officers know their standing.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. They could do that now. Any man can go from one bank to another and borrow, if he can get the other bank to loan to him.

Mr. MADDEN. I know he can; but you are pretending to say to us that you are prohibiting that sort of thing by giving the Federal Reserve Board the power to fix a rate which will prevent additional loans. Now you have not done it.

Mr. PLATT. We are trying to prevent the big banks from hogging all the credit and not letting the little banks have any. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. You have not done that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. You have not done that. You pretend that if this bill is passed it will curtail credits, that it will limit loans, that it will contract the currency, that it will help to bring back normal conditions, that it will prevent inflation; but it does not do it. It does just one thing. It places it in the power of the Federal Reserve Board, through the Federal reserve banks, to exercise the right to discriminate against any bank within the region.

Now, what happens to-day? When the Federal Reserve Board fixes the discount rate it must fix it on a uniform basis within the region on paper of like character. You are saying to the Federal Reserve Board that within any region in the United States they may fix one rate for one bank and quite another rate for another bank; and who can say that the Federal Reserve Board will not bring politics into the operation of their action? I fear that they will and that this is one of the most dangerous laws that we could put upon the statute books on this subject.

Mr. HUSTED. In connection with what the gentleman is saying I want to call attention to the fact—and I think it is very important—that absolutely no basis for fixing this discriminating rate is named in this bill. It is left entirely to the discretion of the board, and they can change that from time to time and throw the whole system into confusion.

Mr. MADDEN. That is just what I am trying to say, that to-day the discount rate must be made under the law, and it must be made uniform; but if this bill is enacted into law it will be at the whim of the Federal Reserve Board to-morrow.

Mr. PHELAN. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to lines 9 to 11, inclusive:

> May be graduated or progressed on the basis of the amount of the rediscount and discount accommodations extended by the Federal reserve bank to the borrowing bank.

It will have to be taken as a basis and a standard set.

Mr. MADDEN. To-day the Federal board has no power to say what rediscounts shall be accepted; it has the power to refuse discounts, but it can not by regulation say to a bank within a region your limit of rediscount shall be so much. Under this bill they will be able to say to you your credit for rediscount shall be $1,000,000 and to another banker in the same region your limit shall be $500,000. They will have the power to do it, and to-day they have not the power.

Mr. PHELAN. They have a very much larger power when they can say you shall not have any credit at all.

Mr. MADDEN. They still have the power to say you shall not have any credit; but when you place in the power of human agency the financial interests of the United States, when you put in the hands of an agency the power to say that you can have a certain amount of discount and to another you can only have so much discount, you have placed the financial conditions of the country in a state of chaos.

Mr. PLATT. Does not the gentleman see that what we are trying to do is to make it so that it shall not be so drastic. They have the power now to shut off absolutely any rediscount.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not have to tell me that.

Mr. PLATT. We want them to ease up a little.

Mr. MADDEN. You want to fix it so that they can play favorites.

Mr. PLATT. The power they have to-day is fraught with danger.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman says the law to-day is dangerous, and yet he is willing to repeal the law by amendment, so as to place it in the power of the Federal Reserve Board to make its own law, which need not be uniform. If this bill passes, you are giving the Federal Reserve Board the power to make regulations, and the regulations can be made according to the whim of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], while not essential, is a good one. The words in the bill as it now stands, "rediscount and discount," I believe, cover every transaction which it was intended should be covered, but for the sake of uniformity of language and phraseology of the act I think it is well to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. The transactions covered in section 13 of the Federal reserve act and possibly in section 14 are transactions whereby a member bank takes the paper to the Federal reserve bank and gets it discounted. We are in the habit of calling that a rediscount. The word "rediscount" in the bill would cover that transaction. There is another transaction which takes place under the reserve act, where a member bank comes to the Federal reserve bank and asks to secure credit on funds on its own credit. That would be a discount.

Under section 13 of the act, what we refer to familiarly as the rediscount operation, is referred to in the language of the act by the word "discount." So when we use the word "discount" in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York there is no doubt in the world but what we cover rediscount operations. That is the ordinary transaction where a member bank comes to the Federal reserve bank and tenders somebody's paper for rediscount purposes. The word in the act is "discount."

Further along where we make provision whereby a member bank can secure accommodation on its own obligation we have used in the Federal act the word "advance." So in the act itself we find the words "discount and advances" just as they are incorporated in the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Since there is no doubt in the world that they cover every contraction that can arise in transactions under sections 13 and 14, I think it is better to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he is in error as to the wording of the present act and in error as to the legal proposition. The words discount and rediscount occur in the original act. The word rediscount is where a member bank takes one of its customer's notes to the Federal reserve bank and rediscounts that piece of paper. That is a rediscount. The discount operation is where the bank goes to the Federal reserve bank and discounts its own note.

Mr. PHELAN. Just a minute; the gentleman does not want to take up all my time. I do not want to cut into the gentleman, but I want to conserve my time. I will explain what the gentleman wants.

Mr. WINGO. How can the gentleman explain when I have not finished my question?

Mr. PHELAN. Let me read from the Federal reserve act, on page 27:

> At all events, the word discount covers the rediscount.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the amendment to the bill, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] was the most elucidating speaker on the subject. We are suffering from financial trouble and it is the theory of the Banking and Currency Committee that the only doctor we can get is the Federal Reserve Board. They not only have general powers, they have the power of discrimination, whether they will loan their money or rediscount paper; but they want to be the doctor of the world, including the United States, and want additional power to discriminate between banks in different sections of the country as to the rate of interest they will charge. The very object of the organization of the Federal reserve banks was to make a uniform credit system. I am not surprised at the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Massachusetts being unanimous on this bill, regardless of party, because it will defeat the very purpose for which the Federal reserve act was created—the purpose by which my section of the country profits and the only purpose by which it profits.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I could not get anyone to yield to me, even to ask a question.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman does not want to be wrong about this?

Mr. TINCHER. I will ask the chairman of the committee whether I am wrong in stating that this bill will give the Federal Reserve Board the power to discriminate between banks as to rates of discount.

Mr. PLATT. Yes; the gentleman is wrong in that statement alone.

Mr. TINCHER. Does it give them that power? It says so.

Mr. PLATT. It makes a uniform rule.

Mr. TINCHER. And the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] advocated that as a remedy for our financial trouble. For instance, he advocated charging the people from the West, as you used to do, 8 per cent, and the people from New York 4 per cent, instead of all of them 6 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman is wrong there.

Mr. TINCHER. It looks to me as if the Federal Reserve Board is simply trying to put something over.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. Does not the gentleman know that discrimination between sections is in existence to-day?

Mr. TINCHER. I know it is, but they can not discriminate between banks as to the rate of interest. They can not pick out a pet and discriminate on the rate of interest, and I tell you that the practical business men of this country would not stand for this legislation if they knew what it is. You have not had any hearings. The only people you have heard is the Federal Reserve Board, and they have come down here and convinced you that they are the proper doctor and that this medicine is good for the country. You have not heard a witness from the business world who advocated this treatment, and I would like to know more about the qualifications of the doctor.

Mr. LUCE. May I explain to the gentleman that under the Federal Reserve System ever since it has been in existence it has been possible for different rates of discount to be charged in different parts of the country. I understand that in Minneapolis to-day the rate is lower than it is in New York. The gentleman charges me with saying that I wanted discrimination as between sections. It already exists under the law.

Mr. TINCHER. The board to-day has no right to discriminate between banks on the rate of interest. When you give them that right you destroy the fundamental idea of the organization of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. LUCE. This law gives no power whatever to discriminate as between banks.

Mr. TINCHER. This bill says it gives them the power. According to the proposed amendment, rates—

> Subject to the approval, review, and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, may be graduated or progressed on the basis of the amount of the rediscount and discount accommodations extended by the Federal reserve bank to the borrowing banks.

And I heard the gentleman's argument, and it was for a discrimination in rates, to shut off a certain line of credit that ought not to be extended to any bank, and then I heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], the chairman of the committee, say that already under the law the Federal Reserve Board has the right to deny any bank the credit it wanted, and so I was bound to arrive at the conclusion that the only object of this legislation is to permit them to discriminate on rates, and if that is the object of it, I am against it.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman does not understand it, that is all.

Mr. TINCHER. What is the object of it?

Mr. PLATT. There is no discrimination in it; they have to make uniform rules to apply to all banks.

Mr. TINCHER. Let us get this into the RECORD. As chairman of this committee the gentleman says that if this bill passes the rates must be uniform, and that they can not discriminate as to rates of discount. Is that right?

Mr. PLATT. In any one section.

Mr. TINCHER. What does the gentleman mean by "any one section"? They can pick out one bank and give it a discount of 8 per cent and pick out another and give it a rate of 6 per cent?

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no; they can not do anything of the kind.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; they can.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. The bill says that, and that is all that I know about it.

Mr. PLATT. If the gentleman wants to be wrong, there is no use in trying to explain this to the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, on the proposition of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] I want to submit this to the committee. I may be wrong about it, but under the law, as understood by banks, a discount operation is an original operation. That is the way it is used in the Federal reserve act. That is, if a member bank runs short of funds, but does not care to take up any of its customers' paper, it can go up and get advances in the nature of discounts. The word "advances" and the word "discount" are used interchangeably in the act. The law authorizes a bank to give advances to a member bank on its own note. That is discounting a note of a member bank. If a member bank wants a rediscount, it takes a piece of paper it already has in its portfolio, a piece of paper that it has discounted for one of its customers, and takes that to the Federal reserve bank and rediscounts it.

The word "rediscount" and the word "discount" are separate things in the law, and they are used separately, but the word "advances" and the word "discount" are used interchangeably in the act, so that I think instead of cutting out the word "rediscount" the gentleman should cut out the word "discount" and put in the word "advances." I think that would be proper. He would cut out rediscounts entirely from the act if he substituted the word "advances" for the word "rediscount."

I had not intended to say much about this act. Gentlemen are unnecessarily alarmed about it. I want to offer this suggestion to the members of the committee. In my opinion, the Federal Reserve Board already has all of the power that this amendment will give to it. I think they feel so, although I have not consulted them about it, but the Federal Reserve Board has been cautious in not assuming authority that is not given to it by explicit legislation.

That is one thing those of us who are associated with the board and who have watched its operation have noticed, and that is that they are not trying to extend their power by implication. They have the power now and have the right to discount in one region different from another. They have the power, and Congress gave it to them, of making a different rate on commercial paper and a different rate on agricultural paper, and they exercise that power. Here is one thing proposed to be done by this amendment. It is not exactly like what I wanted to get. They say, for instance, they want to say to banks, "You shall have a line of credit in an amount equal to your capital stock and surplus." That is the old law before the Federal reserve act was enacted, and those of you who were here when the law was enacted will remember that I fought to have that limitation on the Federal reserve act, because I apprehended you would have inflation. We say that if you have the power to say that the rediscount of any member bank can be limited to the amount of capital stock and surplus we will put you back to the old limitations you had under the law before we passed the Federal reserve act. Now, they will say, "If you want to go beyond that, you must pay a premium for an additional line of credit." That is not new in the banking world. Under the private banking system, as I happen to know to my personal knowledge, at least one bank in St. Louis would say to a country bank of Arkansas, "We will give you a line of credit up to a certain amount, and we will give you an additional line of credit in an additional amount at an additional rate." That is nothing new in the banking world, and this bill proposes explicitly and expressly to give the Federal Reserve Board the right to do that. I think they ought to do that just as was the custom in private banking operations. It will enable them to put a check upon inflation of credits and not expansion of credits. Now, that is all there is to it, and there is nothing for anybody to have a fit about, because I am afraid it will not have any effect at all.

I am afraid it is a milk and water proposition that will not help the situation. I will be frank. I do not think there is much to it, and if I had my way this committee would report out a bill saying no bank in this country could have a line of credit from the Federal reserve bank in an amount exceeding the amount of its capital stock and surplus. The bankers of this country, some of them, have got the idea that the Congress and the Federal Reserve Board are responsible for inflation. The inflation of this country at the present time is an inflation of credit. Every bit of inflation of the Federal reserve notes is predicated upon an inflation of credit, and the bankers of this country are responsible for the inflation of their credit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. A man goes to his local banker and says, "I want $10,000 with which to enlarge my plant, or I want to buy a little oil stock." Take the latter illustration. He says, "I can not let you have it." He says, "You can go to the Federal reserve bank and rediscount my note." "No, they would call that speculative security." Then he would say, "You have got my neighbor's note for $10,000 in your portfolio; you can go and get that rediscounted." He is a good customer of the bank, so the banker says, "All right," and takes it to the Federal reserve bank. What does the Federal reserve bank do? It does not want to deny what in its opinion is a proper line of credit, so in practice as a matter of fact they pass the buck on one to the other. That is the kind of condition that has existed, and, as I said, under the present law, without any limitation, a bank with a capital stock of $100,000 got over $1,000,000 in rediscounts from a Federal reserve bank, and, be it said to the credit of the Federal Reserve Board, it was called down.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. In view of the fact of what the gentleman stated, has the central board called on the bank and forced it to withdraw?

Mr. WINGO. No; it did not force it, but just simply said that it was reprehensible and should not be permitted.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I would like, so as to have it go in the RECORD, for the gentleman to give the name of the reserve bank.

Mr. WINGO. I am not going to do that. I did not ask the name of that bank of the Federal Reserve Board, and I am not going to do so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to know much about banking or currency. I am not sure that I fully understand this bill, or I think I do understand it, but if I am in error I would like to be corrected. It is based on the assumption, first, there is now or may be in the near future or the far future too much credit currency and circulation, and that the Federal Reserve Board wishes to or ought to have the power to curtail somewhat the issuance of new volumes of currency based upon credit——

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield for just a second?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not until I make my statement.

That now the Federal Reserve Board has the power, if it desires to exercise it, to refuse to any particular bank new currency for discount or rediscount, or advances, or whatever they are called, but that it does not desire to exercise that power as to individual banks, because the refusal of the Federal reserve bank to discount good paper in the notes of the bank, if it becomes known, might seriously injure the credit of the bank and possibly cause a run on it; that the only way the Federal Reserve Board can control the situation as it exists to-day is by increasing the rediscount rate, all banks in the same district obtaining the same rate upon the same paper; that if it increases the rediscount rate, that means the rate of interest goes up in that entire Federal district, and that in order to avoid the increasing of the rediscount rate on all the paper that is presented to the bank the board desires the power to increase the rediscount rate under regulations where banks are borrowing too much money under their rules. A bank may properly borrow, say, $100,000 or $1,000,000, or I do not know how much more, on the rate that is universal in the district for all banks, but when the bank has pyramided its credit and seeks to get a much larger line of discount from the Federal reserve bank of the district than normally they would be entitled to, they want to be able to say, in order to curb the desire of the bank, "If you want such a large credit, you must pay an additional rate of interest for the excess over the amount that banks are rediscounting here." Is that a fair statement, I will ask the gentleman?

Mr. PLATT. I think that is a very fair and a very clear statement.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, if that is correct, I can see no possible objection to the passage of the bill. It seems to me that the tendency of the bill should be to keep down the interest rates to a certain amount of credit rather than to increase the interest rates on all the credits extended. If the Federal Reserve Board is convinced that there is too much asset currency in the country—and whether they are or not, I am convinced there is too much; I think that is one of the causes of the high cost of living—and they desire to hold it down when speculation becomes rampant in every direction, then they ought to have the power to give the ordinary rate of discount to the ordinary bank for the ordinary amount of money which the bank ought to rediscount and a much higher rate for the excess. That is not a punishment to the man in business. That is a protection to the ordinary man in business who is borrowing money ordinarily from the banks, because it keeps his interest rate down. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

I just wanted to make one or two statements and direct the attention of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] to the misconception which he had of this measure. Since the splendid statement just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I do not think anybody needs any more light on the intention of it. But the gentleman from Kansas fell under the misapprehension that this was increasing the powers of the Federal Reserve Board. That is not what it does. It is increasing the powers of the directors of the Federal reserve bank in the gentleman's region and in all the other regions. It is giving them the power to say to their customers, to the member banks, "Now, a legitimate line of credit is, say, 100 per cent of your capital and surplus, and you are all going to get the minimum rate up to that, but if you go above that you are getting more than your share, and the law says that in making loans to the member banks we must have due regard to the rights of all the other member banks." Manifestly, if the Kansas City bank, where it is about to exceed in its Federal reserve notes its gold reserve, has got to stop, and if a dozen banks have borrowed all it has up to that time, the other banks get nothing. And yet for what little the others do get they have got to pay as high a rate as the fellow who gets a monopoly. Now, the purpose of the bill is to give the directors of that bank the right to regulate that, of course to be approved by the Federal Reserve Board.

Now, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] speaks of discrimination. That is not discrimination. Whenever all those who conduct themselves in a certain way get exactly the same treatment and the same rate they are not discriminated against at all. There is no discrimination there.

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to another thing and then I shall be through. Of the agricultural paper carried on the 30th of last January in the United States in all the Federal reserve banks 75 per cent was carried in the Kansas City and Chicago banks, and on that date, because of the excessive loans in the New York district, the rate of discount was raised all over the United States, and the gentleman's farmers out there had to go up to 6 per cent, whereas they were getting their money before that at 4½ per cent; and it was raised, not because they were borrowing more than was necessary but because some other fellows somewhere else were borrowing more than was necessary, and it was a discrimination against them to make them pay a higher rate because of the fault of somebody else. This is a proposition to prevent that discrimination.

Then you know by whom the directors of the Federal reserve banks are chosen. The directors are given power. They are selected by the bankers in your own region. Of course, the majority of them are selected by the banks in that region, and you know they would not stand for anything that is discriminatory on the part of that board.

Mr. TINCHER. I understand the gentleman is on the committee and is entirely familiar with the entire situation, and that he contends this legislation is in the interest of the borrowing farmers of my section of the country.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; and it is in the interest of the borrowing farmers in my section of the country. I was down there a short while ago, when the farmers were making their arrangements, and they are borrowing their money now on the basis that the banks are to have to pay the Federal Reserve Board 6 per cent, and if we do not do something to prevent them from having to borrow on that basis, because of the borrowing of too much money in another district, we are recreant to the interests of our constituents, who are not being protected in that matter. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, if there is no further debate desired, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill with sundry amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SANFORD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12711) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, had directed him to report back the bill with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 8.

So the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PLATT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENDING FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT TO PORTO RICO.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 8038.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the bill H. R. 8038. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8038) to amend section 4 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, extending its provisions to Porto Rico.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8038) to amend section 4 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, extending its provisions to Porto Rico, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8038, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 2 of section 4 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, be amended to read as follows:

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall establish in each Federal land bank district a Federal land bank, with its principal office located in such city within the district as said board shall designate. Each Federal land bank shall include in its title the name of the city in which it is located. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, any Federal land bank may establish branches within the land bank district. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board and under such conditions as it may prescribe, the provisions of this act are extended to the island of Porto Rico; and the Federal Land Bank of Springfield, Mass., is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank at such point as the Federal Farm Loan Board may designate on the island of Porto Rico. Loans made by such branch of the Federal Land Bank of Springfield, when so established, shall be subject to the restrictions and provisions of this act, except that such branch bank may loan direct to borrowers and that the rate charged borrowers may be 1½ per centum in excess of the rate borne by the last preceding issue of farm-loan bonds of the Federal Land Bank of Springfield.

"Each borrower through such branch bank shall subscribe and pay for stock in the Federal Land Bank of Springfield in the sum of $5 for each $100 or fraction thereof borrowed; such stock shall be held by the Federal Land Bank of Springfield as collateral security for the loan of the borrower; shall participate in all dividends; and upon full payment of the loan shall be canceled at par proceeds paid to borrower, or the borrower may apply the same to the final payments on his loan."

With committee amendments as follows:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "established," insert the words "shall not exceed the sum of $5,000 to any one borrower and."

Page 2, line 16, after the word "Springfield," strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That no loans shall be made in the island of Porto Rico to run for a longer term than 20 years."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to take much time to start with on this bill. The report explains it, and it explains itself. It is a bill to extend the benefits of the Federal Farm Loan System to the island of Porto Rico under certain limitations.

In the first place, the rate of interest may be 1½ per cent in excess of the rate borne by the last preceding bond issue from the Federal land banks of Springfield; that is, one-half per cent more than the law requires or provides for in the States. Then we have limited the loans to $5,000 to each person, and have provided that no loan shall run for more than 20 years.

I do not know that these limitations were necessary. The island of Porto Rico is densely populated and well cultivated and has a good deal of good farming land, but the committee thought it was wise to put in these limitations for two reasons.

In the first place, the matter is a little new and the sort of agriculture pursued in the island of Porto Rico is quite different from that in the United States. The lands are different. Most of the loans, we expect, are likely to be taken apparently by coffee plantations.

The second reason was that the limit of $5,000 on loans will apparently cover all the necessities of the case. There are a great number of small holdings on these islands and a few very large holdings, sugar plantations, and so forth, which are not affected by this at all because they can get credit outside and would have no use for this system.

We have extended the act to Porto Rico through the establishment of a branch bank connected with the Federal land bank at Springfield, Mass., which is the eastern Federal land bank. That is chosen because Porto Rico naturally comes into contact with New York City, through the fact that the steamers from the island mostly run to New York City.

With this preliminary statement I will yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Porto Rico [Mr. DAVILA].

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question or two?

Mr. PLATT. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Porto Rico [Mr. DAVILA] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to amend section 4 of the act known as the Federal farm-loan act, extending its provision to the island of Porto Rico. This law has been in force in the United States since 1917, and the great benefit derived by the farmers under its protection is the best commendation that can be made of said act. The people of Porto Rico are in extreme need of this legislation, and if this bill becomes a law you will help the island to develop its agricultural resources, will raise the farmers to a higher economic standard, and will contribute to create a new type of citizen useful to his country and independent from an economic point of view.

It is one of the anomalies of recent legislation conferring Federal supervision upon such subjects as vocational education and the extension of financial aid to small farmers that none of these benefits have been extended to the people living in the insular possessions. And, of all the insular people, the inhabitants of Porto Rico are in far greater need of the benefits that will accrue to the small farmers from the passage of this legislation than any other.

I think I can make this clear in a few words and without the slightest trace of rivalry. Let us consider our insular possessions, the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands. The first were acquired by the United States at the same time as Porto Rico; it is the avowed policy of one of the great political parties, or rather of the two great political parties, of this country to ultimately admit these islands into the family of nations. They are in better condition than Porto Rico from an economical point of view and have shipping facilities, good markets, and natural resources which will contribute largely to develop the progress of the country.

Let us consider the Hawaiian Islands. There is now pending before Congress and will within a few days be up for the consideration of this House a measure for the relief of the small Hawaiian farmers. In that legislation you deal with them in the same generous fashion in which you have in past dealt with the American Indians here in continental United States. In addition to the homesteads that are opened up to small farmers from time to time, it is proposed to immediately withdraw approximately 200,000 acres of land and to settle upon this land every Hawaiian family of no less than one thirty-second part of the blood of the races inhabiting the Hawaiian Islands previous to the discovery by Capt. Cook.

While much of this domain consists of lava rock which will test the agility of a goat to find subsistence, yet a sufficient area of agricultural lands is included to insure to every Hawaiian family a homestead. It is also provided that they shall never be disturbed in the possession of their homes by vesting the title in the United States, exacting a nominal rental from the lessee of $1 per year for the entire tract, and stipulating that it can never be sold or otherwise disposed of to corporations or the predatory interests that prey upon dependent people.

With this legislation the Hawaiians will never have to come here and plead with the American Congress for the extension of the farm loan act to their small farmers, for not only do you forever protect them from the tender mercies of rent-racking landlords but you provide a special fund that will afford them all the cash loans that might otherwise be provided by the extension of this farm loan legislation.

Instead of opening up the highly developed cane lands to homesteading or for the purpose of the Hawaiian Homes Commission, it is proposed that these lands, which as a class are the most productive and remunerative of any agricultural lands anywhere on earth, shall continue to be leased out under the existing plantation system. The proceeds are to be converted into a million dollar home loan fund, from which the commission is authorized to loan to any Hawaiian lessee a sum not exceeding $3,000 at 5 per cent interest to be extinguished in 30 years. It is intended that this plan will enable the small Hawaiian farmers to erect and purchase the necessary buildings, implements, and live stock with which to begin the battle of life. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say right here, on behalf of the Porto Rican people, that we do not begrudge the inhabitants of the Hawaiian Islands any of the benefits of this legislation. They are entitled to these benefits, they have sufficient land to make these reservations to the natives, and you are merely doing justice to them granting these concessions to the needy people of those islands. [Applause.] But our conditions are different from those of the Hawaiian, and, of course, you have to help in a different way the people of Porto Rico. The difference of chief importance lies in the density of population, which is not the case in Hawaii. Here in the continental United States you are not yet crowded for land upon which to grow the food necessary to your existence. There is still enough for every man to acquire a freehold if he hears the call and has a yearning to return to the soil.

But, gentlemen, consider the conditions in Porto Rico! You have there a little island of 3,606 square miles, including mountain and ravine, and a population of 1,300,000. They have only about $4,000,000 in circulation in the island, and they have thirteen hundred thousand people. They have less than $4 per capita of circulation, while in the continental United States you have about $50. You have nothing approaching that condition anywhere in this country, except in the vicinity of the great cities, and to find a parallel you must look to the islands of the Far East or the other teeming populations of the globe.

We are not here asking for largesses or special favors, but only that equal justice be accorded us, and I think that if we can demonstrate that the small farmers of Porto Rico are suffering under a more intolerable burden than any people of their class under the American flag, then they will not appeal to you in vain.

The numerous laws that have been written upon your statute books following the granger movement that started in the Western States many years ago has insured to every American farmer in the continental United States an open market and a competitive system of transportation for the movement of his crops.

The position of the Philippine Islands and the laws that have been enacted by their native assembly have insured to the producers of those islands not only intercourse with but a market among the people of the mainland of Asia, the islands of Japan, and the possessions of the British Empire in the Pacific.

I have already spoken of the Hawaiian people. Let me refer to them again long enough to say that when they were enumerating the conditions from which they are about to be relieved they explained that they were at the crossroads of the Pacific and that their harbors were teeming with ships; that the conditions that had brought the Yankees from the west to monopolize their plantations and the "Yankees" from the Orient to monopolize their labor and threaten to monopolize the population had brought some compensation in the shape of a vast tonnage that enabled them to ship their products.

But this facility of transportation enjoyed by the farmers of continental United States, Hawaii, and the Philippines is denied to the small farmers of Porto Rico. They are off the line of travel. They are in the grip of a close shipping combine that not only denies them adequate transportation, but arrogantly turns a deaf ear to their pleas for additional tonnage because the Porto Rican small farmer is the victim of the coastwise shipping laws. He can not hail the foreign ships to carry his fruits and vegetables to the Atlantic seaports during your long, hard winters when adequate transportation would prove a boon to both the Porto Rican farmer and the American consumer. [Applause.]

Being denied the privilege of producing the perishable fruits and truck crops, he is compelled to become a colono and grow cane for the big corporations that are fattening upon that island just as they are doing in Cuba, in Santo Domingo, in Hawaii, in the Philippines, and in all the islands of the sea! Either he must become a cane colono and work out his existence for these big corporations or with his family he must retreat to a thatched hut in the mountains and eke out a mere existence as a producer of coffee. Under conditions that exist in Porto Rico today, and must continue to prevail until you extend to them the privileges of the farm-loan act, the small producers of that island will not be able to live nor to negotiate for the sale of their products in the manner that it should be the privilege of every free man to do. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the people of Porto Rico are not unmindful of all that the American Government has done for them since the riddance of the Spanish régime. We realize the boon that has come through your system of education, of sanitation, of more liberalized law, and of the incalculable benefits that come with the opening up of commerce. But while you have brought inestimable blessing to the people of that island, you have not extended to them all the benefits of your legislation, and if you want you may help us to build up the small farmer, to educate our people, to obtain transportation facilities, to improve our harbors, to develop our fisheries, and to make of Porto Rico a self-supporting country. [Applause.]

You point with pride to the marvelous agricultural development on the island since the American occupation. Indeed, it has been marvelous. From a production of 40,000 tons of sugar, it has grown in 20 years to a production of 500,000 tons, outdistancing any of the agricultural activities under the American flag, unless it be the rise of the beet-sugar industry of the West. And yet, gentlemen, it was not a healthy American agricultural system that was being developed there, such as this very farm-loan legislation is designed to produce. It has witnessed the gradual extinction of the small native farmer, simply because he could not get financial aid such as is here proposed, and the absorption of his holdings by immense planting corporations, operating alike in defiance to statute law and sound economic law and producing a system of absentee landlordism that must inevitably result in social unrest, anarchy, and bolshevism. [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Viva Porto Rico! Muchas gracias, señor. [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the committee on this bill and I am opposed to it, and I will state briefly my objections to it.

It is conceded that the conditions in Porto Rico are very bad. In other words, the very conditions that are urged in support of the necessity of extending the farm loan act to Porto Rico are conditions which, I think, make it unwise to mix up Porto Rican business with the farm-loan system of this country.

It is true that operations in Porto Rico are limited to one farm-loan bank, and that is the Springfield, Mass., bank. It is also true that they limit the loans to $5,000, and limit them to 20 years.

One argument that is made in favor of attaching the Porto Rican farm loan business to the Springfield bank is that the Springfield bank is not now making any money. To my mind that is a reason why we should not load this doubtful business on that bank if it is being run at a loss now.

But my objection to this bill is more fundamental than that. Gentlemen recall that under the farm loan act, section 21, it is provided that—

Every Federal land bank issuing farm loan bonds shall be primarily liable therefor, and shall also be liable, upon presentation of farm loan bond coupons, for interest payments due upon any farm loan bonds issued by other Federal land banks and remaining unpaid in consequence of the default of such other land banks; and every such bank shall likewise be liable for such portion of the principal of farm loan bonds so issued as shall not be paid after the assets of any such other land banks shall have been liquidated and distributed: Provided, That such losses, if any, either of interest or of principal, shall be assessed by the Federal Farm Loan Board against solvent land banks liable therefor in proportion to the amount of farm loan bonds which each may have outstanding at the time of such assessment.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I think this is a very important bill. I agree with the gentleman, and I think we ought to have a quorum present to hear his full discussion of this bill. I do not make the point to use up time. I make the point that there is no quorum present, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. No quorum is present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 8038, amending the Federal farm-loan act, and finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, when 310 Members answered to their names, and he presented a list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] made the point of no quorum I was discussing the question of the liability of these banks. Some of the Members who were not present when I started out possibly may be interested to know that the pending bill is a bill to extend the Federal Farm Loan System to Porto Rico by authorizing the Federal farm loan bank at Springfield, Mass., to do business in Porto Rico through a branch bank.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to state briefly my objections to this bill. The main objection is one of liability. If the Members of the House will give me their attention, I would like to call their attention to these facts.

Under the farm loan act, section 9, whenever a farmer in Arkansas or Illinois wants a loan he has to join the local association and has to subscribe an amount equal to 5 per cent of his loan of the capital stock of the association. Each individual applicant has to become a stockholder to the extent of 5 per cent of his loan. Now, he is liable on that stock to an amount equal to that over and beyond the amount of the stock itself—just like a stockholder in any other corporation would be.

When the farm loan association wishes to forward his application to the farm loan bank, it has to subscribe to an equal amount of the stock of the farm loan bank. So he becomes indirectly responsible because the stockholders of the farm loan bank are the local association, and the local association as stockholders are liable absolutely for the losses of the farm loan bank. The individual farmer, the borrower, is liable, in addition to the stock he has subscribed, to pay and bear the loss, because he is liable for the losses of the local association.

Now, what happens under section 21, which I had just read before the point of no quorum was made? I will read it again.

Every Federal land bank issuing farm loan bonds shall be primarily liable therefor, and shall also be liable, upon presentation of farm loan bond coupons, for interest payments due upon any farm loan bonds issued by other Federal land banks and remaining unpaid in consequence of the default of such other land banks; and every such bank shall likewise be liable for such portion of the principal of farm loan bonds so issued as shall not be paid after the assets of any such other land banks shall have been liquidated and distributed: Provided, That such losses, if any, either of interest or of principal, shall be assessed by the Federal Farm Loan Board against solvent land banks liable therefor in proportion to the amount of farm loan bonds which each may have outstanding at the time of such assessment.

Now, gentlemen, I think if you have followed me you will see that every farmer in the United States who is now a borrower and a member of the Farm Loan System will become to the extent which I have described liable for the bonds that are issued upon the Porto Rican business.

I have not been in Porto Rico. I want to be fair, and I will be fair, with you. The very reasons presented to me by friends of this measure showing the necessity for some relief to those people down there are the very reasons that make me afraid to attach this business to the Farm Loan System of this country. If they want to organize a separate land bank system, under control of the Federal Government in Porto Rico, and let it stand on its own feet, I am willing for the Government of the United States to go to the extent of furnishing the capital stock down there, but I do insist that you ought not to jeopardize the securities of the farm-loan banks of Arkansas, Illinois, and Indiana, and all the States of this Union, for it is not fair. It is bound to have a depressing effect on our farm-loan bonds.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. I have been told that the farming lands in Porto Rico are highly cultivated. What is the matter; what has the gentleman in mind?

Mr. WINGO. I do not know what the matter is, but the fact is that a distressing condition exists in Porto Rico. Nobody but the large landowners, the large coffee growers, are prosperous. I do not know whether we will be able to extend aid to the little fellows or not. I do not know whether it would be a success or not. But we have tried corn in Illinois, we have tried cotton in Arkansas and Mississippi, we have tried wheat in Nebraska, and we know what kind of farming conditions we have, and we can very safely permit loans to farmers of those States to be connected with our system.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. McKEOWN. Do they have to form some kind of an association in Porto Rico under this bill or is it the intention to have them subscribe directly?

Mr. WINGO. I am not sure, the chairman will correct me if I am wrong, but I think they organize under the provisions of existing law. They might authorize direct loans if they wished. My objection goes not so much to the details but to the principle. It is loading new business in a new territory onto our system, and business of a territory where the farming conditions are very different from what they are in the United States. I repeat that I will vote to give them a land bank and take the money out of the Federal Treasury to furnish them their first capital until they are put on their feet, but I do not want it tied up with our system, which would depress the farm-loan bonds and make them pay an additional premium. That is my objection, and it is to the principle and not because I do not want to help Porto Rico.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I notice that in line 13, on page 2, of the bill there is the following language:

Except that such branch banks may loan direct to borrowers.

Mr. WINGO. That is right.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And I am wondering if they require the borrowers to give real estate security.

Mr. WINGO. I think that would be true, even if it were not in there. That means this: As I recall the farm-loan act now, it permits the banks where they find necessity for it to loan direct, where they can not get enough together to organize an association, and that being a part of the general law, the Springfield bank could authorize that, even if they did not put it in the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. How is this branch bank going to make original loans if it has no capital? It has no money.

Mr. WINGO. The Springfield bank?

Mr. MORGAN. Does the gentleman mean to say that under this bill they would take a part of the cash out of the Springfield bank and put it in the branch bank?

Mr. WINGO. They authorize the Springfield bank to establish a branch in Porto Rico; that is what I understand.

Mr. MORGAN. What restrictions would there be on the amount of cash they could take out of the Springfield bank and put into the bank down there?

Mr. WINGO. There are no restrictions except those placed in the bill. I was not interested in that question. My objection was to a question of principle. I am willing to give Porto Rico a Federal land bank, but let us have it independent, let it stand alone, and not make the borrowers in the United States liable for any loss that might occur down there.

Mr. PLATT. Does not the gentleman think the directors of the Springfield bank and the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board are pretty likely to carefully scrutinize every loan? They are paying 8, 12, 15 per cent now and getting away with it, and they surely can get along if we loan them a little money at a reasonable rate.

Mr. WINGO. Instead of undertaking to extend this act, which is now in its formative period, I am in favor of not amending it at all until we have given it a trial. Instead of extending it so as to give greater benefits to the farmers of the United States, you come here with this proposition and tie it up with a business that you do not know will be successful, because you say private enterprise will not go down there now except at exorbitant rates.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, that is not quite fair.

Mr. WINGO. Let us extend this to the people of the United States. First let us improve the act. Let us take up the question of personal credits. We never have solved that for the farmers yet. That is a problem to which we should address ourselves as a committee, instead of going off and extending the provisions of this act to the isles of the seven seas. If you give this to Porto Rico, then the Virgin Islands will come and say that you ought to give it to them because you have given it to Porto Rico, and then if we grab up some other island of the seas—the Island of Yap, or something like that—the people there will be coming along and saying to us that we must give it to them because we have given it to Porto Rico. Let us keep the Federal farm loan bank system clear for the present and wait until the Supreme Court determines whether or not it is a constitutional act. Let us put it on its feet, let us wait until we get beyond these abnormal times, and then will be time enough to tie other people up to it. In the meantime, if the situation in Porto Rico is so pressing as to need relief, bring in an original bill authorizing them to establish a land bank, and authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe to its capital stock. I will support that kind of a bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They have a farm-loan bank in Hawaii. I do not think it is a branch of any of the banks on the mainland. My understanding is that it is organized under the laws of the Territory. Is there any reason why Porto Rico can not have a bank organized just as the bank in Hawaii is organized?

Mr. WINGO. None whatever that I know of, unless the conditions down there are different, and I do not know what they are.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. There are more than a million people in Porto Rico and there are not more than 200,000 in Hawaii.

Mr. WINGO. There are over a million people in some of the South Sea Islands, where there are a lot of cannibals, but that would not make me want to extend the farm-loan system to those people and make the farmers of Illinois and Kansas and other States liable for trying to civilize them and install modern methods of farming. I think we ought to treat dependencies, or whatever you call them, as separate entities, and establish laws for them so that they will be separate and apart, and not jeopardize our affairs in continental United States.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. My suggestion was that, in view of the fact that there are a million plus population in Porto Rico, conditions there ought to be more favorable for them to establish a bank of their own than they are in Hawaii, where there are only perhaps 250,000 people.

Mr. WINGO. I think that is true. They come in and tell us that the small fellow there is frozen out because he has to pay from 12 to 18 per cent interest. That appeals to my sympathy, but I am talking about a practical, horse-sense proposition of how you will meet the problem. I say go and organize a separate bank to take care of them and help them, and subsidize it if you want to, but let us not tie them up with our domestic system.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. BEE. If this Springfield bank holds its own and does not fail, would there be any danger of banks all over the United States being called on for any liability, or would liability be in the event that the Springfield bank should be swamped by this?

Mr. WINGO. Oh, certainly, that is true; they could not be liable except for failure.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. BEE. Would it be the only way in which the other banks would be drawn into a liability?

Mr. WINGO. As a primary proposition they are liable now as long as the bank at Springfield is solvent. As long as the bank pays the coupons they could be forwarded to the Springfield bank for payment. I call attention to this. There are two reasons for the attaching of this to the Springfield, Mass., bank. One is that it is nearer to the port which does business with Porto Rico and the other is the Springfield Federal land bank is not a profitable bank. It is being run at a loss right now, and you propose to put some more uncertain business on that bank that is already in a nonprofitable position.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not practically true that when the Springfield Bank goes into this new territory, it will make a high profit with no risk?

Mr. WINGO. Let me answer this, following to a conclusion the gentleman's logic. Take a bank that is about to fail. The cashier tells the board of directors that it is about to fail, that it is not making money; and suppose the board of directors would say, "All right, go out and make some more weak loans"——

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman does not mean to indicate that the bank is about to fail, because they are gaining every day?

Mr. WINGO. I do not say that; but it is not making money. I think it will not fail unless you load this business on it, and I am afraid this might break it. Certainly it is in worse shape to stand up under the load on it of this new business than a bank that is making money, and that bank, I think, is running now at a loss.

Mr. PADGETT. It is behind about $20,000, I think.

Mr. WINGO. More, I think.

Mr. BEE. Is there any sanctity about the Springfield Bank that makes it necessary that this bill should not be amended so as to tie the Porto Rico bank up to a strong and established institution rather than the weakest?

Mr. WINGO. I am opposed to tying it to any. I do not think it is fair to the Springfield bank. If you should undertake to tie this up to the St. Louis bank in my district, I should object. This Springfield bank has already a deficit, and now you propose to put on it this business which every man in this House knows is purely exeprimental. When private enterprise says that small loans in Porto Rico are risky you now propose to tie this business up to a bank that is not making a profit.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is the Springfield bank asking for this legislation?

Mr. WINGO. I do not know. I think the people of Porto Rico are asking for it.

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. UPSHAW. Is it not true that the main consideration before the House on this bill is not the condition of the Springfield bank, but to the island of Porto Rico, and that this Government should have every desire that the people of that island should succeed? And is it not further true that the fact that Porto Rico is a dependency makes something of pathos in the appeal? And does not the gentleman believe that it would produce a splendid spirit of good fellowship and gratitude on the part of Porto Rico to give it what it now needs and then be brave enough to say, "You act as a government"?

Mr. WINGO. Well, the gentleman is an idealist, and I sympathize with what he says, but I am not willing to tie this business up with the Georgia farm-loan system. I stated in my opening remarks, if the gentleman was here to hear me, I am in sympathy with Porto Rico and want to do something. I am willing to give Porto Rico a farm-loan bank, but my only objection is that you are tying them up to the banks of Georgia, making the farmers of that Commonwealth liable, and I know the farmers of Georgia are not in favor of that legislation, and he will find that they are not so idealistic as he is on that point.

Mr. DAVILA. I want to state to the gentleman that during the great emergency of the war the people of Porto Rico were ready to help the United States. They sacrificed their lives, their money, everything they had. There is not a country more devoted and friendly to the people of the United States than the people of Porto Rico. We have not been selfish with our lives. Are you going to be selfish with your money? No people have been more patriotic or loyal than the people of Porto Rico, and I think that the gentleman realizes this.

Mr. WINGO. The trouble with the gentleman from Porto Rico is that he thinks to use horse sense is selfishness; but I hope the gentleman has not inferred from anything I have said that I question the loyalty and the patriotism of the people of Porto Rico, and I hope he has not inferred from anything I have said that I am unfriendly to Porto Rico. I think, and I repeated the statement time and time again, that I am willing to go into the Treasury of the United States and take a specific sum, so as to know what the liability is in order to subsidize a land bank for them. I have tried to make it plain that I would go that far; but what I objected to is the plan of tying on and making the farmers of the United States liable under such a proposition as is proposed here. And I am willing to go the limit, becaue I do feel there is some extraordinary obligation to the people of Porto Rico and the Virgin Islands and these other people, but I am opposed to this plan of making the farmers of the United States liable for an experimental operation in Porto Rico.

That is the point I am trying to make. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman said he would be willing to establish a special bank for Porto Rico. Does the gentleman mean it would be a part of our system in any way?

Mr. WINGO. No; separate and independent, the land banks in the United States not being liable for any of its debts or any of its bonds. Let it stand on its own feet, with its own board of directors and its own bonds. Give them the benefit of mobilizing these farmers' securities down at Porto Rico. Give them the experience and the organization of our Farm Loan Board. Give them the benefit of capitalization out of the United States Treasury. When we have done that, I think we can take care of them and meet their needs without jeopardizing our own farm-loan bonds.

Mr. DAVILA. I want to say to the gentleman from Arkansas that the Legislature of Porto Rico approved a bill creating a people's bank in Porto Rico, but this bill was vetoed by the governor, a man appointed by the President of the United States. If you grant to the people of the island full self-government powers, with a governor elected by the people, I assure you that we will not come any more to the Congress of the United States asking for help.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has not heard me opposing their having absolute independence. If I had my way I would give them their absolute independence to-morrow, and in addition I would be charitable and try to protect you, because you are our neighbor and your people under the law are citizens of this country.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I just wanted to direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that he did not intend, although it might be construed as an intimation, that the Springfield bank was badly managed.

Mr. WINGO. I made no such assertion as that, and hope I have not said anything that even intimated such a fact.

Mr. STEVENSON. And that it was in a precarious condition. The gentleman, I know, understands it is simply because it has not written enough of business on its own books for the 1 per cent which it has to make in order to begin to pay all expenses, but there is nothing insolvent about it. It has simply got to go on like life insurance companies, until it gets enough business on its books so that it can have 1 per cent in order to go ahead.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the most careful examination has been made with regard to this legislation. The matter was presented first to the governor of Porto Rico, who is, as you know, an American citizen. By him it was very strongly recommended. The matter was then referred to the Insular Affairs Bureau, which has immediate oversight of our insular possessions. The bureau made a most careful investigation regarding the matter and gave the legislation its enthusiastic approval. An investigation was then made by the Committee on Insular Affairs, of which I am the chairman. We became convinced, those of us who investigated the matter, that the legislation ought to be enacted. Then followed an investigation by the Federal Farm Loan Board. It likewise made a most careful investigation regarding the proposition. And they have likewise approved of this legislation. They themselves formulated the bill which was presented to the committee. The matter was then investigated by the Committee on Banking and Currency. That committee also reported this bill practically unanimously. There was some opposition, as you know.

The objections that have been made, I think, can be entirely and, I hope, satisfactorily, answered. It is suggested, in the first place, that it is unsafe for us to embark in this legislation, because all the banks of the United States and their stockholders would be liable for the loans made. Of course, that is a very remote possibility. In the first place, the Springfield bank is the bank to which these applications must be directly made.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me just now. If he will wait, I will be glad to yield.

The Springfield bank was selected as the bank to which applications should be made for two reasons. In the first place, because of the fact that it would not entail upon the United States and upon the borrowers from the Farm Loan Association any additional expense. All of the expenses, except those directly incurred with regard to making the loans, will be paid by the Porto Ricans themselves, who become borrowers under the operations of this act. In the next place, we do not leave to a local regional bank, if one should have been established in Porto Rico, the approval of the loans to be made. We guard these loans by saying that they must be approved by an American regional bank. The American regional bank can not make any of these loans without sending their appraisers to pass upon the character of the applicant, to make a personal examination with regard to the condition of the property and the amount of the security and the condition of the title. All of those things are guarded. So it would seem as if we were carefully guarding against any loss that might occur, even more carefully guarding against any possible loss that might occur than we do with regard to our own banks in the United States. It is objected also that the condition of the Springfield bank, it being the weakest, as the gentlemen say, of the banks of the United States, would be possibly unable to carry the loans. The condition of the Springfield bank is just as prosperous as that of any other bank in the United States which has its operations compared with the Springfield bank. As was suggested by one gentleman here a short time ago, none of these farm-loan banks have become self-supporting until enough borrowers were secured to make them self-supporting. In Massachusetts and in New England the people have been slow to make applications for farm loans. That is the only reason why the Springfield bank is more backward than the others. That is the only reason why it is not now self-supporting. When it secures sufficient loans it will become self-supporting.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? It was on that point that I wanted to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Do you think if this bill is passed it will be of enough help to the Springfield bank to enable it to go ahead and make some money? Is that one of the reasons for this?

Mr. TOWNER. No. It will undoubtedly help the Springfield bank, but the Springfield bank will be amply able to take care of itself without Porto Rico. But Porto Rico will help.

Mr. LITTLE. But it is really as much help to the bank as to the Porto Ricans?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly; so far as the mere monetary questions are concerned. So that these objections after all, it seems to me, gentlemen, are not very serious or very material.

Now, let us examine why this legislation should be enacted. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] stated that he wanted to be friendly to Porto Rico because it was our next-door neighbor. Let me say to the gentleman from Arkansas that Porto Rico is not our next-door neighbor; it is not a neighbor of any kind. It is an integral part of the United States of America. [Applause.] And every man, woman, and child in Porto Rico to-day is an American citizen. We owe to them just as much obligation as we do to our own citizens; nay, more, in the degree that those who need it most should certainly have the first claim on our attention, Porto Rico does need it most.

Let me say to you gentlemen that Porto Rico 20 years ago was probably the poorest country in all the world. It is poor yet, and whatever progress has been made, almost all the property that has been acquired, has been acquired under the American flag during those 20 years. Under Spain Porto Rico was milked dry. They kept the people of the island so low in the scale of economic prosperity that it could hardly be said that anybody could under any circumstances make anything more than a bare living.

That was Porto Rico when she came under the United States. Since the time of the American occupancy Porto Rico has prospered wonderfully, but she is yet poor, and especially economically poor. Gentlemen say, "Let them establish their own banks in Porto Rico."

Why, gentlemen, with a population of 1,200,000, the densest population of any of the American States or any of the American possessions, there is in Porto Rico to-day only $4,000,000 of money in circulation. It has no provision by which men can borrow money on mortgage. The banks there do not loan money on mortgage. They do only a commercial business. Those in the island who desire to secure loans are compelled to do so at exorbitant rates, because of the fact that almost their only chance of securing money on even real estate security is from the local merchants, and the local merchants charge them from 10 to 12 per cent. The local merchant advances them money from year to year because of the fact that they can not get money in any other way.

And yet, gentlemen, these men are a land-loving and a home-loving people. There is, I believe, a greater proportion of landholders in Porto Rico than in any other of our outlying possessions.

Let me tell you about conditions with respect to land as they exist down there. The land is divided, according to the census of 1910, into 58,371 properties. The mean size of these properties is 38 acres. The average in the United States is 139 acres; and of the 58,371 properties there are 46,000 cultivated by their owners.

Now, what are the conditions that exist in Porto Rico? There is all manner and range of landholding and of operations, from the small landholder who owns only 5 acres up to the large landholders, mostly nonresidents, who own the sugar plantations, who have acquired many thousands of acres. It is not to help the sugar planters that this legislation is contemplated. It is to help the small landowners. They are mostly engaged in raising three varieties of crops. In the first place, coffee is one of their principal productions. The small landowner, with 5, 10, or 20 acres of land, may raise coffee and sell it, and may become reasonably prosperous, if he can ever get out of debt and out of the hands of the men who are now demanding from him 12 and even 18 and 24 per cent interest. Yet, gentlemen, in spite of this handicap the small landholders own land that has been in their possession and in the possession of their ancestors, some of them for more than 150 years. They are loath to give up their land. They love their home, even if it is just a little 5-acre tract up on the side of the mountain with a little shack for a home. They want a chance to improve it. They want a chance to have better homes. They want a chance to get out from under the grasp of the money lenders who are now preying upon them. A great many people think the Porto Rican coffee is the best that is raised in all the world. Then they raise a very high grade of tobacco there. There are many small tobacco plantations scattered over the island.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. May I have a little more time?

Mr. PLATT. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. TOWNER. These tobacco growers are in the hands of the Tobacco Trust to-day. Their prices are fixed by the Tobacco Trust. Money is loaned to them on their crops, and sales must be made to the men who control the prices, because they have made the loans to these tobacco growers.

Then there are the fruit growers. Almost every kind of tropical fruit is raised in Porto Rico—pineapples, bananas, oranges, lemons. Almost all kinds of tropical fruit can be raised easily upon these islands. This legislation is to help these men as well.

The men engaged in these occupations are landowners living upon their land and desiring always to live upon it.

Titles to the land in the island are absolutely secure. They have one of the best systems in the world of securing titles in Porto Rico. No transfer of land can be made except by a government official, who certifies the title, which makes it absolutely secure.

All these things are to be taken into consideration. I do not think it is possible for gentlemen to imagine any greater need for this legislation or any greater security for it. Why should we not give them the benefit of the extension of this act?

I want to say this to the gentlemen of the committee, that I believe you could do no one thing that would help these more than a million people in Porto Rico, 75 per cent of whom are white people capable of making as good citizenship as we have anywhere under the American flag. These people all now look to the United States not for charity but for such help as should be given by any government on earth to its own citizenship. If we refuse it, what will they think with regard to the United States? They will think they are not regarded as citizens of the United States. They will think they are not entitled to the sympathy, love, and affection of the American people, although they have shown every possible devotion to the United States. These men will be led to believe that they are ignored and that we do not care what becomes of them. The very fact that we extend our aid to them under certain restrictions of safety will lead them to believe that we in fact do care for them, do regard them as a part of the citizenry of this great Republic.

So I believe upon every ground of safety and of expediency, and especially of obligation to our own citizens, this legislation should be enacted. [Applause.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; I will be glad to.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is there any intention to enact legislation in favor of the citizens of Porto Rico that will be of greater advantage to them than that enjoyed by our own farmers under our own farm-loan act?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly not.

Mr. McKEOWN. I notice that there is a provision under which they do not need to form these associations.

Mr. TOWNER. It is true they do not have to form the associations.

Mr. McKEOWN. Why not?

Mr. TOWNER. But they are compelled to make the same contribution as a guaranty to the safety of the loan that is made by people in the United States. It is only for the purpose of having these matters passed upon in the United States and not by the local association—another guaranty of the safety of the act.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has 22 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Arkansas 27 minutes remaining.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WALSH). The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there was placed upon the desks of all Members of Congress within the past two or three days the issue of the bulletin of the Atlantic Deep Waterways Association for the month of March. Ordinarily I think it is not of sufficient importance to answer a newspaper article to ask for time on this floor. But this bulletin contains an article on the river and harbor bill which passed this House in January. The bill is now pending before the Senate Committee on Commerce. A determined effort is being made to change the result attained in this House, and I believe that one of the incidents of that effort is the article which appears in this bulletin. It is for that reason I desire to answer it, and because the writer has a total misconception of how the bill was passed by the House and of the effect of its provisions.

In the first place, the article assumes that the bill was passed in the House as the result wholly of pressure from the management on the Republican side. In other words, that it was the result of pressure by the steering committee. The article itself refutes that charge, because it says that the bill passed this House by a vote of 167 to 35, nearly 5 to 1. An examination of the RECORD will show that that vote was fairly well divided between the two sides of the House. While more votes came from the Republican than from the Democratic side, it was by no means a partisan vote, and it was not a partisan measure. And no such overwhelming majority, coming from both sides of the House, could have been secured by pressure from the Republican steering committee or in any way except through the belief of the Members that the bill was a good one. So, as I say, the article contains on its face a refutation of the charge that the bill was reported and passed in the form in which it left the House as the result of pressure from the steering committee. Next, the article asserts that the measure was presented to the House without opportunity for a reasonable consideration of it and that all the Members were not present who could have been and would have been present if there had been enough time for them to get together. What is the fact? The fact is there were 17 members of the committee present at the session when we voted on the measure—17 out of 21, a remarkably large attendance for a committee meeting.

The next fact is that the committee voted 16 to 1 to report the measure as it came before this House—almost unanimously. Surely the Republican steering committee could not and did not compel or even influence the Democrats on the committee to join with the Republicans in a favorable report on the bill. So the charge of undue pressure on the part of the Republican steering committee disappears, and it is a fact that no such pressure was even attempted.

The next question is, What do they criticize as the result of the passage of the bill? They criticize certain specific items. Let us see what the items are. First, they say the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] introduced a substitute, and they give the substitute which he offered, which embraces some 54 projects, and those 54 projects were to have appropriated for them certain specified sums.

I will present to the House a list of the projects, showing the amount on hand to the credit of each project, the amount which was expended in 1919 upon each of them, and the average annual expenditure for each of them for the last five years.

You will find on examining this list that we have on hand to the credit of each of these projects in practically every case, without any additional appropriation, as large an amount as we have expended on them annually on the average during the last five years.

The article says nothing about the substitute which was introduced by the Member from North Carolina, but they leave the inference to be drawn that it would have been to the interest of the country for the House to have adopted this substitute without making any claim whatever in respect to it. I leave you to judge of this on consideration of the facts shown by the table to which I have referred, but I think you can reach no conclusion but that the House acted wisely in defeating the substitute. Then the article takes up specific items. I shall go through the items and I hope to show that the charges as to them are without any foundation.

The writer says that four or five projects which he enumerates will be without adequate funds; that they can not be completed within the estimated time; and that money will be lost because of the delay. Let us see whether any of these charges are true. Take the East River, the first item specified. We have on hand practically $5,000,000. We spent last year only $234,000, and we can not spend the money on hand in the next two years if we do the work with the utmost expedition and use every agency possible with which to proceed with the work. So that so far as East River is concerned there is absolutely nothing to the charge.

The next item is the Delaware River. There is on hand to the credit of the Delaware River project $1,000,000, and that is as much as we have spent, yearly, on the average for the last five years, and more than we spent last year.

The article says that the work on the Beaufort, N. C., canal will also lag for same reason. What is the fact in respect to that canal? They have $910,295 on hand, and it was not even suggested before the committee that they should be granted any additional sum.

The writer next refers to the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal, and says that is another project which will suffer. The Government took over that canal, and when it paid the purchase price it had $480,000 left. That is an abundant sum with which to do all of the work that can be done with proper economy in the coming year.

The bulletin also claims that the improvement of the Schuylkill River will suffer from the appropriation being too small. I have not the figures before me and speak from recollection, but, as I recall, this project has $300,000 or $350,000 to its credit and the engineers asked for an additional $50,000.

The article says further that certain other projects on the eastern coast, without specifying them, will also be retarded in the progress of their work because of insufficient appropriations. Of course, it is impossible to answer an indefinite charge like that; you would have to take all the projects and refer to each of them separately; you do not know which ones they mean. It must be remembered, too, that the projects named by this writer will share in the distribution of the $12,000,000 appropriated by the bill in addition to the amounts to their separate credits.

It seems plain that this article was written by some one who did not know the facts, and who, in ignorance of them, thought that the amount of the appropriation should be increased. I assume that there was no malice in the article, no intention to misrepresent, nothing but error as to the facts; but the bill passed the House, after the most careful consideration, by an overwhelming majority, and a plain statement of the facts will, I feel sure, convince the public and the writer of this article as well that the House acted wisely. We have given the waterways all that they need for commercial purposes. They have $60,000,000 of unexpended balances on hand to-day, and we have given them $12,000,000 more. We have given them abundant funds, not only full measure but overflowing, and there is not the slightest reason why anyone should complain. I have a very great sympathy with the project for deeper Atlantic waterways. I have always been in favor of it. During the time that the Hon. J. Hampton Moore was here as a Member of Congress he championed the cause of deeper waterways, eloquently and well. A great majority of us agreed with him, and I agree with him to-day; but I do think that such articles as this should not be inserted in this publication at this time, calculated, if not intended, to influence the action of another House upon a measure which this House disposed of in the way I state. [Applause.]

The table to which I referred respecting the amounts of money on hand and the sums heretofore expended on the projects described in Mr. SMALL's amendment is as follows:

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Arkansas use some of his time now.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest that we would better rise.

Mr. PLATT. I would like to finish the bill to-night if possible.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, the gentleman can not finish the bill to-night.

Mr. PLATT. I have only 12 minutes remaining. I do not know how much time the gentleman has.

Mr. WINGO. I have 27 minutes left, and there are some amendments to the bill. It will take an hour or an hour and a half to finish the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8038, to amend the Federal farm-loan act, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter to a constituent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter to a constituent. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the topic of the letter?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Concerning the work of the Congress, and some observations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I would like the gentleman to state upon what subject the letter is. Is it just the general work of Congress?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11578, the Post Office appropriation bill, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take the Post Office appropriation bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to all of the Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state whether they made any provision in that bill to take care of the rural-mail carriers who have to travel through congested territory such as the oil fields and other places, giving the Post Office Department any discretion in the matter of arranging their salaries?

Mr. STEENERSON. We had a provision for unusual conditions, and I notice the Senate amendment seems to enlarge it considerably. I have not had time to examine it.

Mr. PARRISH. I shall not object, but I hope that they will make some provision to take care of that situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] asks unanimous consent to disagree to all the Senate amendments on the Post Office appropriation bill and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. STEENERSON, Mr. MADDEN, Mr. GRIEST, Mr. MOON, and Mr. ROUSE.

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR TO-MORROW.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] withhold for a moment?

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. WALSH. I wanted to ask the Speaker if any arrangement had been made in the House to-day relative to taking up the Private Calendar to-morrow for the consideration of unobjected bills?

The SPEAKER. There is not. No such arrangement has yet been made.

Mr. WALSH. I understood from the majority leader, who has been detained, that that was the intention, and while I do not feel that I have authority to make the request, I would like to ask the Speaker if he knew that that was the case?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the request was to be made.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow it may be in order to consider bills upon the Private Calendar, taking up the bills that are not objected to at the point at which the House left off consideration of the Private Calendar when it was last considered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I presume, Mr. Speaker, that that will be under the same limitations as we had the other day?

Mr. MONDELL. Only those bills not objected to.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, we will just continue our consideration of the other day, under the same limitation?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the distinguished majority leader whether or not they have run out of something more important to do?

Mr. MONDELL. This is quite important. Gentlemen on both sides have bills on the calendar which they think ought to be considered, and we got only about halfway through the calendar the other day.

Mr. BLANTON. Are we still led to believe that we may have hopes of getting through by June 5?

Mr. MONDELL. I still entertain that hope.

Mr. GARD. Further reserving the right to object, is it the purpose to begin on the calendar where we stopped on the last Private Calendar day?

Mr. MONDELL. That was my request.

Mr. GARD. And go through the calendar and then stop, not returning over the same ground?

Mr. MONDELL. I believe the House could return to unobjected bills, but the request is that only bills not objected to, beginning at the point where the House left off. I have not an idea that we would get through with all the bills on the calendar during the day. As far as I am concerned, if the gentleman prefers to have it that way, I am perfectly well satisfied we shall go on through the calendar and not return.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I want to know is when you are going to have a day here to consider these bills that some gentleman will hop up and object to?

Mr. MONDELL. My hope is that before long we may take up the Private Calendar in the regular way.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman modify his request so that the bills will only be those bills succeeding the point where we stopped the last time?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection to doing that.

Mr. WALSH. That is not necessary, because that is all that could be done anyhow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COTTON IN STORAGE.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the report of the Director of the Census, Mr. Rogers, in answer to a resolution which I introduced some time last week to ascertain as near as may be the number of bales of cotton in a class that is not suitable in the ordinary sense of spinnable cotton. The chambers of commerce, exchanges, and boards of trade have been reporting the stocks at concentrating points and public-storage warehouses, and it was complained by the different organizations throughout the country interested in cotton, as well as by the spinners, that they had no way of ascertaining what is the real stock of spinnable cotton. In this report the Director of the Census makes this significant statement:

In this connection, your attention is called to the fact that the linter statistics—

The linters being the fine fiber that is taken off the seed after the cotton itself has been ginned—are not included with those of cotton in the census figures, although they are combined in the statistics compiled and promulgated by the cotton exchanges and other commercial organizations.

Further, he says:

In reply I have to advise that the Bureau of the Census collects information each month as to the number of bales of linters held in public storage. The number of bales of this fiber held in public storage and at compresses on February 29, 1920, was 370,712 bales. On the same date there were 281,326 bales returned as held in consuming establishments and 290,126 bales in cottonseed-oil mills. This makes a total of 942,164 bales held in these three classes of establishments on February 29, 1920.

In addition to this, he says that the Government is holding about 250,000 bales of linters. This would make over 1,000,000 bales of linters that are reported as stock by the exchanges and commercial bodies.

Now, as to the other forms of unspinnable cotton the Director of the Census says:

No data have been collected by the Bureau of the Census as to the number of bales of unspinnable gin cut, water packed, and perished fiber cotton held in the United States.

In compliance with the resolution, however, inquiries have been mailed for the reports of cotton of this character held on March 31. There are more than 3,000 places where cotton is held for the public, and it will require some time to secure the data from all of these establishments, but we hope to compile the data and furnish the Senate with the information about the middle of April.

The point I wish to emphasize is the fact that Mr. Hester reports about 4,000,000 bales of cotton as being the visible supply of American cotton in the world. Subtracting the one million and a quarter bales of linters, and then considering the subtraction which will be made when the perished fiber and other unspinnable grades have been ascertained by the Census Bureau, the probabilities are that we shall begin April with the lowest supply of cotton ever known in the history of the world. Nothing short of a cotton famine, which would be a disaster, confronts the whole world which is using cotton fiber, and it is to the interest of the public that this work be prosecuted so that the trade at large may know what the supply of raw cotton is. In my opinion it is one and a half million bales short of the estimates which are now promulgated by virtue of the fact that we are counting linters and the other unspinnable grades as stocks carried over.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President, in line with the remarks which have been made by the Senator from South Carolina, I have here an important document, which is being printed in New Orleans and sent out to camouflage the issue. I ask unanimous consent to have the document read by the Secretary, and then I desire to make some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

[Extract from the Cotton Boll, published by Norman Mayer & Co., cotton commission merchants, New Orleans, La.]

DESTRUCTIVE LEGISLATION.

Toward the end of the week the cotton market has been unsettled by news from Washington to the effect that Senator COMER, of Alabama, has introduced a very drastic amendment to the United States cotton futures act affecting deliveries on contract. Evidently few of the Senators from the cotton-growing States realized the full purpose and extent of this amendment, or otherwise it would have met with strong opposition and would not have been passed by the Senate. Instead of a buyers' and sellers' contract, such as the original cotton futures act provides, the Comer amendment, if it becomes a part of the act, would make the contract now being traded in on the New Orleans and New York Cotton Exchanges strictly a spinners' contract. Senator COMER being largely interested in mills in Alabama, the motive for such legislation as he has succeeded in slipping through the Senate is very plain.

By the terms of his amendment the seller of a contract, when called upon to make delivery of the actual cotton to a buyer, must deliver 50 per cent of the cotton called for in the contract in grades of at least middling and above. The other half he can deliver in any of the 10 grades tenderable on contract under the present law. In other words, the spinner on such a contract would receive middling and above on 50 per cent of the cotton to be delivered.

Hedge interests, on the other hand, who use the contract as a protection against purchases of spots from the producers, would find themselves in a position of being forced to deliver better grades on contracts than they are able to buy on an average. Under present conditions the contract is already strict enough, as shown by the recent upheaval in the New York market on the March position, and the effect of the Comer amendment would simply be to destroy the usefulness of the contract for hedging purposes. No sane speculator would hardly care to take the chances of selling such a contract, and the result would be a market with plenty of buyers but few, if any, sellers.

WHAT EXPERIENCE TEACHES.

When the cotton exchanges closed in 1914, the year the European war broke out, and there was no contract market to provide hedging facilities, every farmer in the South knows what happened to the spot market. For weeks there was no market at all for cotton, and the producers found themselves at the mercy of British spinners and large northern interests, which gobbled up cotton many cents below the actual cost of production. The mills, foreign and domestic, had a picnic that year at the expense of the southern grower, and it was not until the exchanges reopened and future trading was resumed that cotton began the upward flight that has continued until middling cotton in this market has recently sold as high as 41 cents. If the Comer amendment finally passes both branches of Congress, demoralized conditions will again prevail in the contract market and the interests of southern growers will again be endangered.

This is probably the real intent of the Comer amendment, and all cotton-growing interests should unite in opposing any such pernicious legislation. The outlet for low grades is already so narrow that a large percentage of the cotton of the present crop can not be marketed. The tendency on the part of exporters and spot dealers is to buy only cotton that can be hedged, and even under the present contract nothing below low middling white can be hedged in the future market.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President, I have here an article which appeared in the Manufacturers' Record, which I ask unanimous consent may be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

COTTON, A NATIONAL PRODUCT, SHOULD HAVE NATIONAL RECOGNITION—SECTIONALISM EVEN IN BUSINESS SHOULD BE BURIED AND ALL SECTIONS BE NATIONAL IN SPIRIT.

[By B. B. COMER, president of Avondale Cotton Mills, formerly governor of Alabama.]

Cotton growing is sectional. Its use, like sunlight, reaches the farthest clime. The world demands it, and, like sunlight, the world demands it cheap. Cotton, fabulous in its beneficences, a depressant, a curse only to the section which produces it. Cotton brought the slaves from the East to the South at a price that was productive of internecine strife and civil war.

The invention of the cotton gin converted Daniel Webster from a free trader into a tariff advocate and changed John C. Calhoun from a tariff advocate into a free trader.

Cotton helped make New England a great manufacturing center; made New England the Government's ward in tariff protection; made New England rich.

Cotton made the South the defenders of slavery, the derelicts of agriculture, the victims of a vindictive peace, and consigned them to a sectional prejudice in the country's Government. The unnatural demand that cotton should be grown cheap and sold cheap placed the South in everlasting defense of its life product and in the fatal position of organizing within the Government an ex parte government for its own protection. All these things have made the South poor, not rich.

That the South is poor, the poorest section in the United States, is evidenced by the tax assessments of the Government in the calls for the Liberty loans, Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., and other Government demands on the loyalty and ability of the people. The South was assessed the least not because they were the least loyal, but because they had the least money. The section which has made the most out of cotton, more out of it than the growers—New England—was assessed more not because they were more loyal, but because they had more property.

New England fights the price of cotton. In 1914—war just declared, a big cotton crop coming in, export demand shut off—it was evident that unless stabilized the price of cotton would go to pieces and that there would be widespread loss and suffering to the cotton grower. The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, called a meeting in Washington to see what could be done. The writer was present, and, when recognized by the chairman, stated—first calling to the attention of the Secretary that the year before, when the corn, meat, wheat, and cotton crops were about to be placed on the market, there was wide suggestion of a money panic because there would not be money enough to finance the crop—that Mr. McAdoo, in an interview, declared that the United States had $500,000,000, or any other millions, that might be necessary, and there was no panic. Continuing to speak, I suggested to Mr. McAdoo that with the war on, the export demands stopped, the cotton crop coming in, prices going to pieces, if he would say to the reserve banks that he would recognize loans at 8 cents a pound on middling cotton, although 8 cents was far below the cost of producing cotton, it would immediately stabilize cotton at this price and that this price would take care of the pressing wants of the farmer; that the manufacturer could use it, the trade would take the goods, and there would be no irreparable loss to the cotton section.

A gentleman from Fall River, Mass., attending the meeting, getting recognition, objected to the proposition that the Government should help to stabilize the value of cotton at 8 cents, stating that the manufacturers were going to have an opportunity to buy cotton cheap, and that the price should be at supply and demand; and yet the gentleman was from the home of the Home Market Club, the section which had received the greatest benefits from the tariff. Cotton went to 5 cents a pound, and there was incalculable loss and suffering.

Great fluctuations in the price of cotton is to the worst interest of the manufacturer. The manufacturers do not benefit from erratic values in raw material; they want stabilized values; regular values. A price which kills the producer does not help the manufacturer. The hyperbolic vaulting in the cotton exchanges, made possible by the rendition of the Smith-Lever bill in the Secretary of Agriculture's office, resulted in hardships not only to the cotton grower but also to the cotton manufacturer. It is downright irreligious that cotton should be made the Armenian, or the unspeakable Turk, in the political economy of the land. Cotton should not be subjected to a sectional defense, but should have a national defense, ah, an international defense!

The labor producing cotton is paid the lowest scale of any class of labor in the United States. If the war labor boards had fixed the price of cotton-field laborers at anything like the equivalent of any other labor, the cost of cotton would have gone darjeeling. A picture of the cotton-field laborers getting regularly $1.50, $2, $3, $4, not to say $5, and working eight hours a day, has never been drawn, neither has the price of cotton, based on a fair price for labor, ever been estimated, and the Congressman or labor agitator who would suggest that such a thing as right be done would be put in an iron cage and carried around to show as the wild man from Borneo.

I have planted cotton for 50 years, was born and raised on a cotton plantation. The elements which enter into the production and cost of cotton are so varied, depending upon soil, season, insect enemies, character of fertilizer, and cultivation, that stated cost value is impossible and estimated profits a vagary. That the profits in cotton raising are the lowest of any other agricultural product or any industrial proposition, and that the cotton producer's life is less desirable and ideal is evident. Cotton lands are the least sought after; the price is the cheapest. There is no immigration into the cotton lands, and there is emigration from the cotton lands. The poor whites, and also the poor darkeys, in the South are made so by the poor results of cotton planting, and not because inherently in the climate or class are the qualities which bring these results. No country can be prosperous when it takes a crop failure to produce a fair price for its product.

In the last national election the principal arguments were anti-South, stressing particularly that the southern Congressmen voted for the price fixing of wheat, but would not allow the price fixed on cotton. The argument found fallow soil, and it looks like we will again have a sectional, prejudiced Congress.

The cotton farmers, witnessing extravagant high prices on everything else, and remembering conditions which had been theirs from boll weevil, from drought, from short crops, and from the first year of the war, believing that the incoming crop was short and would be high, and desiring to share in the general great prosperity, clamored for the supply and demand prices. The cotton representatives in consequence refused to stand as a national party and committed the mistake of voting for stabilizing other farm products and refusing to fix the price of cotton.

In my opinion, the fight made against the stabilizing or fixing the price of cotton was wrong. The South should have trusted the Government. Whatever was right and useful for the Government in carrying on the war, whether affecting cattle or hogs, wheat or corn, wool or cotton, the prices should have been fixed and all products should have been used by the Government in one vast aggregate, used as they saw best. It was not a time for sectionalism in agricultural, industrial, or other commodities. In fact there is no time for sectionalism. Every part of the United States suffers from sectionalism. Every man and every product of every State, everywhere, should be to the Government like the stars and stripes in our flag and the defenders of which should be like the component parts of the Rainbow Division, not a question of what State or section from, the only question, "What do you want done, Gen. Pershing?" It was the Rainbow spirit, the American spirit, which whipped the Kaiser.

Our policy, at least commencing now, after the settlement of the greatest war the world ever saw, a war in which one nation proponing to itself the best culture, the highest superiority to every country and to everything, has been dragged to the dust; the Entente, proposing democracy, equality, that every man should sit under his own vine and fig tree, and have it just like every other man, everywhere—this has won.

Mr. Editor, we are too far from Webster and Calhoun, too far away from Grant and Lee to appreciate the thunders of sectionalism. Nationalism should be the demand of the hour and of the country everywhere. Americans should feel that the cotton crop was theirs, and should help the cotton South produce cotton, should help the cotton South get a fair price for cotton.

Again, cotton carries the greatest beneficences. Americans should see to it that the poorest of their fellow citizens should not continue to be called upon to make it a benevolence.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President, the article which has been read at the desk is an article which has been sent out from the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, and it makes some very grave charges against the amendment which has been submitted by me. In the first place, it says the amendment was "slipped in." I desire to say in reply that the amendment was read the day before it was formally offered, was ordered to be printed, and to lie on the table so that every Senator might see it. The amendment was discussed for quite a while. However, this article further charges me with being a spinner, and that the amendment is offered for selfish purposes. All the amendment attempts to do is to make the exchange market conform to the commercial market, and when that is done you hurt gambling and help everything except gambling. I take it, Mr. President, that it is not the desire here to help that class.

The statement also is made that the amendment injures the hedging sales of cotton; that is, a man can not safely sell the market. Of course, he can sell the market; it is only required that he must deliver at least half of the better grades. If a miller were to buy 10,000 bushels of wheat and you could deliver him any grade from No. 3 down, how would you feel if he should come before Congress and demand that he should have the right to have No. 3 and above for at least half of it. That is what the amendment referred to means. It means that in selling a contract you must deliver half of it of middling and above, embracing five grades, and you may have that right for the other half to deliver the other grades. It is to provide a buyer's and seller's contract. Now, it is a seller's contract entirely. The seller has from the 24th of the preceding month to the 25th of the current month in which to deliver the conglomerate grades at a high price. Of course, that is not for the best. The New Orleans Exchange article charged that the proposed amendment has disorganized the market. Since February 20 May cotton has advanced 5½ cents per pound, $27.50 per bale; July cotton has advanced 4½ cents, $22.50 per bale. Even a threat of this has advanced May cotton 5½ cents a pound, which is $27.50 a bale; it has advanced July cotton $32.50 a bale. Senators may examine the market reports for themselves and ascertain that fact. To-day May cotton is 39½ cents; just a few weeks ago it was, as I recall, 33 cents. This is the effect of the disorganization. We want a contract the commercial value of which shall be the same as the commercial value of cotton, and it is right that there should be such a contract; it is right to know in part what you are going to get in the way of deliveries, and this will help take care of the market and can not possibly hurt legitimate contracts.

We have laws governing the sale of patent medicines. A patent medicine may not be sold without stating what are its contents. Certainly we ought to have a law which is equivalent, so far as the sale of cotton is concerned, so that the purchaser will know what he is getting.

The further statement is made that the exchanges saved the price of cotton and consequently the producers and dealers in the war panic of 1914. In 1914 every exchange shut its doors; even the stock exchange shut its doors. That was done for self-protection, and it was right to do it. I do not question that at all.

By the way, I ought to say that we have no fight against the exchange; we want the exchange; it is the methods of the exchange we are fighting; that is all, particularly the gambling feature of it.

Prior to 1890 the exchanges had to deliver cotton at the commercial price. That was right; they ought to do that now. All cotton was delivered at the commercial price. If that were done now, there would be no trouble whatever; but after 1890 the exchange had a committee of exchange members to say what the differences in the different grades should be, and there is where the trouble began. Price differences in grades were so fixed and differences were so arranged as to suit the speculators; in other words, they reaped the benefit from the decision of what the differences should be. That was the open charge. Matters got so bad in 1906 there was a vast accumulation of low-grade cotton, of punk cotton, assembled, which was held over the market not for the purpose of making a market but for the purpose of defeating the market. That practice was continued until it became a scandal in the commercial world. There were some 60,000 or 100,000 bales of punk cotton assembled at easy exchange points, and parties holding this cotton and selling the market, ready to deliver this cotton at differences made by themselves, created fearful conditions. There was so much swindle that Congress, by legislative enactment, restricted the number of tenderable grades to 21, which resulted in the protection of the cotton spinner. Prior to this, when all the grades were tenderable, in consequence of which the market could be easily sold to pieces and it was impossible to make a reasonable contract on the exchange, Messrs. Brown, Haynes, Patton, and others formed a combination to buy all these punk grades, take them off the market, and thus realize, if possible, straight deliveries of cotton to be shipped in from the spot market to relieve the depressing influence of the punk cotton held for the purpose of depressing the market. Senators will recall how these men were indicted as being conspirators to affect the market. It was the other crowd, the crowd who were holding for speculative purposes, for purpose of unholy gain, this accumulation of punk grades on the market, who ought to have been indicted.

I confess to you that our company was one of that crowd. We bought some of that cotton and took it off the market and manufactured it. We tried to get rid of the whole thing. Then the law was enacted that you could deliver but 21 grades. But even in this it was found that the speculators could still get together for the purpose of delivery strict and low middling tinges, yellows, spotted, strict middling and middling stains, and so forth, and with these depressing the market so much—as much as 5 cents per pound in a day—that Congress passed a law restricting the variations in the market to 2 cents per pound a day. In other words, with the 21 grades they could still get together most undesirable cotton and practice various stunts on the market, accomplished by the power to deliver cotton the least desirable and the most unspinnable.

Speculators could still supply an assembly of low-grade cotton that few could use. That is what they practiced regularly on the market—instead of delivering cotton that was spinnable they delivered cotton that was unspinnable. When a dealer buys a contract of cotton he ought to have a real, genuine delivery of cotton that can be used, or if he does not or can not use it himself that he can sell. In the last contracts of 21 grades this was impossible. We took up 200 bales of cotton in New York and were given 12 different low grades on each contract, and we had that cotton in New York for three months trying to sell it, but we could find no market for it. The only thing we could do was to sell it back to the exchange and redeliver it. That is a totally unfair proposition; and this is what we are trying to avoid today. With 10 grades they can still play the market and make it a seller's market. One half middling and above and the other half at the seller's option make it both a seller's and a buyer's market, equal protection to both. It is said that it is a spinner's contract; but it is not; it is a producer's contract, because it protects the price of the cotton—protects it so that the exchange price will coordinate with the commercial price, that the price of spot cotton and the price of exchange cotton will carry the evidence that it is the same product that is under value, and that there will be no thimblerigging of values; there will be no marking of the cards, it will be an open-game proposition, in which any business man can engage; make it possible that the exchange price will be the equivalent to the spot price, so that a man any day can take up the newspapers and see what cotton is worth, and that is more than the farmers heretofore have been able to count on and is exceedingly important. A transaction by an authorized Government agent should be as clear as day and impossible of any swindling arrangement.

Certain interests are trying, as I have said, to camouflage the issue. We get this morning the message to which I have referred, copies of which are being sent to Senators. They are threatening southern Members of Congress, using all kinds of false statements regarding the effect of this amendment on the interest of the farmer and the interest of off-grade cotton.

Senators, cotton is a national product; it is of national use, and it is the duty of the Nation to stand up and defend it, and not to legislate to the interest of the speculators. It is the only agricultural product in the world where the gambler's interest is recognized by law. The measure to which reference is made does not involve the destruction of the exchange at all, but simply the destruction of the power of the gambler to attempt to say what the price shall be. I say that is entirely wrong, and I trust that the Congress will rectify that situation.

MEAT PRODUCTION.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask consent to read a telegram from the head of the live-stock department of the State of Kansas on what we regard as a very important matter:

TOPEKA, KANS., March 30.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The propaganda of the United States Department of Justice to "save money on meat" is a crime against the live-stock producers of this country—another act of our Government to penalize the live-stock producers for their response to the call for increased production during the war. Why pick on meat? It is already the cheapest food we have, and the only one which is being produced at a loss. Why does the Department of Justice not investigate the high cost of sugar, potatoes, flour, cotton, and tobacco? I urge you, in the interest of the live-stock producers of Kansas, to introduce resolution in Congress condemning this propaganda.

J. H. MERCER,
Secretary Kansas Live Stock Association.

I should like to have this telegram referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; and in that connection I want to say that Mr. Mercer undoubtedly voices the wishes of the live-stock interests of Kansas generally, and I share his view of it also. The matter complained of is in line with the policy of governmental agencies here for the last year or two—a willful disregard of the interests of the producer—and the inevitable result is decreased production. Already there are evidences out in the West of a lessened operation in the cattle industry. That is certainly a short-sighted policy, which will mean hardship for the consumer and will inevitably bring higher prices.

I hope the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry can give this memorial prompt attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegram will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

At 2 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, H. R. 12010.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12010) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion to reconsider made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word in regard to the pending motion.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I wanted the Senator to yield so that I could ask unanimous consent for a reconsideration of the vote on the amendment found on page 45. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] stated that if we had a reconsideration of it we could vote upon it, and whatever the Senate decided would be satisfactory to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment on page 45 of the bill was agreed to. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it was not my intention to make any point of order against this amendment in the event it is reconsidered by the Senate, but I hope the amendment will be reconsidered, and that on a reconsideration the amendment will be disagreed to.

I have been led to examine the provisions of the Federal farm-loan act, and I find that this amendment will repeal by implication, and also, it seems to me, by indirection, several provisions of the Federal farm-loan act. I shall occupy but a moment, and I want to call attention to those provisions.

Subsection 3 of the act provides as follows:

The salaries and expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and of farm-loan registrars and examiners authorized under this section, shall be paid by the United States. Land-bank appraisers shall receive such compensation as the Federal Farm Loan Board shall fix, and shall be paid by the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks which they serve, in such proportion and in such manner as the Federal Farm Loan Board shall order.

So it will be seen that all expenses and all salaries under the original Federal farm-loan act, except the salaries of appraisers, must be paid by the Government of the United States.

Referring now to the very broad language of this amendment, it reads:

Beginning with the fiscal year 1921, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall, as soon as possible after the close of each half of each fiscal year, levy upon the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks in proportion to their gross assets an assessment equal to the amounts expended from all appropriations on account of salaries (including any additional compensation) and expenses of the board and its appointees and employees for the half of the fiscal year then closed.

Thus, Mr. President, compelling the Federal farm-land banks themselves to pay all salaries and all expenses; so, if the committee amendment is enacted, it will repeal the provisions of the Federal farm-loan act.

Now, Mr. President, to call attention to another provision or two of the act: What is one of the powers of the Federal Farm Loan Board? Subdivision 9 of subsection 13 provides as follows:

To charge applicants for loans and borrowers, under rules and regulations promulgated by the Federal Farm Loan Board, reasonable fees not exceeding the actual cost of appraisal and determination of title. Legal fees and recording charges imposed by law in the State where the land to be mortgaged is located may also be included in the preliminary costs of negotiating mortgage loans. The borrower may pay such fees and charges, or he may arrange with the Federal land bank making the loan to advance the same, in which case said expenses shall be made a part of the face of the loan and paid off in amortization payments. Such addition to the loan shall not be permitted to increase said loan above the limitations provided in section 12.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I have only been able to hear part of the Senator's argument; but, with his permission, I should like to ask him a question. Under the farm-loan act, to which the Senator is referring, how are the expenses of inspection paid?

Mr. STERLING. They are paid by the Government of the United States, except as "inspection" may mean "appraisal." The appraisal of the land and recording fees are all that are paid by the Federal farm land banks, and of course ultimately they are paid by the borrower.

Mr. POMERENE. That was my recollection about it, but I was not entirely clear.

Mr. STERLING. Now, Mr. President, I do not believe the Congress of the United States wants to repeal these provisions of the Federal farm-loan act. This act, according to its title, was to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, and so forth. The main purpose of this act, as revealed by its consideration in the Senate of the United States, was to reduce the rate of interest and cut out commission charges on farm loans to the farmers of the country. That was the great purpose, because it was realized that for a long time farmers had been paying an exorbitant rate of interest; and to that end we made the property, except real estate but including the notes, and the mortgages taken by the farm-land banks and the bonds issued by them, free from taxation. The act provides that they shall be deemed Government instrumentalities, all to accomplish the one purpose of bringing down the rate of interest on farm loans to a reasonable rate. So, Mr. President, I think we should refuse to repeal these wholesome provisions. If we do not, we help to destroy the very purpose of the Federal farm-loan act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when I first offered the amendment it was at the request of members of the Federal Farm Loan Board. It does repeal a part of subsection 3 of the Federal farm-loan act providing for the payment of expenses as enumerated in this provision. It conforms to the law that affects the payment of expenses of the Federal Reserve Board.

The Federal farm-loan banks, Mr. President, I am told this morning, are clearing at least $2,500,000 per annum——

Mr. OVERMAN. Net?

Mr. SMOOT. Net; $2,500,000 per annum. I am very glad of it. I have no criticism whatever to offer, and I wish it were more.

My attention has been called to the fact that one of the reasons why the board recommends the passage of this law is the criticisms that have been leveled at the Federal farm-loan banks by corporations and individuals doing a banking business, dealing with the same class of customers the Federal farm-loan banks deal with, who point to this very item of expense that has been paid by the Government. In other words, Mr. President, the rate of interest is fixed by law; the Government not only furnished all of the capital to begin with but the Government pays all the expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board. It is such a small item compared with the total business that I can not see why there should be any objection to it any more than the board that directs the affairs of these banks.

Mr. President, what little expense the Government is relieved of by this amendment does not all fall on the Federal farm-loan banks. A portion is to be met by the joint-stock land banks; and I want to say that unless Senators who favor the Federal farm-loan banks support legislation that will check the extension of the joint-stock land banks and take from them some of the privileges which the Federal farm-loan bank itself has not, they are going to drive the Federal farm-loan banks out of existence.

What moral right have individual citizens in any State of the Union to organize a joint-stock land bank with the privilege of issuing bonds exempt from taxation fifteen times the amount of their capital stock? What moral right have they to loan out fifteen times the amount of their capital stock, draw as a premium 1 per cent interest per annum upon all their loans, and when the limit is reached sit down in their office and seek no further business for years and years, and make, in many cases, more profit than other bank organizations in the United States?

Are we going to relieve that class of men, doing business as owners of the joint-stock land banks, of a few paltry dollars that they would be compelled to pay under this amendment? Is there any other business whose expenses are suggested be paid by the Government of the United States?

Mr. STERLING. I would like to ask the Senator from Utah how many joint-stock land banks there are.

Mr. SMOOT. The last report I received, months ago, gave the number as 29; but I am quite sure there have been others organized since then. In fact, I am quite sure that there are over 100 applications on file now.

Mr. STERLING. Can the Senator state how many national farm land-bank associations there are?

Mr. SMOOT. The associations are not affected by this amendment at all.

Mr. STERLING. The members of the associations are affected by it. They will ultimately have to pay all the salaries and expenses which the amendment provides shall be assessed against the Federal farm-land banks.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, can a Senator stand upon the floor of the Senate and say that the Government of the United States ought to pay the running expenses of banks?

Mr. STERLING. The Government should pay all the expenses, just as is provided in the original act, except the expenses of appraisement and recording.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the only reason why there was not any objection at that time was that there were no banks established at the time, and it was necessary to have some provision to take care of the board, and that could only be done by an appropriation.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I might call the attention of the Senate to the fact that every dollar that was required to start this system came out of the Treasury of the United States. All the cash that was necessary to subscribe for the capital stock of each of these banks—$750,000 in each case—came out of the Treasury of the United States. Not only that, but they have had a bond subsidy, which now amounts to more than $290,000,000, free from taxation.

While I am on my feet I want to say that we all have sympathy for this system, and we want it to succeed, and it is succeeding. The farmers of the country are not mendicants. They are not coming here and asking alms. All they ever asked for was to be put upon a competing basis with other industries in their demands for credit, and they are getting their money now at reasonable rates and are satisfied. They compare favorably with the rate that other productive industries pay.

The governors of the system, the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board, in asking for this legislation ask for it because they have the money to pay these expenses, and it will not raise the rate of interest to the borrower a mill. It seems to me that under the circumstances there ought to be no hesitancy on the part of Congress to adopt it.

I disapprove writing general legislation into an appropriation bill, Mr. President, but I have observed that a measure that is reasonable and sensible and proposes really to save a few dollars to the Treasury of the United States has to be written into an appropriation bill in order to pass this body.

You have an opportunity here to save $100,000 or more. The farmers, I am sure, will not suffer to any extent in securing their loans under this system. It will not raise the rate of interest, as I have said, a mill. The profits of the system furnish the money to pay these expenses, and I am glad, under the circumstances, that the Committee on Appropriations did write this amendment into the bill, and I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, there is no necessity of taking any further time of the Senate if there is going to be a point of order made against the amendment. There is some doubt in my mind as to whether a point of order would lie against it, any more than it lay against the amendment to an appropriation bill establishing the stop-watch system in the different arsenals of our country. But I am not going to raise that question. I voted for the bill to establish the Federal farm loan banks. I will do anything in reason to assist them. But I say now, Mr. President, that you can not find a Federal farm loan bank from one end of this country to the other which will object to paying the paltry sum that would be imposed upon them under the pending amendment.

I am going to pause and ask whether any Senator is going to make a point of order against the amendment? And if so, let him do it now, because in that case there would be no need of taking any more time of the Senate.

Mr. GORE. In view of that statement, I will state that I made the motion to reconsider with that in view; and as the Senator's remark indicates that there will be no breach of faith if the point of order is made, and I am certainly under no obligation to withhold it, I therefore make the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation and changes existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. POMERENE. There is no amendment pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. POMERENE. Last night the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] presented an amendment, on page 134, line 11, to strike out the numerals "$1,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000." I may say that I expect to follow that up with another amendment increasing the amount appropriated as indicated on line 18 from $165,000 to $250,000. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 134, in the item relative to commercial attachés to be paid a salary not to exceed $1,500, on line 11, it is proposed to strike out "$1,500" and in lieu thereof to insert "$2,000," and to change the total to accommodate that change, if made.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this relates to the subject of commercial attachés connected with the Department of Commerce. These attachés have been doing most excellent work toward the extension of our commerce abroad. We will be obliged to find markets for our surplus goods.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but does he propose to do away with the $1,500 limit upon the clerks to the commercial attachés?

Mr. POMERENE. No; I propose to increase the amount to $2,000, instead of leaving it at $1,500.

Mr. WARREN. It is subject to a point of order in that shape, and I shall have to make the point of order, although I am willing to withhold it to hear what the Senator has to say.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the Senator will not make the point of order. I am in entire sympathy with the purpose to economize wherever it is legitimate, but I do not regard this kind of economy as legitimate economy. You are seeking here to provide a compensation of $1,500 for clerks to be sent abroad as representing these attachés, and you expect a $1,500 man to fill the place. I submit that ordinarily, if a man is going to one of the foreign countries as a clerk for an attaché and he is not worth more than $1,500 to the Government he ought not to be sent there, but he ought to be kept at home. A clerk can not sustain himself in a foreign country, doing the work that will be required of him, on that salary, and I am asking that it be increased to $2,000. I do not understand why there should be any objection to it. If we are going to cripple the department by cutting down this remuneration we might just as well do away with the officials themselves.

In this connection I desire at the same time, because I believe I will save time by doing it, to discuss the other propositions.

The Senate committee has accepted the appropriation of $160,000 made by the House. Mr. Kennedy, representing the department, discussed this subject before the committee. I read from page 1416 of the hearings, where in answer to a question he said:

> We have not made any specific request as to the rate of salary. We have asked for an increase in our commercial attaché appropriation, for example, from $165,000 to $300,000, and the Secretary of Commerce will review the salaries, I presume, and decide on what he thinks is necessary, and if we have that enlarged appropriation he would be in position to increase the salaries at different posts.

Further on he was asked the question:

> Is that increase for the purpose of increasing the salaries or for increasing the number of the service?
> Mr. KENNEDY. It is for several purposes. One purpose is to increase salaries, another purpose is to establish three or four additional offices, and another purpose is to enable us to pay salaries somewhat higher to clerks. At the present time we only have 4 clerks, whereas we have 14 commercial attachés. There is a provision in the law that not more than $1,500 can be paid for a clerk. That limitation does not apply to the naval attaché or to the military attaché or to the State Department clerks, and, as a matter of fact, our inquiry showed they are getting anywhere from $1,800 to $2,500 at various posts. As a result, our clerks have resigned and we have not been able to get others. If that limitation is taken out of the law and the Secretary of Commerce is allowed to designate what he thinks is a fair going rate for a clerk at a particular post we will be able to give every commercial attaché a clerk.

I submit that anyone who has followed the work of these attachés must be convinced of the necessity of having practical and competent clerks to aid them in their official work.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] and myself have conferred about this matter, because it so happened that I at one time had given some attention to the subject and he has taken it up independently. He was obliged to leave the city yesterday to keep a previous engagement, and he has written to me a letter presenting his views with regard to the subject. I send the letter to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

> UNITED STATES SENATE, > COMMITTEE ON COAST AND INSULAR SURVEY,
> MY DEAR SENATOR: In informally discussing with you in the Senate Chamber this afternoon the possibility of great commercial advantages through more encouragement on the part of Congress to the Department of Commerce in connection with its Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce, you evinced so much interest in these possibilities that I am taking the liberty of asking you to call up for me the inclosed amendment to H. R. 12610 now pending. An engagement previously made calls me from the city to-night, and I presume the bill will be disposed of before my return, and, feeling that the adoption of the attached amendment would be of so much practical benefit to American producers and exporters, I feel that the opportunity should not be lost.
> I really think this department, with the great possibilities of increasing our domestic and foreign commerce, should have a more substantial appropriation in practically every activity coming under this subhead. But, recognizing the necessity for special curtailment in expenditures, the amendment I have proposed alone affects the item of commercial attachés and the personnel of their organizations. Congress has modestly but gradually increased the appropriation allowed this bureau ever since its inception in 1914. This year, when so much opportunity presents itself, the appropriations as provided in the pending bill are precisely the same as allowed in the current year. Of course, it is perfectly obvious that even a similar appropriation for the ensuing year, as compared with the past year, would not permit of the same service, even if no expansion were contemplated, simply because of the greater cost in administering any going business or in carrying out any activity. So therefore the effect of the pending appropriation, if unchanged, will be to curtail rather than to maintain even similar activities this year as compared with last.
> Just why the department should be thus handicapped when the whole world is, in a way, calling for our products, is beyond comprehension. The bill as presented provides that clerks in the office of commercial attachés in offices abroad shall receive salaries not to exceed $1,500. The amendment I propose raises this maximum to $2,000. It is evident that the salary of $1,500 has not attracted clerks, inasmuch as Mr. Kennedy, at the head of the bureau, testified before the committee of the House that at the present time only four clerks were employed, whereas there were 14 commercial attachés in different sections of the world. I can well understand this, for, to be frank about it, in my judgment, a $1,500 man should never be sent abroad representing the United States Government in an endeavor to broaden commercial possibilities of the business men of the United States. Two thousand dollars seems to me much too little, but I have endeavored to make my amendment at least modest.
> The same section of the pending bill provides that the total expenditure for this entire work shall be limited to $165,000; the amendment I have proposed raises this to $250,000; the department requested $300,000, so that the amendment suggested is well within the request. This additional $85,000 will permit the appointment of additional commercial attachés and permit of investigation in the interest of the producers of the United States in order that our trade may receive the benefit of that possible expansion.
> I might point out what the Board of Trade of Great Britain is doing at this very moment in the interest of her manufacturers and producers, with the desire to stimulate export business. I quote from an announcement recently issued by the London Board of Trade, which is in itself a semigovernmental organization:
> > The Government are prepared through the export credit department of the board of trade to consider applications for advances up to 80 per cent of the cost of the goods to the seller, including freight and insurance, commission paid to the department by the seller in respect of exports to—> and then follow various countries of the world. This is actually advancing cash to permit the British business man and farmer to finance the sale of his produce in other countries.
> The Department of Commerce, through its foreign bureau, of course, advances absolutely nothing, but simply secures information and learns conditions for dissemination among American business men and producers, so that they can arrange a sale if they see fit and proper to do so.

The policy of our governmental boards has usually been that of investigation and almost oppression, while that of foreign Governments, as here evidenced, has been cooperation almost up to the point of financing prospective business.

To-day we are pardonably proud of our splendid merchant marine and considering a policy in order that it be prosperous. Of course, it is self-evident that it can only be prosperous if it carries full cargoes from American ports to all the countries of the world. It can never be prosperous going abroad in ballast. Therefore, with this splendid opportunity, when for the first time in almost a century we have our own bottoms with which to transfer our wares, it seems to me a very inopportune moment to reduce, comparatively speaking, the appropriations of the one department of the Government whose responsibility lies in the direction of building up our export business.

Of course, I appreciate that, in a way, the consuls who are representing our State Department contribute considerable valuable information in the interests of our foreign trade, but their activities are necessarily and properly limited to the diplomatic field which a consul should occupy. As I understand it, the commercial attachés of the Department of Commerce have no such restriction and are permitted to go right in to possible trade sections and be of much more practical benefit to the business man. As an evidence of the great practical benefit that has already accrued from this department, with its meager appropriation, I am attaching a few references from actual reports from that department from commercial attachés abroad.

In conclusion, it may be interesting to note that, in addition to the activities of the London Board of Trade, the Government, notwithstanding her enormous war debts and her expenditures far in excess of her revenue, has appropriated this year approximately a million and a half dollars for her department of overseas trade alone. This is of significance when compared with the $910,000 provided in the pending bill, which includes both domestic and foreign activities. I am informed that France, confronted as she is with the necessity for rigid economy and with the prospects for export business in no way parallel even with a small portion of the United States, has appropriated $850,000. Therefore, it does seem to me that the small increase for this activity should be granted by Congress and thus the work be encouraged.

I do not know a period in the history of the country when the opportunity was greater and when it was more necessary to encourage greater production, and, of course, you can not encourage greater production if the market is limited. Around greater production, all agree, many of our problems assemble, and in this department, at very small expenditure from the evidence at hand, the Government can contribute her part toward increased prosperity that greater production assures.

We can not reach out for world trade if we bind our commercial arms with the thongs of penuriousness or false economy.

Cordially, yours,

WALTER E. EDGE.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I happen to have before me a letter indicating concretely the character and kind of work that some of these attachés are performing in the interest of American industry, and I want to read just one paragraph from the letter:

> Now for the concrete results obtained by the foreign trade promotion activities of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. Since the fiscal year 1915 Congress has appropriated the comparatively insignificant sum of $600,000 for the commercial attaché service. Yet one commercial attaché alone—the one in China—together with the assistance of one of the special technical representatives of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, was responsible for an initial order of over $600,000 of American cotton-mill machinery being installed in China, and as a result of this one example of trade promotion a total business of $16,000,000 of such machinery business came to this country in the single year of 1918 alone.

I think that demonstrates the wisdom of maintaining this service.

Now, does not the Senator feel that the sum of $1,500, which is the maximum limit for the payment of these clerks, is entirely too small?

Mr. WARREN. There is no doubt about that. If the Senator will permit me, I will give him my reasons for suggesting the making of the point of order.

This whole attaché matter was under discussion in the other House; in fact, as I now recall, the committee did not report it at all, but left the entire matter out of the bill, and I know they were opposed to it on the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Wyoming is speaking of the House of Representatives?

Mr. WARREN. I am speaking of the House of Representatives. The House of Representatives, understanding the ideas of the committee, reinstated the provisions of the present law, and the bill came to us in that form. We have had a large number of people before the committee; in fact, the so-called combination committee, representing 18 or 20 industries from New York, were heard, but the committee still thought that, taken as a whole, in these times when we must cut to the bone where we can, it was best to leave it as it now is.

As to the increase of the compensation to $2,000, the Senator will observe that the $165,000 is a lump sum, and if the limit of the compensation of the clerks is raised from $1,500 to $2,000 there should also be a limit as to the number of clerks.

I understand from what the Senator has said that he is the residuary legatee of the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], and that he will probably propose to increase the $165,000. Of course, there have been estimates for a larger sum than that; and, without speaking for either the committee or the Senate, I should myself feel like increasing the compensation to $2,000 if it is confined to 14 clerks and let the matter go to conference.

As to the $165,000, instead of increasing that to $300,000 or even to $250,000, personally I should not object to its being increased to $200,000 and letting the matter go to conference in that way.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I had expected to present an amendment to increase the $165,000 appropriation to $250,000. My information was in accord with that which the Senator has given, namely, that there was an estimate of $300,000. Would the Senator consent to increase the amount of $225,000?

Mr. WARREN. I should not be in favor of increasing it at all unless the Senator will confine the increase so that it will not exceed $200,000.

Now, as to the other matter, if the suggestion I have made is satisfactory to the Senator and the author of the amendment, of course the Secretary can arrange the details as to the 14 clerks.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection to limiting the number of clerks to 14, and that could be very easily done by providing:

> And for 1 clerk, not to exceed 14 in number, to each of said commercial attachés, to be paid a salary not to exceed $2,000 each.

That, I think, would meet the situation the Senator has in mind.

Mr. WARREN. Let me say to the Senator that the clerk of the committee will arrange that, if the amount proposed is agreed to and the Senate consents to it. It will be so arranged that only 14 clerks shall receive the increased amount.

Mr. POMERENE. Ought we not to have the matter settled now, while it is before the Senate? I will move to amend by inserting, on line 10, after the word "clerk," the words "not to exceed 14 in all."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the words "one clerk," in line 10, it is proposed to insert the words "not to exceed 14 in all."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let me have read a suggestion, not as an amendment that I am proposing but as representing the kind of language that I have suggested I might not object to in arriving at the point to which the Senator is directing his attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment originally proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] was to strike out "$1,500" and to insert "$2,000." There may have been some different understanding arrived at, but that is the amendment on which the question must first be put, if it be not withdrawn.

Mr. POMERENE. I think there is no objection to having that amendment acted upon now, and then we can take up the other amendment later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 134, it is proposed to strike out the words "one clerk to each" and to insert in lieu thereof "14 clerks"; and in line 11, before the word "each," to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$2,000," so as to read:

> and for 14 clerks of said commercial attachés to be paid a salary not to exceed $2,000 each.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The next amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 134, line 18, it is proposed to strike out "$165,000" and to insert "$200,000."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I hardly like to accept the responsibility for acting for the Senator from New Jersey in this matter, but so far as I am concerned I am willing to accept, so far as I may, the increase from $165,000 to $200,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming proposes to strike out "$165,000" and to insert "$200,000."

Mr. WARREN. No; I do not propose that, and unless the Senator from Ohio offers it as an amendment it will be objected to.

Mr. POMERENE. I offer that as an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 134, line 18, it is proposed to strike out "$165,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$200,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 138, and I ask that the Secretary may read it. I have heretofore sent it to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 138, line 3, after the words "Portland, Me., $1,300," it is proposed to insert "Charleston, S. C., $1,200," and on the same page, line 5, to strike out the total, "$34,000," and insert "$35,200."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I could make objection to the amendment, but it has come to the knowledge of the committee that business at the port of Charleston has greatly increased, and, so far as I am personally concerned, I am willing that the amendment shall go to conference and see what we can do with it there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina is agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 151, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "$100,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$150,000."

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, last year the amount available for the commissioners of conciliation under the Department of Labor was $200,000, and the department estimated for this year's work the same amount. The committee has cut that item down to $100,000 without any apparent reason except to save money without respect to the merit and necessities of the service.

I have here the report of the Secretary of Labor, who makes the very obvious reflection that last year, which was a war year, extending from July 1 to November 11, the date of the armistice, there was very little difficulty in bringing about settlements, whereas now in this period of readjustment the difficulties have increased, and hence the necessity of maintaining the efficiency of the Division of Conciliation. He says:

> A patriotic impulse had stirred both the employer and the worker, and many differences that, based upon our experience in normal times, would have caused a suspension of operations were very lightly passed over and adjusted without recourse to either strikes or lockouts. So, during the period from July 1 to November 11—what may be called the war months—the Division of Conciliation encountered few difficulties in making harmonious adjustments. From November 11 until the present date the readjustment of industry from war to peace time activities, the reemployment of demobilized soldiers, and the transfer of workers from war industries to normal production have all contributed to the general unrest so noticeable not only in our country but throughout the world.

So I make the point that there is much more necessity to provide for the Division of Conciliation, if it is worthy of support at all, at this time than at a time when $200,000 was available for its use. A like amount, as I have stated, has been recommended by the department.

Why is this work important? In the adjustment of labor troubles we have found that this agency has effected extraordinary results since its inauguration in 1915. In 1915 the number of cases before it was 42; in 1916, 227; in 1917, 378; in 1918, 1,217; and in 1919, 1,780. Of these cases there were, in 1919, 1,223 adjusted; 111 which the Division of Conciliation were unable to adjust; pending, 13; unclassified, 213; and referred to the National War Labor Board, 219. So there has been a progressive growth in the work of this bureau and in the success of its methods, which are to employ conciliation. There are 27 conciliators, and there are only 6 or 7 clerks employed by the bureau in Washington. The bill itself provides a limitation in connection with the employment of clerks at headquarters of $12,000.

So the work is in the field. Wherever there is labor trouble, there these men have gone; and I know from my personal knowledge—and that is what has interested me—that they went into the oil fields of California and they settled, at a very critical time, a dispute which was well calculated to interfere with the production of oil; 25,000 men were involved; and they settled it how? Not necessarily by making concessions. They settled it at a time when the wage asked for by the men was $5 a day. They settled it at $4.50 a day, and the men accepted it. It was in war time, and there was that spirit among the men, which must be praised, not to embarrass the Government during war time. Now, that spirit, as we all know, has diminished, and men are seeking equitable adjustments without reference to patriotic considerations. But the mine operators, recognizing the fact that the men were entitled to their demands, subsequently and voluntarily granted them. The same is true of the textile industries, where 22,000 employees were affected. Both the employers and the employees left it to the commissioner of this department as to whether the employees should have a certain increase. The men wanted 15 per cent and the company offered them 12½ per cent. The commissioner decided on 12½ per cent, and later the companies voluntarily granted the other 2½ per cent, and good feeling remained, and the workers were not disemployed and production was not interrupted.

We are all familiar with the work of these men in the shipyards, what they accomplished for this Government, and the saving of time and money by methods of conciliation. So it does not seem right at this moment, when the difficulties ahead of us are many and not insignificant, to cripple in any manner a bureau which has demonstrated its success.

I have a letter from the American Federation of Labor which doubtless was also received by other Senators. It reads as follows:

> AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
> Washington, D. C., March 26, 1920.
> Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
> Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.
> MY DEAR SIR: I desire to direct your attention to a matter of grave importance to the workers, the employers, and the people generally. There are two branches of the United States Department of Labor which have rendered invaluable service to our country. They are the Division of Conciliation and the Bureau of Labor Statistics.
> By providing the means for the prompt settlement of labor differences the Division of Conciliation has saved millions of dollars to employers and employees in preventing labor troubles. Its methods of adjustment are simple. Upon the request of either side to an industrial controversy commissioners of conciliation, appointed by the Secretary of Labor, endeavor to arrange a conference between the parties to discuss the questions at issue. This discussion usually results in an effective adjustment of pending differences, and also develops such a spirit of good feeling that the groundwork is laid for permanent peaceful settlement of all future issues. The benefit to industry, and consequently to all the people, of the work of this division can not be calculated in terms of money. Industrial peace and order are necessary to progress. The agency which can establish these is of incalculable worth to the people.
> The Bureau of Labor Statistics has been the source of the people's information on the actual costs of living.
> The appropriations for these two services are now before the Senate in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and they have been reduced to a figure that will greatly restrict the activities of these helpful agencies of the Government and consequently aid the forces of disorder. The appropriation for the Division of Conciliation has been reduced from $200,000 to $100,000, which is just one-half the amount this service has had for the past two years.
> The appropriation for the Bureau of Labor Statistics has been reduced by the sum of $55,000.
> I would therefore request that when these two items of this bill are being considered you exert your influence to have restored the amounts which have been requested by the Department of Labor. Believing as I do that impairment of peaceful and voluntary methods for adjusting industrial differences and restricting the means of the people for obtaining truthful information on the cost of living will serve only to increase industrial strife and general unrest, I feel that reducing these appropriations will defeat the purposes of real economy. Millions of dollars may be lost to the country to conserve hundreds to the Treasury.
> Confident that you will comply with this request, I am,
> Yours, very truly,
> FRANK MORRISON,
> Secretary American Federation of Labor.

Mr. President, I have not asked for the restoration of $200,000. The committee has allowed $100,000. I have asked for an increase of $50,000 in order that the usefulness of the bureau may not be crippled. I do that entirely on my own responsibility. I know there is a very strong feeling on the part of the Senate Committee on Appropriations and on the part of the corresponding committee of the House that appropriations should be kept down, and we have pleaded with them in many cases, with success occasionally, that it is false economy to reduce an appropriation which by its employment is serving a very useful and necessary purpose. I think that by the addition of $50,000 now recognition would be given to the usefulness of this service, and we could, perhaps, carry it over during the year. Of course, its work depends upon the number of cases that are reported to it, and we can not estimate that in advance; but we do know that during the war period, when they received $200,000, there was less disposition on the part of the workers to interrupt the harmonious relations which existed between them and their employers, moved not by economic but patriotic considerations. I am sorry to say that that spirit is not so manifest to-day; but it is something that we must recognize, and therefore I submit that it is no time to make a change in this appropriation. I yield, however, to that general spirit of economy, and I ask, not that it be restored according to the estimate of the department or according to the amount received by this valuable adjunct of the department for the last two years, but only by $50,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let me assure the Senator from California that there is no disposition whatever to cripple the conciliation commissioners, so far as I know, on the part of a single individual on the committee. We appreciate the work that that commission has done, and we have given them the money that has been necessary from time to time. There never has been a time when additional money has been needed but that they have asked for it in a deficiency estimate and have received it.

These estimates were made up last year, when everything was fomenting. The estimates were made long beforehand, when they had a great deal of work to do, and they estimated for the outer limit of what the possibilities might be in this work of conciliation.

As the Senator so well remarks, one can not tell beforehand what amount of work will have to be done by these commissioners of conciliation. There may not be a time in the next year when they will have one case to act upon. On the other hand, there may be a line of cases for which we shall have to appropriate double and perhaps treble this sum. But now, when the Treasury is so nearly bare, and when we are trying to economize in all directions, when they have money enough at present to go until the 1st of July, and we now give them this $100,000, which is enough to preserve and keep in order all that rightfully belongs to or contributes to this commission and that is useful, I submit that we should not increase this amount. We should rely upon this, and then if it is necessary, as I say, it is one of those things we are bound to have to take up from time to time.

Every one of these appeals that come here to different Senators ought to be disregarded. We ought to go to the head of a department, if anywhere, for correct information. These letters come from employees who fear that they may be discharged, because many of these departments have enlarged the number of their employees beyond the wildest dreams of peaceful times, and of necessity they must reduce. This Department of Labor, if my memory serves me right, has employees now who belong in other departments and who are detailed there. They can return some of those to the departments where they belong if too many are now in employment. It is not necessary that the Department of Labor should be so favored above all others that it can keep a lot of spare men for which it may possibly have use at times.

It seems to me that when we put in $100,000 for expense so long ahead, and they commence on July 1, if we have an eruption that causes very much work for that commission between now and July, there is yet to come a deficiency bill; and then, on the other hand, we shall be here again on the first Monday in December. In other words, we shall be here in less than six months from the time they commence to use this $100,000. It is true that they used $200,000 last year, but they had more work to do then than they have a right to expect for the coming year. I do not believe we ought to acknowledge here on the floor that we expect we are going to have the line of differences that we had for some two or three months last year; and I do not believe, by our appropriations for them, we ought to encourage the idea that we are to continue to have constant use every day for the active work of commissioners of conciliation. We do have a commission every day. Its members are there, to be used whenever required. As I said before, they may go on for six months or a year with not a single item to deal with, and on the other hand they may have many.

I hope the amendment may not be adopted.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I regret again that I can not agree with the chairman of the committee in his opposition to this increased appropriation. I am in sympathy with the position taken by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN]. I think these commissioners of conciliation have done a splendid work in the past. I have had occasion to observe their work during the last several years. I think we must all agree, first, that all labor disputes are deplorable. They are bound to come, however, and when they do come I think we will all agree again that they ought to be amicably settled; and that is the function to be performed by these conciliation commissioners.

Before this matter is finally passed upon I want to call attention to another feature. I am one of the Senators who were in part responsible for the railroad legislation, and I have been attacked a good deal by some of these radicals because I favored some method of adjustment of labor disputes in the case of railroads. I have no apology to make for my position on that subject, and I am willing to defend it at any and all times; and my guess is that notwithstanding the position that is taken by some of the radicals now, when the system adopted by the railroad legislation has had an opportunity to work, and the laboring men have become familiar with its service and the character of it, they will be the men who will commend it.

Now, let me make a suggestion to Senators—and I believe that when I make the statement that I am about to make I will be expressing the views of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce quite as well. It was our hope in the committee that in all railroad disputes methods of conciliation and mediation would be resorted to, with the hope that all of these disputes might be settled; and I want all of these disputes settled by some method of conciliation, by some method of mediation, if possible, or by arbitration, and if they can not be settled by these methods, then I want them settled by the adjustment boards or by the labor board which are provided for. Their jurisdiction, of course, applies only to railroad disputes.

I know that there is a certain amount of antagonism against that legislation. Nothing that is worth while in this world is ever accomplished without opposition, and the men who are opposing that legislation now will be its friends in the near future. The men who are often called out on strikes suffer because they are called out on strikes. Everybody knows that, and the laboring men know it better than the rest.

Why do I say this at this particular time? I want the men who are opposing that railroad legislation to feel that the men who stood sponsors for it are just as much in favor of conciliation and mediation or by arbitration now as they ever were, and I do not want it said by these men, or any of those who are opposed to that railroad legislation, that "You see the Congress of the United States is trying to limit the appropriations so as to do away with or cripple the methods of conciliation and mediation which have heretofore been adopted."

I hope that it will not be necessary for these labor boards to act. I hope that every dispute can be amicably settled, and I will help every time I have an opportunity to bring about a settlement. But I was for that railroad legislation, because I deny the right of any man, or any set of men, to tie up the commerce of the United States, and starve and freeze innocent workingmen, women, and children, because there is a quarrel on, forsooth, between some employers and some labor leaders. It is for that reason, among others, that I want to see the Congress sustain to the full the methods of conciliation and mediation and arbitration which we have now, and I am afraid if you are seeking to reduce these appropriations unduly now it will result in unnecessary agitation and will cause further unrest.

Let us provide liberally on this subject for these boards. If we find that any of them are incurring undue expenses, we can take care of that in the future. Two hundred thousand dollars, I believe, was the appropriation for the last two years, and now do not Senators realize that this feeling of unrest is still with us, and that it is going to continue for some time? But the sober American judgment is going to prevail, and let us say to the employers and employees alike that we are still going to retain these methods of settling disputes which have served us in the past, in most instances acceptably. In some instances they have not been able to get the contending parties together. But do not encourage the feeling of unrest by paring down unduly this appropriation. It will be a mistake.

I would have taken this position if there had been no railroad legislation, but I am more strongly in favor of it now because we have the railroad legislation. I recognize the fact that there are some men who have come here to control legislation and put certain Senators and Representatives on the blacklist because they will not follow their dictation. I understand that, and I for one am always amenable to reason, but I will never stand for dictation by any man or any set of men anywhere.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator is not one of those who will "refuse to do good because the devil bids him," as the old saying hath it.

Mr. POMERENE. I have said I was in favor of this. But I do not like that suggestion. I have not called anybody names. I do not intend to, and I do not think the Senator is justified in making that statement in that kind of way.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, my humor evidently is misunderstood. I quite agree with the Senator. I am aware that there is occasionally a lobby here dictating legislation. In common with the Senator, I examine that legislation. If it appeals to my judgment, I support it. If otherwise, I reject it. But because it is proposed by somebody whom we may not like, I would not on that account condemn the legislation. I was reducing to proverb something which is in part humor, and if it offends the Senator I beg his pardon. I withdraw it.

Mr. POMERENE. I take exception to that other statement, that there are some people whom I do not like. I like them all, but I do not like some of the things they do, and when I do not like them I do not hesitate to say so.

Mr. President, this thing has appealed to me. Some men have written me on the subject, and I did not hesitate to say that I was going to support liberal appropriations for this purpose, and I want to beg Senators on the other side and on the committee not to make the mistake now, at this crucial time, of denying a proper appropriation for this purpose.

A strike of a few days or a few weeks' duration may result in untold harm not only to a local community but to a State, to the Nation, to the world; and then when I think that we have this great country of ours, with 110,000,000 of people, nearly all of them producers; with a wealth that challenges the admiration of the world—a nation which can do everything but the impossible; with countless opportunities for disputes to arise—many, perhaps most of them, justified, some of them not—and then the Congress of the United States comes forward with a picayunish appropriation of $100,000 to be employed in conciliatory methods!

Let not the Senate of the United States make that mistake. I indulge the hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] will be accepted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not believe there is a Senator who has any intention whatever of crippling the commissioners of conciliation in their work. I say now that there is not a Senator who can state how much money will be necessary for that work the coming fiscal year; that is, the year beginning on the 1st day of July, 1920, and ending June 30, 1921. I say that there is not a man in the United States who can tell the amount. But if we make an appropriation of $200,000 for this commission, I do not care how few cases may develop during the next fiscal year the $200,000 will be expended; and I might say that if it were $300,000, the $300,000 would be expended.

Mr. President, before June 30, 1921, I will venture the assertion now that there will be at least half a dozen deficiency bills pass this body, and as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I want to say that if cases come before the commissioners of conciliation which require the expenditure for that fiscal year of more than $100,000, whatever is necessary to make up the deficit will be put in a deficiency bill and will pass Congress and be signed by the President of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. STERLING. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. NUGENT. Do I understand the Senator from Utah to say that in the event it later becomes necessary to appropriate more money for the proper conduct of affairs on the part of the commissioners of conciliation such appropriation will be made and will be included in a deficiency bill, and that that procedure will meet with the approval of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. It will meet with my approval most heartily. I will say to the Senator whenever a supplemental estimate is made and it is demonstrated that the case is an emergency one and the amount determined as necessary is agreed to, I will be one of the Senators who will urge its passage through this body just as quickly as it can be done.

Mr. NUGENT. I am glad to hear the Senator make that statement.

Mr. SMOOT. I say again that there is not a single Senator in this body who wants to cripple the work of this commission; but, Mr. President, I ask any Senator here if he were to pay the expenses of the commission out of his own pocket and he had to get the money to pay it out of the resources that he himself owned what would he do? He never would borrow money, which would be the same as selling bonds on the part of the Government, and set it aside to the amount of $200,000 when he did not know whether half of it would be needed or not.

The time has arrived when the affairs of the Government of the United States ought to be run upon business principles, as far as collecting the revenues of the Government are concerned and the expenditure of the Government's money.

I do not mean that business principles ought to apply to all of the general legislation, but I do mean that they ought to apply to the expenditures of the Government and to the receipts of the Government. It would be quite a different proposition if past experience did not prove beyond a question of doubt that whenever an appropriation of money is made the money is expended, no matter what may be the amount appropriated.

The trouble is and it has been the practice of the Government from the first year of its organization, with very few exceptions, that the appropriations have increased every succeeding year, and as we are creating new departments and divisions created by the dozens and dozens—there seems to be no limit—and commissions by the scores and scores, the head of each bureau or department or commission feels it his duty to see that each year the commission or the bureau or the department increases in the number of employees.

The whole system of submission of estimates for the expense of the Government of the United States is wrong in principle. I said the other day that the Secretaries of the departments know very little about what the estimates are for. The estimates are made up by the heads of the bureaus and the chief clerks of the divisions, and they are submitted, no doubt, to the head of the department, and after the head of the department casually looks over them they are submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury in a prepared form and perfunctorily sent by him to the Congress of the United States as estimates.

There is one item in the bill by way of a lump sum that we have decreased, I am afraid, not enough. I have come in contact with so many statements made by these chief clerks and heads of divisions that an estimate submitted means very little to me. I was asked while an appropriation bill was before the subcommittee, after a hearing upon the item, as to what the subcommittee had done with that particular item. I said, "I think the subcommittee is going to cut the amount." He said, "Do not cut it more than 25 per cent." "Why?" "Our estimate, of course, is always made more than we anticipate getting, but we can not get along with a cut exceeding 25 per cent." I hope that the Senate will stand by the committee on this appropriation of $100,000 for the reasons I have stated. If there was a man in the United States who could state approximately how many cases would be heard by this commission we could then judge as to about what the amount of expense would be; but the man does not live who can do that.

We had far better make the appropriation of $100,000 and tell the commission that is all the money they can expend for this purpose, unless there are cases enough coming before the commission that will absolutely require more money, and if there are more cases between July 1, 1920, and June 30, 1921, we will see that the appropriation is made in the regular way to cover that expense.

I want to say also, Mr. President, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has suggested to me, that this matter was before the House, and after it was thoroughly considered by the House it was their judgment that the proper amount to appropriate was only $100,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has suggested that we say to the commission that this is all we will appropriate unless there are other disputes. Nobody is authorized to say that to the commission unless we put it in the law. I would be very glad to vote for an amendment that would make that statement. Would the Senator favor that kind of an amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. NORRIS. Who is going to speak for Congress to the commission?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know that anyone can speak for the Congress of the United States other than this: Wherever there is a commission of this kind created, and there is no possible way of telling what the work of the commission will be a year ahead, or an emergency exists, the Congress of the United States has never refused to meet the expenses of such an emergency. I do not know whether the Senator was in the Chamber——

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have been here all the time.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will not repeat what I said.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has said many things that appeal to me with great force. I admit that there is a difficulty. We do not want to appropriate any more money than will be necessary to pay for whatever work in the line of conciliation may be necessary, but suppose this $100,000 appropriation were exhausted and Congress not in session, and there were disputes on and no money appropriated, would not the officials under the law be liable even to a penalty if they went ahead and acted when they knew that there was no money at their disposal?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; under the law they would be.

Mr. NORRIS. That is a dangerous proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that there is no more attention paid to that law than to the whistling of the winds.

Mr. NORRIS. I think there ought to be attention paid to that law.

Mr. SMOOT. So do I, in many cases.

Mr. NORRIS. I believe in the enforcement of all law, but I think that is a just law and it ought to be enforced. On that theory it seems to me wholly logical when I reach the conclusion that the appropriation ought to be increased for fear that we might get into just that kind of a difficulty. In cases like this, where the Senator says no man can tell what the absolutely necessary expense is going to be, if we could put in the law authority that would give to the proper officials the legal right to go ahead in every case of dispute, and then appropriate the money afterwards, it would meet the contingency; but when I asked the Senator if he would favor that kind of an amendment I did not expect him to agree to it, and I do not know that I would want to agree to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator would.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be a dangerous precedent to establish. There would be other dangers. So that brings us almost back to the proposition, it seems to me, that here is an appropriation that is exceedingly important and might mean the saving of us from a danger that would be nation wide if there were not sufficient funds appropriated in this case and a great strike or a good many strikes should happen to come on when Congress was not in session.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator a question? I am wondering if it would be possible under any contingency to spend more than $100,000 between the 1st day of July this year and the beginning of the next session of Congress. Congress will be in regular session from December until March.

I feel as the Senator from Nebraska does, that I would not want to cripple this service, because I think it has great possibilities for good, but if $100,000 is now appropriated, available the 1st day of July, it seems to me that would carry us clear through until the first Monday in December, and then if it is shown conclusively that there is need for more, I do not think the Congress would hesitate a moment to make an additional appropriation which would carry it through to the next July 1.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, my understanding is that the head of a department has the right to create a deficiency in cases like this, as they have in every department. Take great forest fires, take matters of disease, and so forth; under the law they have the right to create a deficiency.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not know that that was true. I am not myself friendly to that proposition, but I repeat that the present appropriation will clearly carry us to the time when Congress will again be in session. There is no possibility of Congress not being in session in December next, and remaining in session until the following 4th of March. As we could meet it then, perhaps, it would be wise to let this item go through.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the law as it stands upon the statute books positively prohibits the creation of deficiencies. I have wondered why the law was not lived up to strictly; but inasmuch as the President of the United States appoints each one of the heads of the departments of the Government, who are the responsible parties, and that the President also appoints the Attorney General, who is going to bring the actions, it never has been done and, in my opinion, never will be done, although I think in many cases it ought to be done; but wherever conditions warrant the creation of a deficiency, as in the case now under consideration, there can not be any doubt at all about making the necessary appropriation. I think the committee acted very wisely in following the recommendations of the other House.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that the very fact that at every session of Congress deficiency appropriation bills are presented indicates that every department technically violates the law to which he has referred. If that law were lived up to technically there would not be any deficiency bills; we should not have any measures of that kind; but in the nature of the case the law is too rigid. Many emergencies arise in all of the departments which fully justifies them in exceeding the regular appropriations; and in cases of that kind I have never felt disposed to criticize them for such action, for it is impossible in advance to know just what appropriations are required.

As to the board of conciliation, we can not tell at this moment how many cases are likely to confront it between now and the next session of Congress. They have furnished us no basis on which we can make a clear estimate for legislation. We appropriate $100,000 blindly. That will undoubtedly carry them over until the next session of Congress, and if they then need more money, no one doubts that the Congress of the United States will give it to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN]. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PHELAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Capper	Harding	Nelson	Smoot
Culberson	Harrison	New	Spencer
Cummins	Henderson	Norris	Sterling
Curtis	Kellogg	Nugent	Sutherland
Dial	Kendrick	Phelan	Thomas
Dillingham	Lenroot	Phipps	Townsend
Elkins	McCumber	Pomerene	Underwood
France	McKellar	Sheppard	Warren
Gay	McLean	Simmons
Glass	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Gronna	Moses	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. CALDER, Mr. TRAMMELL, and Mr. WADSWORTH answered to their names when called.

Mr. PAGE, Mr. KEYES, Mr. HALE, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. MYERS, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I inquire what is the parliamentary situation with respect to the amendment offered by me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. I offer an amendment on the same page providing $200,000, the present appropriation, instead of $100,000, for the board of conciliation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 151, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "$100,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$200,000."

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, many Members have been called to the Chamber since the amendment was proposed. The commissioners of conciliation of the Department of Labor now have $200,000, an appropriation which they have had for their work for the last two years. The work is increasing necessarily on account of labor adjustments after the war, whereas during the war there was a disposition of a patriotic character to settle disputes without much negotiation. Therefore I have made this motion that the appropriation be restored to the present amount—$200,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I just want to say that the appropriations for last year were not made together. They were made in different sums and in different bills.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from California that I was in favor of his amendment. I voted for it, and tried with the Senator to get a roll call on it, and if this were the last opportunity we had I probably should support this amendment; but as soon as the bill gets into the Senate, which probably will be in a few minutes, the Senator can offer his amendment again, and we can have a vote on it then. Let me suggest to the Senator, therefore, that he withdraw this amendment, and then offer his other amendment in the Senate.

Mr. PHELAN. I acquiesce in the Senator's suggestion and withdraw my amendment, and give notice that I shall bring up the former amendment when the bill returns to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have a committee amendment which I desire to offer at this time. It is to come in on page 29, following line 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 29, after line 10, it is proposed to insert the following:

The Bureau of Efficiency, together with its books, papers, and records, furniture, equipment, and supplies is hereby transferred to the jurisdiction of Congress; and its officers and employees are transferred in their present status without reappointment. The Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency shall hereafter be appointed jointly by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and may be removed from office by concurrent resolution for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. All other employees of the bureau, including a disbursing officer for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the bureau, shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations. The Bureau of Efficiency is authorized to investigate any matters relating to the organization, activities, or methods of business of the several administrative services of the Government, and shall from time to time submit to Congress reports of its investigations, with recommendations looking to greater efficiency and economy in the conduct of the public business. It shall make such special investigations and reports as may be required by either House of Congress, or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenues, appropriations, or expenditures. Officers and employees of the executive departments and other establishments shall furnish authorized representatives of the Bureau of Efficiency with all information that the bureau may require for the performance of its duties, and shall give such representatives access to all records and papers that may be needed for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the amendment if the Senator from Utah is going to explain it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will explain the amendment in just a few words.

Mr. NORRIS. I will wait, then.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is in existence to-day a Bureau of Efficiency provided for in the pending appropriation bill found on page 29. This amendment simply provides for the transfer of that bureau, together with all its books, records, and so forth, to the jurisdiction of Congress, so that wherever there is an item in an appropriation bill or the expenditures attached to the Government about which we want information the head of the Bureau of Efficiency can be ordered to make an investigation of the same. To-day the Bureau of Efficiency makes certain examinations into the workings of the departments at the request of the heads of the departments. This amendment means that if Congress desires an investigation made, or information as to any estimate submitted to it, it can ask the Bureau of Efficiency to make such an investigation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, why can they not do that to-day?

Mr. SMOOT. There is not anything in the law that compels the head of a department to allow the bureau to make an investigation or recommendation. I will say that many of the departments have done so, and some of them have refused.

Mr. NORRIS. I have never known a bureau or a commission to refuse to obey a resolution of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator misunderstands me. Congress could pass a resolution directing an investigation to be made, but that would not allow the committees enumerated in the amendment to ask them to secure information. Under this amendment the Bureau of Efficiency will be an agency of Congress, to do the work that the committees named may ask them to do, and they have the power to make investigations requested.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's amendment does not give the Committee on Appropriations legal authority to call on them and require them to perform it.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. NORRIS. It would have to be through action on the part of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment says:

It shall make such special investigations and reports as may be required by either House of Congress, or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenues, appropriations, or expenditures.

Mr. NORRIS. Under whose jurisdiction are they now?

Mr. SMOOT. The only jurisdiction they are under, I think, is that of the President of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. They are appointed by the President?

Mr. SMOOT. They are appointed by the President.

Mr. NORRIS. Was it intended that it should be a permanent bureau?

Mr. SMOOT. It was; and I will say to the Senator that it is one of the agencies of the Government that by its investigations have saved large sums of money, and we simply want to make it more responsive to Congress, so that we can get the information when we want it, and get it direct.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, of course I want this bureau to respond to any resolution of Congress. I do not know whether I would extend it to every committee in Congress or not.

Mr. SMOOT. Not to every committee.

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment does.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it says, "by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenues, appropriations, or expenditures."

Mr. NORRIS. That includes practically everything.

Mr. SMOOT. Only the appropriation committees and committees handling appropriations and the revenue legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, as I understand the duty of the Bureau of Efficiency, it is to suggest improved methods by which we can economize, save money, and do better work in the various departments.

Mr. SMOOT. That is one of the things.

Mr. NORRIS. I think everybody is in entire sympathy with work of that kind; and while I do not have at my command and have never made an investigation far enough to convince me, yet what I have heard, or at least considerable of what information I have gained, has not been, in my judgment, satisfactory as to the work that that bureau is doing. As I say, my information is limited, because I have never undertaken to go into it; but in conversation with various employees of the Government I have often asked them, without suggesting why I wanted to know, questions that pertained to the work of this bureau, and I know that there are many persons in the Government employ who think this bureau is a joke. I am not charging that, because, as I say, I do not know enough about it. It ought to be very useful. They ought to do a whole lot of good; but there are a good many people who know more about the matter than I do who think that the only thing they do is to draw their salaries, and that some of the experts do not know nearly as much about efficiency as the people that they are investigating.

That may be wrong, as I said. I want it distinctly understood that my information does not come from a full investigation; but, so far as I have heard, it has not been very complimentary to this bureau.

I do not know whether it would be advisable to make this bureau respond to a committee of the House or of the Senate. I am afraid it would make clerks of them, to investigate things that are not within the duties of an efficiency expert. I am afraid they would be called upon to perform duties and do work that would be more along the line of a legislative bureau. I fear that they would be called upon to draft amendments and draft proposed laws. As the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] suggests, we already have a legislative drafting bureau, very properly so, and I think it is a very necessary adjunct in a progressive legislative body.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that this efficiency bureau has no intention of doing any such work, nor has any committee any such intention.

Mr. NORRIS. I know that; but while this may not be the case, I fear that if this amendment is adopted, giving practically every committee of the House and the Senate the right to call upon them at any time, it might lead them into that kind of a channel.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment, it is practically limited to committees of appropriation and committees that have to do with revenue legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. That will be two committees in this body—the Committee on Appropriations and the Finance Committee—and in the House it will be the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Ways and Means, and not the other committees.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let us see about that. Let us take the Senate. It would be the Appropriations Committee, it would be the Finance Committee, it would be the Foreign Relations Committee—because they bring in an appropriation bill—it would be the Agricultural Committee—because they are an appropriation committee—it would be the Naval Affairs Committee, and it would be the Military Affairs Committee. Now, what have you left? Not very much. The condition is somewhat similar in the House of Representatives. It would not be confined to two committees.

I would not want, of course, to take any action that would prohibit the committees from getting information. That is one of the things committees are for, and I want them to have all possible opportunities; but it does not seem to me that the Bureau of Efficiency ought to become an information bureau for committees of Congress. Just as surely as it does, it will not do very much work along efficiency lines, I fear.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will simply make this short statement:

To-day the estimates come to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury, and they are furnished him by the heads of the departments. When those estimates come to the different committees on appropriations, if they are reduced the department making the estimates asks the appropriations committee for a hearing. The persons to testify are the very ones that have made the estimates, and the committee, as the Senator must understand, has not the physical power, nor could it possibly have the time, to make an investigation into all of the cases. Now, if we had this Efficiency Bureau at the command of the committee, those questions could be examined into and reported to the committee.

I know, Mr. President, that any agency on the part of the Government that tries to save a dollar for the Government or tries to get information with a view of saving money is not very popular with certain of the employees of the Government; but I ask the Senator in all earnestness to go to the Secretary of War, or to go to the Postmaster General, and ask what this Efficiency Bureau has done for their departments, and I think he will get an answer that will be perfectly satisfactory to him, for I know from the statements he has made here so often upon the floor that he is interested in having the expenses of the Government cut just as low as possible.

Mr. President, if we adopt this, and if the House agrees to it, that will be the result of this amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I doubt that a great deal. I do not mean that I doubt the Senator's word or his judgment, but I am inclined to think he is mistaken. I do not want the Senator from Utah or anybody else to get the idea that I would condemn this commission because some person in the Government service whom they were investigating was dissatisfied with the investigation and complained to me. Nothing of that kind has occurred. I might very easily have the wool pulled over my eyes and be deceived; and I am deceived unless I am wrong in the statement that I make when I say that I do not believe any employee of the Government has ever had an idea that any question that I have ever asked, or any information I have ever sought, was for the purpose of finding out what the Bureau of Efficiency was doing.

I realize the difficulty of going into it without having authority and time. I have had neither. But when occasion presented itself I did not conduct a preconceived investigation, but a thing would happen now and something next month, and if I thought I had an opportunity to find out something I always improved it, and I have found out some of their activities, some of the things that have been done in the name of the Bureau of Efficiency; but only some. I presume they have done thousands of things that I do not know anything about, and many of them, perhaps, were very beneficial and saved the Government money; but I have found some cases where it seemed to me that those representing the Bureau of Efficiency were more interested in drawing their own salaries than they were in improving the systems of the various departments.

Mr. THOMAS. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Utah his reason for transferring the appointing power from where it is at present to Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Because it will then be under the direction of and responsible to Congress. Congress is responsible for the appropriations, and Congress should not make any appropriations unless they have the fullest information at hand in order to justify the same.

Mr. THOMAS. Would not that same reason apply to every other bureau?

Mr. SMOOT. Not necessarily, because Congress appropriates the money direct.

Mr. THOMAS. It appropriates the money for every other bureau of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. But only upon the estimates made by the departments. There ought to be some kind of a check, and this amendment will provide it.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, I am not at all familiar with the province or the work of the Bureau of Efficiency. I always regarded that name as applied to a Federal bureau as a piece of congressional humor, because I know of no such thing as efficiency in any of the departments of the Government, Congress included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment, which I hope will be accepted by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 25, after the numerals "$1,200" and the semicolon, insert "messenger in the Library, $1,000"; on page 3, line 2, strike out the word "three" and in lieu thereof insert the word "two," so as to read:

Messenger in the Library, $1,000; messenger, $1,440; assistant messenger, $1,200; laborers—3 at $840 each, 2 at $720 each—

And so forth.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 12, strike out "laborer, $720" and insert in lieu thereof "messenger, $900."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. The totals will be changed accordingly, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerks at the desk will change the totals to correspond with the action of the Senate.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, line 4, in the items for the offices of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper and in the provision for two floor assistants at $2,500 each, strike out "$2,500" and in lieu insert "$3,000."

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if their salaries were not increased last year?

Mr. KIRBY. I do not think so, but these are very capable men.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to say anything in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are very efficient men, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true of all our employees; at least, they are supposed to be efficient. If we are going to review the bill and increase salaries, I shall make a point of order against the proposed amendment.

Mr. KIRBY. A point of order will not lie.

Mr. SMOOT. It will lie, because it was not estimated for.

Mr. KIRBY. It is only changing the amount.

Mr. THOMAS. That is all, just increasing it.

Mr. SMOOT. It was not estimated for nor reported by a standing committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Have not changes been made on the floor of the Senate in other cases?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; because no point of order was made.

Mr. McKELLAR. We know that these young men are two as valuable men as there are about the Senate Chamber. They work as faithfully as any men here, and they are entitled to recognition. It does seem to me that the Senate ought to have more pride than to permit the small salary of $2,500 for these two floor assistants to exist. We ought to give them something like a living wage for the work they do.

Mr. KIRBY. In any event, I think the Senate ought to be allowed to vote on the matter. It is something for the Senate's convenience, and I ask that no point of order be made against it.

Mr. THOMAS. The reasons which are assigned are unquestionably good, but they can be applied to practically every employee of the Senate. No one questions the capacity of these men, their faithfulness, or their merit. I think $2,500 a year is a pretty good salary. It is far in excess of the average salary paid by the Government. If we are going to begin this increase, where are we going to end it?

Mr. KIRBY. It will end right here.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know whether it will or not. For the purpose of testing it I make a point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 29, line 10, after the words "per annum," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all clerks on the temporary rolls and other employees rendered necessary because of increased work incident to the war with Germany who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during said war and have since been honorably discharged and are at present employed in any of the several departments of the Government are hereby transferred to the classified service as of their present grade or rate of compensation, respectively, and shall be continued in the several departments where now employed without further examination, subject, however, to transfer, promotion, or removal, the same as other clerks and employees in the classified service. And the several appropriations herein made for such clerks and employees under the several departments and offices shall be available for payment of the salaries of all clerks and employees transferred to the classified service under this provision, and the appropriations made for such temporary clerks and employees for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall be also available for the payment of salaries of all such clerks and employees herein transferred for the balance of the current fiscal year.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, from a casual reading of the proposed amendment this transfer might include and make permanent a number of places for which there is no immediate need, or for which there may be no need hereafter. In other words, if I gather the purpose of the amendment correctly, we may make permanent a number of places that are transient, and which will be disposed of very soon but for this amendment. I ask the Senator from Indiana whether I am correct in that impression?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Colorado is incorrect. I do not think the amendment is open to that construction. At least, it certainly is not intended that it shall be. The purpose of the amendment is to transfer to the permanent civil-service roll those employees now on the temporary roll who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the recent war.

Mr. THOMAS. Does it include those who were in the employment of the Government at Washington and other places in the country, as well as those at the front?

Mr. NEW. It does not expressly say that it is limited to those who saw duty at the front, and I do not see how that discrimination could very well be made.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think so, either.

Mr. NEW. It applies to those that saw service in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think there should be any discrimination, either; but the fact that it can not be done rather militates against the expediency of doing it. The effect of it is to give a very extraordinary preference to a class of our citizens over the rest of the community.

Mr. NEW. I think that class is entitled to very extraordinary preference.

Mr. THOMAS. We will take the case of John Smith, by way of illustration, who volunteers and who is rejected because of physical deficiency. He can not go to the front, but he is upon the civil-service roll, notwithstanding that fact, having passed a mental examination. This is to postpone him for somebody who served the Government here in one of the departments, or who perhaps was employed in some semimilitary capacity in Indianapolis or in the city of Denver. I do not think that is just.

Mr. NEW. I do not think that anyone is apt to suffer injustice under the circumstances which are brought forward by the Senator from Colorado.

It may be possible, but I do not think at all likely. The purpose of the amendment is perfectly apparent. It is intended for the benefit of clerks now on the temporary roll who saw service in the armed forces of the United States during the war. While it is possible that there may be here or there an exceptional case, where a man is now employed on that roll who did not see much service, those cases are certainly the very rare exceptions and not the rule, and I do not believe they are numerous enough to be worth taking into account at all in an argument against the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Will the mover of the amendment yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. If I heard the reading aright, I think the Senator should amend it, because I hardly see how it can be considered without amendment. It should provide that they will be subject to the usual soldier exemptions. The laws now provide a preference for every soldier of this war and every other war. I happened to look it up within the last week. I went over it with the Civil Service Commission, and I found that the rule is that a man who has been in service and passes, say, at 65, and is in competition with men who have passed even at 99, when the names are sent up the soldier is put at the top of the list and preferred.

Unless some provision of that kind is added, what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] says might take place, and that is we would put in all the men regardless of the examination, in which they might fail, and regardless of their capacity altogether—everyone who had had even limited service, and on a basis of employment for all time. I hardly think the Senator wants to go quite that far.

Mr. NEW. These employees are, of course, subject to all the rules and conditions that are prescribed by the civil service. If they should chance to be incompetent after having been placed upon the permanent roll, they can be disposed of in the same way that others are. I do not think there is any danger of the quality of the service being impaired by the acceptance of the amendment. It reads, "Clerks now on the temporary roll." If they are now on the roll, it is certainly an evidence of their competency.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, being on the temporary roll means that they are put on for 30 days and then sometimes extended for 30 or perhaps 90 days more, and if they should fail on examination they could still be employed temporarily in that place or another. To get them permanently on the roll there should be, in my opinion, some grade of examination, and when the rule is applied, as I have mentioned, they have to be only two-thirds as capable in examination as the others to make them not only equal but preferred.

I do not believe the Senator will take any chance in doing that, and I think we would have pretty hard work in conference to get an amendment through, should an amendment be voted in, that would go quite as far as that offered, without some qualification, would be construed as going.

I am entirely in sympathy with the idea that the Senator has, to give these men preferred employment, but I would not be willing to subject my own business and I would not be willing to subject the Government's business to an entire misfit, and, of course, besides the misfit, it would hardly be justice to have him obtain a livelihood without having him render a fair equivalent.

Of course, now, as the Senator knows, those who have been disabled have for years been provided for and they have had preference, and by a late law signed as recently as the 11th of July, 1919, we extended the law to take in all soldiers in good health or in bad health, and whether they are incapacitated or not. They go in as preferred if they can pass the lower scale, which is at present, under the rule, 65.

Mr. NEW. I know there is preference given to ex-soldiers, but I do not think that affects this at all. The mere fact that an applicant for appointment passes a civil-service examination to-day with a grade of 90 or more does not mean that he is going to continue permanently at that degree of efficiency during his whole period of service, and his permanent continuance depends upon his continued efficiency, even under the terms of the civil-service law. That same thing would apply to the ex-soldier who is put upon the permanent roll under the operation of the proposed amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Undoubtedly there would be a way found to discharge such a man. For the information of the Senator, although perhaps he knows it, I will say that there have been cases, for instance, growing out of the Spanish War, where it was not made a preference as to soldiers, but there was a preference given to a large number of clerks in the War and some other departments; in fact, the arms of the civil service were cast around some hundreds of employees by direct law, but before they arrived at that they were employees who had been put on temporarily under war orders and had been retained a long time. In a bill like this we inserted a provision that during the year following the heads of departments should make selections of their best temporary employees and reduce the numbers to cover only those whom they desired to keep permanently, so that at the end of that year the matter of taking them into regular service might be considered. At the end of the first year they were not ready and another year was taken when they were to be selected, and then it was done by examinations outside of the civil service, but by an examination just the same, and then they all went in to the main body of the civil-service employees.

Mr. NEW. If the Senator from Wyoming will permit me, I think he will find that an amendment identical in language was included in the legislative appropriation bill which followed the Spanish-American War. Perhaps it was as late as 1902, but it is identical.

Mr. WARREN. That simply confirms exactly what I have said. But notice had been given beforehand on two different occasions, the first one year and the second a year later, for each department to so trim as to exclude all inefficient ones.

I am not going to make a point of order against the proposed amendment, and if the Senator insists upon it in the shape it is let it go to conference and see what can be done with it, but I imagine that the question will have to be settled either here or there.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall be compelled to make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. NEW. The Senator from Indiana is content, of course, to accept the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken and is sustained.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 17, strike out the words "and printing clerk" and insert, in line 18, after the numerals "$4,000" where they occur the second time, the words "printing clerk, $4,000."

Mr. WARREN. We all know that the Senator who offers the amendment is one of the most careful and economical Senators in this body, and he offers it in the interest of a man who is employed the year round, every day in the year. So I shall, so far as I am personally concerned, accept his amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I make the same point of order against this amendment that I made against the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inquire whether the head of a department has estimated for the increased sum mentioned.

Mr. NELSON. The printing clerk is an employee of the Senate, and, in the nature of the case, no estimate can be made by a department for this increase. In the very nature of the case the Treasury Department makes no estimate and can make none. We are our own estimators in that respect.

The object of this amendment is to increase the salary of the printing clerk. As every Senator knows, he is one of the most attentive and efficient employees in the Capitol. He is here always, late and early, day and night, and he is here when Congress adjourns; he stays here the year round. I feel that if anyone is entitled to an increase of salary he is one of that kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule XVI provides that—

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and the Chair sustains it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 4, at the end of line 22, it is proposed to strike out "$2,000" and to insert "$2,220" for the salary of the assistant clerk of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire simply to make a brief statement. There are two assistant clerks to the Committee on Appropriations, who receive $2,500 and who ought to receive that amount. The Committees on Commerce, Finance, Foreign Relations, the Judiciary, Military Affairs, and Naval Affairs each have an assistant clerk at $2,220. The assistant clerk of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads receives but $2,000. The object of the amendment is to make his salary the same as that of the assistant clerks of the other committees, with the exception of the assistant clerk of the Committee on Appropriations.

If there is an assistant in any of the committees outside of the Appropriations Committee who puts in more time than does the assistant clerk of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I do not know who he is. That committee has a large appropriation bill to prepare, and the assistant clerk is constantly in his office. Every week and sometimes every day during the session of Congress we are hearing contested matters which are raised before the committee, and it requires patience and intelligence to properly perform the duties involved. I am offering the amendment for the purpose of putting this office on a par with the others.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is a most ungracious thing for a Senator to object to any amendment which may be offered to favor any of the faithful employees of the Senate. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has considered the matter involved in the pending amendment, and he presumes other members of the committee also have to some extent done the same. I do not want to see the Senate run away with these matters. Of course, the statement of the Senator from Michigan need not go any further as to other committees, because it hardly can have reference to the Committee on Appropriations. It is true, of course, that the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee has jurisdiction of an appropriation bill which is one of the largest of all the appropriation bills, although it occupies fewer pages. On the other hand, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, in common with the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs, have a flood of nominations coming before them, which they have to look up in order to see if they are right or wrong; in order to see if the Senators from the different States agree to the appointments, and, if not, why they disagree, and so forth. It so happens that as to both the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs the second clerk draws $2,220. So, constrained as I shall have to be, ungracious as it is to object, so far as I am concerned, to this general line of increases, I desire to say that we shall probably have to provide at the next session for a rearrangement of the clerks, perhaps, of every Senator on a different scale than now exists by doing away with the bonuses. It is only lately, however, that we adpoted the so-called Jones amendment and arranged our committees, and we ought, as near as we can, to let them remain as at present constituted, at this time. However, I am not going to object to the proposition of the Senator from Michigan on the ground that I have stated. We all know how many nominations have to be considered by his committee, and the other work it has to perform, and if he believes the assistant clerk of the committee should have this increased salary I shall make no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. A while ago an amendment was adopted, on page 2, line 25, allowing a messenger in the library. Another amendment was also adopted, on page 3, line 12, changing the salary of a laborer from $720 to that of a messenger at $900. My parliamentary inquiry is, after we get into the Senate can a point of order be raised as to those two amendments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion, following at least the latest precedents of the Senate, that any point of order that can be made as in Committee of the Whole can also be made in the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I give notice that I may make the point of order as to both the amendments I have indicated when the bill gets into the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, while I differ from the Chair in his ruling, I do not propose to make any objection.

I will say, however, to the Senator from Tennessee that one of the men to whom he alludes happens to be an employee of my committee to whom I am paying something in addition to his salary, and shall probably continue to do so even when this slight increase of $180 shall have been made. I will ask a reconsideration of the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to so that the Senator may throw the matter out now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is aware that there have been rulings both ways on this question, but the present occupant of the chair is of the opinion that the point of order can be made in the Senate even though not made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McKELLAR. Since the Senator from Wyoming has made an explanation about the matter concerning his own committee, I certainly shall not raise the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. As to one of these cases, I will say that the increase from $720 to $900 was made so as to provide better pay to a messenger who performs work which requires education.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am absolutely sure as to the man whose status has been changed from a laborer to a messenger that it is perfectly right and perfectly proper and that it ought to be done. As I have stated, I am not going to raise the point of order against it; but I make the parliamentary inquiry merely to show how we are legislating.

Here are two young men, Mr. Halsey and Mr. O'Toole, in this body, who are of as much material benefit in a personal way to the various Senators as perhaps any other two men in connection with the whole force of the Senate; certainly they are just as material to the performance of the duties of Senators. These two young men are here all the time; they are courteous and polite; they will do anything in the world for Senators, and they are constantly on the go. For men of their abilities, of their efficiency, and of their attention to their duties they are getting a very much smaller salary in comparison than is the man at the door of the Senator from Wyoming.

Points of order were raised when it came to amendments providing more and adequate compensation for these two employees whose salaries ought to be raised, yet when it comes to other salaries being raised the amendments pass through without points of order being raised, and new offices are created without points of order being raised. My proposition is that we ought to be fair all along the line, and where employees are entitled to increases they ought to have them. It is wrong to legislate in this way. If points of order are going to be raised against some provisions of this kind, points of order ought to be made against all. That is all I have to say.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the committee amendment on page 136, line 9. If that motion should prevail, my idea is to make a subsequent motion to restore the House text.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator indicate again the amendment he desires to have reconsidered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are two amendments on line 9, page 136. To which does the Senator from Louisiana refer?

Mr. GAY. It is necessary, as I understand, first to move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to. My idea is to change the first amendment, on line 9, page 136, by inserting "six" in place of "five," so as to make it conform to the bill as it originally came from the House.

Mr. WARREN. The text in line 9 formerly read "six"—it has now been made "five"—"at $2,350 each." Then little further along there is an amendment inserting the words, "Mobile, one $2,350." What is the motion of the Senator?

Mr. GAY. I wish to change the item pertaining to New Orleans, so as to provide for six assistant inspectors, just as it came from the House, in lieu of the committee amendment inserting "five." I should like to give my reasons for doing so.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator wish to strike out the provision for one assistant inspector at Mobile and reinstate the provision providing for six assistant inspectors at New Orleans?

Mr. GAY. No; I am not asking to have the provision in regard to the assistant inspector at Mobile stricken out; I am asking to have the number of assistant inspectors at the port of New Orleans placed at six, as it has been for many years.

I desire to say, Mr. President, that the change proposed by the committee amendment, which has been agreed to, in my opinion will seriously affect the Steamboat-Inspection Service at New Orleans. I took occasion to-day to speak to the Chief of the Steamboat-Inspection Service of the Department of Commerce, and I wish to read what he has to say on that subject:

1. Referring to your telephone conversation of even date with Mr. Hoover, the Deputy Supervising Inspector General, in regard to that provision in the legislative bill which appears on page 136, and which provides for five assistant inspectors of steam vessels at New Orleans, La., instead of six as at present, and one assistant inspector at Mobile, Ala., where there are no assistant inspectors at present, you are informed that in the estimates the bureau asked for two assistant inspectors at Mobile, Ala. These two assistant inspectors were asked for because of the immense pressure of work at Mobile and the tremendous increase in the work of inspection at that port. Apparently the committee, when considering the item of six assistant inspectors at New Orleans, where there are at present six, has taken action arranging for five, and has taken one of the assistant inspectors from New Orleans and placed him at Mobile, Ala. This will not relieve the situation at Mobile and it will destroy the efficiency of the force at New Orleans, La.

2. It was explained to you that there are assistant inspectors of hulls and assistant inspectors of boilers, and that these men work in pairs; and so you can see that if there is an uneven number of assistant inspectors at a port it means that it is impossible to work the inspectors in pairs, which is an arrangement that is highly desirable for the purpose of efficiency. There is just as much need as ever that there shall be six assistant inspectors at New Orleans. The work of that port is very heavy, and the inspection work is increasing considerably, and there is just as much reason now for asking for two assistant inspectors at Mobile as when the estimates were submitted. Relief can only be given at Mobile by the appointment of two assistant inspectors and leaving the six assistant inspectors at New Orleans as at present.

3. It may be stated that the bureau was not consulted by the committee in arranging to place one assistant inspector at Mobile, Ala., and taking one from New Orleans, La., and the action of the committee is not based upon any recommendation made by the bureau.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. GAY. I should like to conclude reading the letter, and then I will yield.

Mr. WARREN. When the Senator concludes I will give him the estimate submitted for this service.

Mr. GAY. The letter concludes as follows:

The bureau would recommend now, as it has consistently done in its estimates, that two assistant inspectors be appointed at Mobile, Ala., and that six assistant inspectors be allowed to remain at New Orleans, La.

Now, Mr. President, I have here the estimates spoken of by the chairman of the committee, and I know full well what they recommended. They recommended six at New Orleans, two at Mobile, and a number of others, I believe including some at Galveston. They are all listed here, but I do not think the service at one port ought to be impaired for the benefit of any other port, and I think it is only right that we should reconsider this amendment and make the necessary change. If Mobile needs two inspectors it should have them, but certainly Mobile should not have an inspector at the expense of New Orleans. I consider that that is a very poor way to legislate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that he is entitled, of course, to make an offer to arrange this according to the estimate; that is, as he proposes, to leave six at $2,350 each at New Orleans, and the estimate is to put two at Mobile instead of one and to fix their salaries at $2,100 each instead of $2,350. The only question that arises with me is why there should be three pairs of inspectors at the same salary at New Orleans while they put one pair alone at Mobile at a lesser sum.

Mr. GAY. I presume the work here justifies it. There may be a difference in the work. I notice that they are at different salaries. For instance, there are 40 at New York at $2,500 each. I can not see why there should be 40 at New York at $2,500 and 2 at Mobile at $2,100.

Mr. WARREN. So far as I am concerned, I shall offer no objection to reconsidering the amendment, so that the Senator may make the offer inside of the estimates.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment in line 9, page 136, was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. WARREN. There can either be an agreement or a disagreement; but there should be a striking out and substituting in place thereof, unless the proposition is to strike out the first committee amendment, and then proceed to take up the Mobile amendment. That can be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, however, upon agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, I offer as a substitute for that the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "six."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. LENROOT. It is just a question of agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if I can make myself understood——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The entire question will be settled by disagreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. GAY. I move that we disagree to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to hold that that motion is not in order. The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendment, and if that question is negatively decided the original text of the bill will stand.

Mr. WARREN. Is the Senator's amendment to strike out "five" and insert "six"?

Mr. GAY. To strike out "five" and insert "six."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why they made the change to "five" if there was no reason for it?

Mr. WARREN. The reason given at the time was that a portion of that business was being done at Mobile; but, from the statement the Senator has just read, it seems to be due to the new business at Mobile, without lessening the amount at New Orleans.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will say to him that the business of the port of New Orleans and the business of Mobile are entirely separate and distinct, and that this will not relieve the situation at New Orleans at all. It may be that Mobile needs two inspectors.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GAY. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Are these inspectors confined in their duties to the ports? Are the duties of the six men confined to the port of New Orleans?

Mr. GAY. I understand that their duties are confined to the port of New Orleans just as they are for other ports, 40 for the port of New York, 10 for Baltimore, and so forth.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly. These inspectors, as I understand, cover an entire district, and the six at New Orleans heretofore were required to make the inspections at Mobile and at other points within the district.

Mr. GAY. I think the Senator is in error in that, judging from the statement that is made by the inspector general, which I have just read, in which he says that they need these men at New Orleans. It has been explained that they work in pairs, that there is a hull inspector and a boiler inspector, and that reducing the number will very much affect the efficiency of this work. There is just as much need now as there ever has been for the six assistant inspectors at New Orleans. The work of that port is very heavy, and the inspection work is increasing considerably. So I will say to the Senator that this will not give any relief if you take one away and put him at Mobile. The necessary number should be reinstated at the port of New Orleans.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if it is possible that New Orleans is the only Southern port on the entire South Atlantic coast that has the benefit of inspection?

Mr. GAY. I think not. I think there are others. If the Senator will look over the list, I think he will find that there are several others.

Mr. LENROOT. No; there are none except the amendment relating to Mobile. The next one is Baltimore, which is away up the coast.

Mr. GAY. There are 10 at Norfolk, as the Senator will see if he will notice.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And Jacksonville.

Mr. GAY. And at Jacksonville there are two. I do not know just how these districts are divided.

Mr. LENROOT. But they are not confined to ports. They cover certain districts.

Mr. GAY. I do not mean to say that they are confined to ports. I mean to say that these men are located at those ports, but of course they cover districts.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If I may interrupt the Senator, does he understand from the inspector's letter that there has not been any steamboat-inspection service at Mobile prior to this time?

Mr. GAY. They have recommended that there should be two men there. Where Mobile has been having this work done, I am not prepared to say. Where they get their inspectors from, I can not say.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The probability is that they have been getting them from New Orleans.

Mr. GAY. It may be true that they have been getting them at New Orleans.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The two amendments ought to be read together, it seems to me. As I read the two amendments, this bill gives them the same number of inspectors that they have now. It simply assigns one of them to Mobile.

Mr. GAY. This bill breaks up the arrangement in such a way as to make it inefficient, and to divide the work in such a way that it will not be of any benefit to either port. That is why I ask to have it restored as it was in the House bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the House for some reason left out Mobile. I do not understand from the evidence that was before us that it was considered there at all. So I imagine they did not go into it. A member of the committee, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], stated that there was a growing business there, and that they ought at least to spare one for that port, if not two. The committee, acting in the line of economy, undertook to make the six inspectors cover the two places, notwithstanding the estimate which was below that. The two matters ought to be considered together, of course. In one case, the proposal is to have one inspector less at New Orleans. That is the way it stands—one less than what was wanted by the department, and one more in Mobile. If we are to cut out Mobile entirely, that is one angle of it, and if we are to cut out the five and make it six, that is the other angle. If you move to cut out the amendment, and treat it all as one, then if you disagree and call it all one amendment, you leave six at New Orleans and leave the others out entirely.

Mr. GAY. If Mobile is entitled to or should have inspection service, I have no disposition to interfere with that, but I simply want to say that this change will injure the work of the port of New Orleans, and my amendment calls for the reinstatement of six assistant inspectors at New Orleans. Then the committee amendment for Mobile could remain. If the disposition is to change that in conference, that is a matter for the conferees to determine; but I do not think they should take service away from the port of New Orleans and give it to the port of Mobile, injuring the one port for the benefit of another. I favor two inspectors for Mobile and would like to see that amendment placed in this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the committee amendment, which proposes to strike out, in line 9, page 136, the word "six" and insert the word "five."

The amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. GAY. Now, I ask that my amendment, which has been stated by the Secretary, may be agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no amendment left.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that the Senator has any amendment now pending.

Mr. GAY. It reads now, "New Orleans six, Mobile one, Baltimore ten."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has been no motion to reconsider the vote by which the second amendment in line 9 was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I understand that without some further motion that leaves Mobile out of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless the vote is reconsidered by which the amendment to which the Senator from Wyoming refers was adopted, the amendment reading "Mobile, one, $2,350," remains in the bill. It has been agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Then I move to have two at Mobile, but to cut the salary down to $2,100 each, so that it can go to conference in that way. Then it will read, "Mobile, two at $2,100 each."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment referred to was agreed to will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "Mobile, one, $2,350" and insert "Mobile, two at $2,100 each."

The amenndment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a separate section the following:

That section 7 of the act approved October 6, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. STERLING. Will not the Senator withhold his point of order?

Mr. WARREN. I withhold it for the moment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, this amendment is in the same terms as a bill which I introduced in the Senate some time ago and which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment. There has been no opportunity to consider the bill in committee for the reason that the attendance of a quorum of the committee could not be obtained; but, Mr. President, I desire just briefly to call attention to some of the reasons for the repeal of section 7 of the act of 1917, the second urgent deficiency act of that year, and I will let authority higher than myself speak on this question. I quote briefly from a letter of the Civil Service Commission. They say:

In the performance of its lawful duties of administering the civil-service act and rules in the entire classified service the commission undoubtedly has had an opportunity of observing the effect of the restriction under consideration which no other Government establishment has had. The provision works a hardship upon many individuals in the service in that it prevents the Government from utilizing the services of a man who has demonstrated by every test that he is qualified and able to serve the Government in a superior capacity.

The provision sought to be repealed by this amendment is that provision of the act of 1917 which prohibits increased pay from lump-sum appropriations to employees transferred within one year.

Quoting a little further from the letter of the commission, from a concrete case which they cite, they state:

From the passage of this bill, however, no man could be appointed at an increased salary if the salary was to be paid from a lump-sum appropriation. Three days ago a young man appeared at the commission asking advice. He has graduated in law and has been admitted to practice before the New York bar. He passed an examination for claims examiner, which requires legal knowledge. He also passed an examination for temporary Census Office clerk. In ignorance of the restriction of the act under consideration, he accepted an appointment at $1,020 per annum offered him by the Census Office rather than remain idle. Soon after he was offered the position of claims examiner at $1,800 per annum in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. The Treasury Department finds he was employed at $1,020 per annum as clerk in the Census Office, and he can not receive more as claims examiner in the War Risk Bureau on account of the law. He thus has to continue in a humble clerical position in the Census Bureau or work as claims examiner at $780 per annum less than is usually paid for such services for an entire year, or abandon the Government service entirely. This case is typical of a large number.

Others have come to my own personal notice, Mr. President. The war emergency which brought the law into existence no longer exists, and now we have injustices continually, every day, to employees who are capable of filling better positions at higher salaries, and injustices also to the Government, which is not able to avail itself of the services of these men of superior attainments. I think it is time that this law should be repealed, both as a matter of justice to the employees and in the interest of the Government as well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, the point of order is well taken, and it is sustained.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the item for expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, add, at the end of line 4, page 9, the following:

Of which amount not to exceed $10,000 shall be available immediately.

Mr. WARREN. There is no objection to that amendment on the part of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer an amendment, which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee offers an amendment, which will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 5, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,000," so as to read:

Document room: Superintendent, George H. Boyd, $3,500; first assistant, John W. Lambert, $3,000.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to be informed about the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will be glad to inform the Senator further. Mr. Lambert is the first assistant in the document room, and one of the most valuable of the Senate employees. He is of use every day to virtually every Senator here. In a sense he occupies the same important relation to each Member of this body which Mr. O'Toole and Mr. Halsey occupy, and it does seem to me that these important employees of the Senate ought to be reasonably well paid. We know that with the small salaries they get, relatively speaking, it is almost impossible for them to make ends meet, and I hope the Senator will not make a point of order on the amendment. I do not think that anyone ought to make a point of order as to Mr. Halsey and Mr. O'Toole or as to Mr. Lambert. I do not want to criticize Senators who make points of order, but surely we all recognize the value of the services performed by those gentlemen, and we all recognize the very meager salaries being paid them.

With all due respect, it does seem to me that the pay of men of this kind is in a very different situation from the matter of increasing the salary of a man who stands around and does not have the important duties to perform which they have. I hope the chairman of the committee will not raise a point of order against this amendment, or against the other amendment which I understand will be offered in reference to the two gentlemen to whom I have referred.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the committee as well, are, in a way, at the mercy of whatever may be done here on the floor. They consider carefully in committee these matters as they come in. There are between 300 and 400 clerks of committees, and there are all these magnificently efficient clerks and employees about the desk, and about the rooms, some of whom the Senator has mentioned. I have never yet made a point of order against a matter involving the salary of one of these employees, and I do not want to do it if it can be reasonably avoided. It is, as I said, a most ungracious position in which I am placed. I must ask every Senator to be a little careful and consider how he himself would like to be put into the position in which the Committee on Appropriations is put when matters of this kind come up, because while A and B and C can offer amendments, and I can say that we accept and will let it go to conference, we can not support the honor and dignity of this body if we put in the bill a matter of raising the salaries of our Senate employees and let it go to conference with any expectation that we are going to permit the House to tell us what we shall pay our own men. Hence, you put the committee in the position of letting everyone present bring up any employee and every employee and have his salary raised, and then compel the committee, when they go to conference, either to sacrifice the dignity of the Senate or else be forced to sustain those figures. Is not the judgment of a committee which takes up all these matters together better than the judgment of A, B, or C, and different ones who may have champions on the floor?

So, as I said, while I shall not make the point of order, I entreat our fellow Senators to be more considerate, and that they work with and through the committee and not spring these various unexpected individual increases upon us here in the Senate.

I understand the Senator has offered an amendment relating to one man—to raise his salary to $3,000. He receives now $2,740. It does seem to me inconsistent, in view of the fact that only one or two years ago we adopted the so-called Jones amendment, which provided, first, a rearrangement of Senate committees and raised the salaries of clerks of committees, and also the other employees; and as we raised them from time to time, in view of that behind us and of this reclassification and line of increases ahead of us, the Senator should not press the matter. The Senator will understand that we have either to reduce by $240 every clerk who is receiving $2,500 or less, when the time comes, or to raise the salary. So that when that time does come there will naturally pass in review every single salary, and I think we ought to wait until that time without going further. Perhaps we have gone too far already. But they have all had the consideration of the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand it, the amendments that have just been offered did not receive the attention of the committee; they were not called to their attention particularly. However, I want to call attention to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], which, I believe, was adopted a little while ago. Of course, that amendment ought to have been adopted; no point of order ought to have been raised against it; it was an absolutely good amendment. The man in whose interest my amendment was offered, or for whose benefit it was offered, is one of the busiest men about the Capitol. He is always at work, and he is entitled to that wage, and I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, favoritism can not be allowed. There have been points of order made to amendments providing for increases; I know that there are no employees of the Senate more worthy of the increases than the ones against whom the points of order were made. Therefore I make the point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I say to the Senator that I did not raise any point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that the point of order is not debatable. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment. On line 4, page 6, I move to strike out "$2,500" and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,750."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report this proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, line 4, where it reads "two floor assistants at $2,500 each," it is proposed to strike out "$2,500" and to insert "$2,750."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a point of order was made a little while ago when an amendment was offered increasing this compensation to $3,000 a year. My amendment would add $250 annually to the salaries of these two competent assistants.

Mr. WARREN. They will receive an increase of only $10, and I do not think they will be satisfied with a $10 increase. They have salaries of $2,500 now, and with the $240 bonus they receive $2,740.

Mr. McNARY. If their salaries are increased to $2,750, they will still get the $240 bonus.

Mr. SMOOT. They will receive an increase of $10 a year.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment, and move that the figures "$2,500" be stricken out and "$2,950" be inserted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I hope the Senator will withhold his point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. I will withhold it if the Senator wants to say anything about it.

Mr. McNARY. I certainly hope the Senator will take into consideration the valuable services which these two capable, efficient men render the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I have taken that into consideration. If we want to begin it, let us start right at the beginning and give every employee in the Senate an increase. That is all there is to it. If we are not going to do that, I am going to make a point of order against any amendment that is offered for an increase.

Mr. McNARY. The answer to that is that some of the employees of the Government have received extra compensation at this time and others have not, and these two assistants fall in the class who need an increase in their compensation.

I am not asking an increase for anyone else. I have never yet during my service in the Senate asked for an increase in salary for any employee of the Government. I exceedingly regret the position taken by the Senator from Utah, and hope he will withhold his point of order so that we may have a vote on it.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President, I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah makes a point of order against the amendment, and the point of order is sustained. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Henderson	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Capper	Jones, Wash.	New	Smoot
Cummins	Kellogg	Norris	Spencer
Curtis	Kendrick	Nugent	Sterling
Dial	Keyes	Page	Sutherland
Gay	Kirby	Phelan	Swanson
Glass	Lenroot	Phipps	Underwood
Gronna	McKellar	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Hale	McNary	Sheppard	Warren
Harding	Moses	Smith, Ariz.
Harrison	Myers	Smith, Md.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absent Members.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. FRANCE and Mr. TRAMMELL answered to their names when called.

Mr. CALDER, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. KNOX entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. COMER, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. MCLEAN, and Mr. WATSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, pursuant to the notice I have given, I now move——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, have the amendments been concurred in, excepting such as may have been reserved?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Allow the Chair to hear the statement of the Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. Am I now in order to move the adoption of an amendment providing for an increase in the amount appropriated for the board of conciliation?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, any Senator has a right to a separate vote on any amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, but unless that right is now reserved the question will be put on concurring in the amendments en bloc.

Mr. PHELAN. I therefore request that there be a separate vote upon my amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the commissioners of conciliation from $100,000, as reported by the committee, to $150,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that this is not the time for the amendment proposed by the Senator from California. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, did not change the House text in that respect.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not sure that I understood the position of the Chair. The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] moved, as in Committee of the Whole, to increase the amount of the appropriation from $100,000 to $150,000, and on a viva voce vote the amendment was declared lost. He has now reserved the right to a vote upon that question in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But, if the Chair may be permitted to remark on it, that is not a reservation. The bill will be open to amendment after the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole shall have been concurred in. Without objection, the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be concurred in in the Senate. The bill is now in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I renew my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 151, line 2, it is proposed to increase the amount appropriated for the commissioners of conciliation by striking out "$100,000" and in lieu thereof inserting "$150,000."

Mr. PHELAN. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HENDERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. KIRBY. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I inquire whether the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Then I withhold my vote, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CALDER. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "nay."

So Mr. PHELAN's amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer an amendment to insert a new section on page 167, after line 14.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 167, after line 14, it is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 8. That section 11 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by striking out the first proviso and inserting the following in lieu thereof:

"Provided, That hereafter no journal, magazine, periodical, or similar Government publication, shall be printed, issued, or discontinued by any branch or officer of the Government service unless the same shall have been authorized under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Joint Committee on Printing, and such publication shall not contain any commercial advertisements: Provided further, That the foregoing provisions of this section shall also apply to mimeographing, multigraphing, and other processes used for the duplication of typewritten and printed matter, other than official correspondence and office records.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely wish to offer a word of explanation. In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for 1920 this requirement was placed on the Joint Committee on Printing:

But such publications as are now being printed without specific authority from Congress may, in the discretion of the Joint Committee on Printing, be continued until the close of the next regular session of Congress.

Mr. President, it is a physical impossibility for the committee to make the necessary examination into all of the publications of the different departments of the Government. So far 106 of them have been discontinued, and there are 287 more to be examined into. I repeat, it is physically impossible for the members of the committee to make the necessary examination; and, therefore, the amendment is designed to amend that part of the law so that it will not be compulsory for the committee to make the report as provided in the original act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

Mr. STERLING. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota if he can give some indication as to how long the bill which is now the unfinished business will take before a definite conclusion is reached upon it?

Mr. STERLING. I can not answer the Senator from New York very definitely. The further consideration of the bill ought not to take a very long time. I had thought that if we could have one full day for the consideration of the bill we might dispose of it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as one of those who have been interested in this legislation also, and hoping to see something definite done, I may say that there is at least one Senator away who will not be here for several days who desires very much to be heard upon this subject, and I think that fact ought to be taken into consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator refer to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who is now in Panama?

Mr. POMERENE. He is one of them; yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly the Senator would not have the Senate wait for two or three weeks.

Mr. POMERENE. I was about to say that I was not going to ask that that be done, but I thought he ought to have an opportunity to be heard upon this subject. There are certain features of it upon which he wants to be heard; and I think it may be said that if the Senators who are urging the passage of the pending bill would consent to have the bill referred back to the committee, so that some of these experts could reconcile their differences, or at least have an opportunity to reconcile their differences, they would expedite the relief which we all desire.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, that subject has already been considered by the chairman as well as other members of the Civil Service Committee, and I do not think any purpose will be served by sending the bill back to the committee. The bill has been before the Senate now ever since some time in February as the unfinished business of the Senate, and there has been more time than has really been needed for the discussion of the bill, but certainly ample time for its full discussion. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has had ample opportunity to discuss the bill, and he has discussed it to some extent; but, Mr. President, I can not consent to a postponement of the consideration of the bill on account of the absence of any Senator. I do not think it is quite fair or just to ask that the bill be postponed because it will suit the convenience of some Senator who is absent. I want to go ahead with the consideration of the bill. I had expected that the Senate would be in legislative session to-night for a short time only, because I understand that there is to be an executive session.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator does not desire to go on with the bill to-night?

Mr. STERLING. Except that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], I understand, desires to be heard briefly on his amendment, which is the pending amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand that there is to be an executive session.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Montana I had expected to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from Montana desire a vote on his amendment to-night?

Mr. MYERS. No; I do not desire a vote on it to-night. If an executive session is desired, I will withhold my remarks.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will proceed with his remarks to-night and discuss the amendment, even though we do not take a vote to-night, there will be just so much progress made in the consideration of the bill, and just so much time saved.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In order to expedite the matter, I suggest that if the Senator from Montana does not want to speak to-night we adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow. Let us pass this bill, or else dispose of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, before a motion to adjourn is made I want to be heard.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I am perfectly willing to go on with the bill to-morrow, just at the close of the morning business; or, if the Senator wants a recess to-night, let him move a recess to-night and begin at 12 o'clock, and then keep the bill before the Senate.

Mr. STERLING. It had been my expectation to move a recess at the conclusion of the executive session.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me it would be unfair to the Senator from Montana to ask him to make his remarks now when there is practically nobody in the Chamber. He says that he is going to speak for only a short time. He can make those remarks to-morrow and then we can take a vote at once.

Mr. STERLING. I should be willing to consult the preference of the Senator from Montana in regard to that, if the Senator from Utah would permit me to do so, but I had understood that the Senator from Montana was ready to proceed with his discussion to-night.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I have had it in mind to make a few more remarks. I have made a speech on this bill which has been divided up between two or three different days, and I have been withholding publication of it until I could make a few concluding remarks and then publish it all at once; but I am not particular whether I make the few remarks I wish to make to-night or to-morrow. If it is the intention to take up the bill to-morrow, and Senators want an executive session now, I am willing to make my remarks to-morrow.

Mr. STERLING. Would the Senator from Montana prefer to make his remarks to-morrow rather than to-day?

Mr. MYERS. I have no particular preference. If the bill is going to be up to-morrow, I would just as soon make them to-morrow as to make them at this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I seem to have started the discussion by asking the Senator from South Dakota the question that I did. The Senator from South Dakota knows that I am a friend of his bill, and have supported it, and upon one occasion I think I voted against recommitting it, so my question is not due to any hostility to that measure; but I can not help stating upon this occasion that I am deeply concerned over this situation.

Since January 28 there has been pending upon the calendar the Army reorganization bill, prepared and drafted by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, and reported from that committee. Something over a week or 10 days ago the House of Representatives passed an Army reorganization bill, and it is now in this body, in the Committee on Military Affairs. Until this question of the reorganizaion of the military forces of the United States is decided upon no Army appropriation bill can be framed and passed. The Senate's bill for the reorganization of the Army I have no doubt will give rise to long and very earnest debate, because it involves a complete reorganization of the entire military system of the United States from top to bottom, including many matters which I know very well will be matters of some contention.

So I beg to express the hope that the civil-service retirement bill will be expedited as much as possible, because if we can not reach the Army reorganization bill within a reasonably short period and dispose of it, and get the matter into conference between the two Houses, and then thrash out the radical differences which now exist between the two Houses with respect to Army reorganization, we will reach the point in the lapse of time when the Overman Act, which to-day temporarily controls the organization of the Army of the United States, may expire, which will result in a condition of utter chaos in the Army at large, and at the same time it will be utterly impossible for us to pass an Army appropriation bill which will be applicable to anything in existence.

So I want to express my concern upon this occasion. I am a friend of the Senator's bill; I shall support it; but I do hope that this matter—which I think perhaps next to the railway legislation is the most important legislation which can be considered by this Congress—will soon have an opportunity of coming before the Senate and being debated by the Senate.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I shall do all that I can to expedite the passage of this bill. The Senator from New York knows something of the difficulties that have been in the way. There have been calls for a quorum; there have been motions to adjourn at a time when we might well have been considering the bill; there have been speeches made, when the bill has been before the Senate for consideration, on subjects altogether foreign to it. Whole days have been consumed in such discussions. We ought to have a rule that would prevent it, and that would permit any Senator, when another Senator is discussing some subject foreign to the bill before the Senate, to call for the regular order, which would be the bill then pending before the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I must say that I believe we will succeed at an early date in disposing of this retirement bill; and let me say this one thing further:

This is a subject of immense importance, as every Senator ought to realize. Four hundred thousand employees of the Government are, I think to a man, demanding the passage of this or a similar bill; and I should like to regard it as an achievement of the present Congress that they passed an adequate civil-service retirement bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am especially interested in the passage of this bill, because I realize something of the demands that are being made upon Congress, and rightfully made, for increases of salary. I know something about the situation in the Post Office Department, and I think this will be an attraction that will help keep people in the service; and I sincerely hope that the Senator will insist, as far as is possible, on keeping the matter before us until it is disposed of.

I want to say further, that I am very much obliged to the Senator for his commendation of my proposition to amend the rules of the Senate so as to provide that a Senator shall at least talk on the matter before the Senate, or else be out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to say at this time, speaking for some Members on this side of the Chamber, that I hope nothing will be put in the way of the consideration of this bill. The Senate will have to meet it. The Senate will recall that a year ago it had this same trouble, when the bill was before a preceding session of Congress. I do not think it is fair to hold up the bill in this way. I think we ought to discuss questions and vote on them. If the bill is right, it ought to be passed. I think it is right. It is costing the Government money not to have some retirement bill, and by all means Senators should be willing to submit to a vote. If the vote is in favor of the bill, it ought to pass; and if the majority of the Senate is opposed to the bill, we ought to dispose of it for other business. I certainly hope that Senators will not prolong the proceedings, and interject extraneous matter just for the purpose of postponing a vote on the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I hope this bill will be acted upon promptly, too; but I want to say that I do not think it is necessary to change the rules of the Senate in order to get action on the bill. If we will enforce the rules of the Senate that we have now, we will get action on the bill without its being necessary to adopt any revolutionary rule with reference to speaking to the question that is before the Senate or anything of that sort.

I am not myself in the habit of discussing matters foreign to the bill before the Senate, but I see no necessity of always charging a delay in connection with a bill to what may be considered a desirable change in the rules of the Senate, when we have rules that if we enforce them will keep the matter before the Senate, unless it is displaced by a majority vote. So I feel sure that the Senator will be able to get a vote on his bill without even suggesting the necessity of a change in our rules, if he will insist upon complying with the rules that we have.

I desire to say that I shall aid the Senator in getting this bill to a vote, and I am disposed not to give my consent to any unanimous-consent request to lay the bill aside. If we will just enforce that rule, the Senator will get his bill to a vote, and he will get it to a vote before very long, unless a majority of the Senate are against it and vote to displace it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it is now nearly 5 o'clock; and since an executive session is desired, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, April 2, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 1, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, author of every good, we thank Thee for the blessings vouchsafed unto us, calculated to satisfy our physical, mental, moral, and spiritual necessities.

We pray for a more equal distribution of the same; that happiness and tranquillity may fill our homes, society, government, which means law and order; that the strong may help the weak, the wise the unwise, the rich the poor, the good the bad.

So may we live and develop all that is pure, noble, generous, wise, and good. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DISPOSITION OF AMERICAN TROOPS IN GERMANY (H. DOC. NO. 709).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, 29 March, 1920.

To the SPEAKER HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I am in receipt of H. Res. 500, adopted March 25, 1920, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House of the exact status of the American military forces now stationed in German territory; the scope to which their operations are confined under the terms of the armistice between the allied nations, the Government of the United States, and Germany; the extent of the authority exercised over them by Field Marshal Ferdinand Foch, commander in chief of the allied forces in the occupied Rhine Provinces, and how far their activities may be directed without express orders from the President of the United States.

The American forces in Germany on March 26 were reported to comprise 726 officers and 16,756 enlisted men. These forces are stationed principally in the Coblenz area, the exact location of the units being set forth on the accompanying map. They are occupying that territory under the armistice agreements, which, with its annexes and conventions, was transmitted by me to the Senate and published as Senate Document 147, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session. The paragraph specifically covering this occupation is Paragraph V of the clauses relating to the western front.

The original armistice, signed on November 11, 1918, provided that its duration should be 36 days, with option to extend. On December 13, the armistice was extended until 5 a. m. on the 17th day of January, 1919; on January 16, 1919, it was still further extended until the 17th day of February, 1919, at 5 a. m.; on February 16, 1919, it was still further extended to a date not fixed: "the allied powers and those associated with them reserving to themselves the right to terminate the period at three days' notice."

The American forces in Germany are at present operating under the terms of the original armistice and the subsequent conventions prolonging the armistice. The instructions proposed to be issued to the commanding general American forces in Germany, at the time of their occupying the Coblenz area, were submitted to the War Department by Gen. Pershing, and contained the following statement of policy:

The American forces will, however, undertake no action beyond the occupied regions, nor beyond that in strict accordance with the terms of the treaty. Any use of the American forces beyond that mentioned above must be specifically authorized in each case by the Government of the United States.

In reply, it was directed that—

It should be stated in the orders issued to the commanding general American forces in Germany that the function of the American forces in Germany at present is to enforce the conditions of the armistice, and that when a peace treaty shall have been ratified by the United States the function of the American forces will be as outlined.

Upon the ratification of the treaty of peace by the allied powers, an Interallied Rhineland High Commission was organized in the manner set forth in the message from the President of the United States to the Senate, containing the agreement between the allied and associated powers and Germany with regard to the military occupation of the territories of the Rhine. This document is published as Senate Document No. 81, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.

This commission having been organized and having formulated ordinances for the zone of occupation, the question arose as to whether these ordinances should govern in the American sector, and the representatives of the State Department and the commanding general of the American forces in Germany were instructed as follows:

This Government can not admit jurisdiction of that commission over portion of Rhinish Provinces occupied by the American forces. Consequently, neither you [representative of State Department] nor Gen. Allen should issue any ordinances which conflict with or exceed the terms of the armistice, which the Department [of State] regards as continuing in force as to the United States. You should, however, maintain the closest touch with the high commission and endeavor in so far as possible to conform administrative régime within territory occupied by American forces to régime adopted by high commission for other portions of occupied territory. There is no objection to your sitting informally with high commission provided you are requested to do so, nor of continuing your activities, as well as those of your staff, in connection with special committees to handle distribution of coal, etc. Ordinances, orders, regulations, etc., relating to financial and economic matters, including those similar to ones adopted by high commission, which it is desired to put into force in territory occupied by American forces should be issued by Gen. Allen as commanding general of American forces in Germany, but only after having first been approved by you. In general, endeavor to cooperate fully with high commission and avoid all friction with that body, while at the same time make it perfectly clear that you are still operating under the armistice as before January 10, and are in no way bound by the terms of the Rhineland agreement or the memorandum of June 13, 1919, defining the relations between the military authorities and the high commission.

Replying specifically to the remaining questions in the resolution of the House of Representatives, I will state that Field Marshal Ferdinand Foch has no authority over the United States troops in German territory, nor can anyone direct their activities without express orders from the President of the United States.

It should be stated further that under his general police powers, under the terms of the armistice, Gen. Allen has full authority to utilize his troops for the police of the occupied district, the preservation of order, and to repel any attack which may be made upon him.

WOODROW WILSON.

The SPEAKER. The message is referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. To-day by special agreement it was ordered that business on the Private Calendar unobjected to should begin where we left off last Thursday.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that these bills on the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JAMES E. CONNORS.

The first business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11410) for the relief of James E. Connors.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over for the present.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

GEORGE W. WOODALL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3564) for the relief of George W. Woodall.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I make the reservation of objection to the bill H. R. 3564 for the purpose of having a more complete explanation than is carried in the report, with special reference to the knowledge of the man who now seeks to be relieved from bond responsibility of the fact that the whereabouts of the man upon whose bond he was were known to him and not revealed to the Government.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I believe I can give the gentleman from Ohio some information on the matter, as the Committee on Claims went into that phase very thoroughly and insisted on getting complete facts before any action was taken. One Arthur A. Steele was indicted for a violation of the Mann Act in 1914. It was necessary to put up a bond of $4,000 cash, and the Southern Surety Co. refused to accept anything except cash. This $4,000 cash bond was provided by the prisoner's stepfather, Mr. George W. Woodall, who was not a professional bondsman, but desired to secure the prisoner's liberty until tried. He deposited the $4,000 with the Southern Surety Co., and the bond was issued. Now, Steele became a fugitive from justice and disappeared. There was every effort on the part of Mr. Woodall to locate him at his own expense. He went to several places where he learned Steele had been seen until he came to St. Louis, and there discovered that Steele was in the hospital seriously hurt. Mr. Woodall knew that Federal officers had information concerning the whereabouts of Arthur

A. Steele. He was informed of that at the police station where he went to secure information. Mr. Woodall thoroughly understood that the Federal officers knew where his stepson was, and for that reason he did not feel it was incumbent upon him to send any particular message to the Federal officers. He wrote a postal card back to his wife stating that Arthur Steele was in a hospital in Kansas City.

The postal card was seen by the Federal officers, and in a letter they seemed to indicate that he was trying to shield him. The fact of the matter is this bondsman was told that the Federal officers had the prisoner under surveillance, knew his identity, were ready to take him out of the hospital as soon as he recovered his strength. There was positively no desire on the part of the bondsman to shield the man; in fact, he spent his own money trying to locate him. The committee was informed that the expense that the Government was put to amounted to about $350, and we took that sum off the amount of the money to be refunded. In answer specifically to the gentleman from Ohio we have found, as the committee believe, after several hearings that Mr. Woodall did everything that he could be reasonably expected to do; that the Federal officers knew as much as he did about it, and that he is entitled to the return of this money which was put up as a bond for the return of the man who was finally convicted. I would like to say also, if the gentleman will permit, that this money is in the United States Treasury and the Government should return it, having no claim upon it now. This bill provides this money be returned to the bondsman——

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will yield, why has not the Government a claim upon this money as being paid in on a forfeited bond?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The bond was only technically forfeited. The fugitive was apprehended and put in jail and died as a prisoner.

Mr. GARD. The record shows, as I read it, that this man Steele was a fugitive from justice on account of the white-slave act, and that he was a son of this man Woodall's wife, and therefore Mr. Woodall went upon his bond for $4,000. He then disappeared, the bond was forfeited, and the money paid by Mr. Woodall into the court. It is claimed that he made efforts to locate Steele. Steele in the meantime, while again fleeing from police officers, fell from a railroad track in St. Louis, I believe, and was hurt in such a way that he afterwards died in the hospital.

Now, the report of the Attorney General, as I read it, corroborates this statement of Mr. Woodall. He states that the records of the department do not show that Woodall rendered material aid to the Government in the apprehension and prosecution of the defendant. Likewise the letter of the Acting Attorney General, Mr. King, states that despite the fact that he knew that Steele was a fugitive from justice, and that he was apparently closely in touch with Woodall, the man on the bond, Woodall instead of advising the Department of Justice advised his wife, under date of August 30, 1916, as stated in the report:

> DEAR WIFE: We are on the way with the car, and we will be home as soon as we can get there. Art is at K. C., but we didn't get to see him. He is in the hospital. He fell and hurt his shoulder.
> Your husband,
> G. WOODALL.

Under the circumstances, as shown in this record, I do not think this should be a matter to be passed practically by unanimous consent, and I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I will to give opportunity to the gentleman from Indiana to make his statement.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thoroughly understand the viewpoint of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] in objecting to this bill. I think, however, that he overlooked certain important facts that are disclosed here, and that upon reconsideration he will not object. The claimant in this case was the stepfather of the defendant, who was convicted under the white-slave act. The defendant was not present when the case was called. The bond given by the Southern Surety Co. was forfeited, and, of course, the claimant paid over the $4,000 indemnity, so that that money went into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. With pleasure.

Mr. BEE. When this money of the bond was declared forfeited there was no resistance on the part of Mr. Woodall or the Surety Co. to the immediate payment of the money into the hands of the Government?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No. It was immediately paid.

Mr. BEE. There was no attempt to invoke the processes of law to delay the payment or to subject the Government to any trouble in relation thereto?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No.

Mr. BEE. They paid it right over?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If this bond had not been given in the first instance, the man would have been placed in jail, and when his case was called for trial the Government would have had him there to answer to the charge of the indictment, and he would have been tried and sent to the penitentiary. Instead of being a fugitive fleeing from justice, he would have been in custody, and the accident would not have occurred that caused him to lose his life?

Mr. BEE. Right there, let me suggest to my colleague from Texas that that is true, but that interferes with the constitutional right of a man to be at large on his bail.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but the Constitution presumes that when a bond is given, when a man exercises his prerogative under the Constitution to go out on bail when his case is called he will appear, and when he does not appear the bondsman must make good.

Mr. BEE. Yes; and they did that.

Mr. BLANTON. And then they must not come in and ask Congress to reimburse them.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I will say in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] that this is in line with several other cases where the Government of the United States by legislative action has returned the money when the defendant has been brought in and sentenced. The Government accomplished everything it expected to do. It convicted this man, and he was sentenced, and he died thereafter.

Now, I know Mr. Woodall personally. He comes from my home city. He is not a professional bondsman nor a man of wealth, but he went on this bond and furnished the money to the amount of $4,000 in order that his wife's son might have his liberty. Mr. Woodall is not learned in the matters of the law. I call the gentleman's attention particularly to the fact that he did the natural thing—he went immediately to police headquarters in his own city and at his own expense got a police officer of the State to help him, and paid his expenses to go out and search for this man. Of course, he did it in order not to forfeit the $4,000. He went personally himself, and with the aid of the information that he received from the police department he continued the search, went on and on until he finally located Steele, who was at a hospital and who was injured, and he was unable to see him. He was informed that he was in the hospital and that he could not be seen and that he was under the surveillance of the Federal authorities.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another suggestion?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BEE. And in connection with that, the committee has reduced the amount so as to reimburse the Government for all its expenses incurred in connection with the case?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BEE. And the bill amounts to $3,600 instead of $4,000, the amount of the bond.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes. The Government is whole, and the committee deducted the amount which the Government had expended.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. When the bond was forfeited, did they bring suit on the bond?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No. When the bond was forfeited they paid $4,000 to the Treasury.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Was the defendant convicted?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The point is that Mr. Woodall did not think it advisable and necessary to inform the Federal officers when they already had this defendant in the hospital under their surveillance.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is true. If the claimant in this case made no attempt to find the defendant, I would not feel like arguing in behalf of the payment of this claim. But the claimant made every effort and went to the officers of the law, although not to the Federal officers, and employed an officer at his own expense and found this man, and at that time he did not give the advice to the Federal officers because he was informed they had put Steele in the hospital and he could not get away, and that he was under the surveillance of the Federal authorities. He ought not to be required to do a useless thing.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Ohio will not object to the payment of this claim.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I renew the objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

OWNER OF THE STEAM LIGHTER "CORNELIA."

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1004) for the relief of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the matter who the owners of this steam lighter are?

Mr. GLYNN. If the question is directed to me, Mr. Speaker, I will say that I do not know. This is one of the cases that I am not familiar with.

Mr. WALSH. It appears that this collision occurred in Boston Harbor rather recently—that is, in August, 1918—and that the vessel which was damaged did not have any lookout stationed on its bow, as is required by the navigation laws, and the collision resulted when both vessels were proceeding during a thick fog. But in view of the fact that it would seem that the lack of this lookout would be construed as such negligence as would not permit recovery, I can not quite see why the committee recommends this case to the Court of Claims.

Mr. GLYNN. I will say for the information of the gentleman that this is not the finding of any court. It is the finding of a board of investigation. This bill has already passed the Senate. We are simply asking that the claimants may have the opportunity to go into court and present their case. The finding of a board in investigation of the Navy ought not to estop the owners of this vessel from presenting their case in court. That is the way it would seem to me.

Mr. WALSH. If the private owners admit that they had no lookout on the bow of the vessel, would not that practically put them out of court?

Mr. GLYNN. It might. I do not know that they have admitted it.

Mr. WALSH. The findings of this board were that there was no negligence on the part of the personnel of either ship, except that the master of the Cornelia did not have a regularly stationed lookout in the bow of his vessel.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLYNN. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will note, on page 2 of the report, there is a very clear request on the part of the department that this matter be referred to the court for adjudication. I call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to that.

Mr. WALSH. That is what they do with all these claims.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. Wherever a board of investigation finds the facts and expresses no opinion on the question of liability, the Secretary shunts them along, when a bill is introduced, with the recommendation that the matter go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. He recommends favorable action on this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; that is what he always does.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. We have had many cases where he did not recommend favorable action.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman will admit that that is usually when the board of investigation expresses some opinion upon the question of liability, and when it is very adverse.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The statement of the department in this case is so clear that I am sure my friend from Massachusetts will admit that at least it might be referred to a court of admiralty for a determination of the justice of the claim.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask one further question. Is it usual in cases of this sort to make an appropriation for any judgment that may be hereafter rendered? I was under the impression that that was left until after the judgment was certified, and then it was taken care of in a deficiency bill.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that the certification of the amount decreed is the usual procedure.

Mr. WALSH. You have got several other bills that you are referring to the court, and they do not carry this same provision. I wondered whether this was something that was peculiar to the other body.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If I am not mistaken, this is the clause that has been put in measures of this kind by the Claims Committee for the purpose of certifying the amount decreed by the court, so that payment will follow.

Mr. WALSH. In some of these collision cases you might be authorizing quite an appropriation of money.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will say that the same provision is found in the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; in all these three Senate bills that provision is carried.

In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Connecticut and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

STEAMSHIP "MATOA."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1005) for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the steamship Matoa arising out of a collision between said steamship and the United States tug Lucille Ross off Lambert Point, Va., on the 17th day of January, 1918, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owner of said steamship Matoa by reason of damages to and detention of said steamship may be submitted to the United States Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States upon the same principle and measure of liability with costs as in like cases in admiralty between private parties with the same rights of appeal.

SEC. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owner of said steamship Matoa, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 15, strike out all of section 3.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GLYNN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SCHOONER "HORATIO G. FOSS."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1006) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is another bill in which the findings show that this vessel was anchored in the usual course of vessels——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, did anybody object to this bill?

Mr. WALSH. I am reserving the right to object.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Would it not be a good thing to have the bill read?

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection, if the gentleman would like to have the bill reported.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I will ask that the bill be reported, still reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss, arising out of a collision between said schooner and the U. S. collier Jupiter off Winter Quarter Light Vessel on the 18th day of May, 1918, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owners of said schooner Horatio G. Foss by reason of damages to and detention of said schooner, may be submitted to the United States court for the district of Massachusetts under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal.

SEC. 2. That, should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owners of said schooner Horatio G. Foss, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 15, strike out all of section 3.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentlemen of the committee if they heard anybody upon this claim or if they just took the report submitted by the Senate committee and reported the bill on that information?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The Committee on Claims took the report of the Senate committee without special hearings.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can give some information to the honorable Representative from Massachusetts. A similar bill to this in every particular was reported by the Committee on Claims of the last Congress and passed by the House of Representatives, but failed of passage in the Senate on account of the confusion at that time due to international affairs. As I am informed, at the last session, as at this session, the Navy Department has examined the facts, and in each case recommended that the claim was a proper one to be brought before an admiralty court. I am also informed that the Committee on Claims of the last Congress went as far as necessary into the merits and agreed with the Navy Department. The Senate has now passed this bill after having, as I understand it, gone into the question of its propriety for submission to an admiralty court. I have every reason, although I am not deeply familiar with the case, to believe that it has sufficient merit to be submitted for a determination of the facts and a decision.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that the claim of the owners of the Foss has any merit, in view of the fact that she was anchored where vessels were constantly passing, and apparently did not sound her fog signal, and was violating the international rules of the road?

Mr. TINKHAM. I am not an admiralty lawyer, but I assume that as the Navy Department has reported it twice to be a proper matter for adjudication by an admiralty court, and as the Committee on Claims of both this Congress and the last reported it favorably, and also as the House passed it during the last Congress and the present Senate has passed it, the case must have some merit. Inasmuch as this is a mere authorization for the claim to be submitted to a court of admiralty, it seems to me that no serious harm can come from its passage. As to the specific question that the honorable Representative from Massachusetts asked me I can not answer.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, is it not usual, where the department is in favor of having such a claim as this paid, that instead of merely suggesting that it go to a tribunal for adjudication the department recommends that the Committee on Claims allow it and have it paid? Is not that the usual method?

Mr. TINKHAM. Sometimes it is done that way and sometimes not. In this particular case there may have been some doubt on the part of the department which it wanted to solve by an adjudication in an admiralty court.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman question the proposition that this particular vessel at the time it was injured was anchored in the pathway that vessels usually took, and that it took no precaution required by the laws of navigation to prevent an accident?

Mr. TINKHAM. I do not know, as I stated before, much about the merits of the controversy.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall be forced to object.

Mr. TINKHAM. If the honorably Representative from Texas will withhold his objection for a minute, the facts are to be tried in an admiralty court, and if the facts are as the gentleman claims, that court would give an adverse decision.

Mr. BLANTON. The harm would come to the extent that the machinery of the Government would be put in action to have the trial, and a trial always costs money, and is sometimes very expensive to the Government as well as private litigants engaged in the transaction. I take it that the gentleman from Massachusetts would not want to send any such case to a tribunal for adjudication, the merits of which would not appeal to him——

Mr. TINKHAM. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON (continuing). If there were facts that surrounded it that led the gentleman to believe that there were no merit in it. He would not put into motion the machinery of the Government, which is always expensive.

Mr. TINKHAM. I assume that there must be some merit in the case or the Navy Department would not have recommended that it go to a trial court, and especially when the House committee in the last Congress went into the merits of the case and recommended its submission.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there are other cases on the Private Calendar more meritorious and needing attention more than this, and I object.

SCHOONER "HENRY O. BARRETT."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1222) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, I do so for the purpose of learning from the committee why it is that they strike out the section providing for the mode of service.

Mr. GLYNN. It was my understanding that it was done in order to follow the usual custom, and that it is the usual custom to report bills from the committee in this way.

Mr. GARD. If that section is stricken out, is there any special provision for service?

Mr. GLYNN. The general admiralty law, which provides what the mode of service shall be.

Mr. GARD. On page 1 it provides that it may be submitted to the United States court for the district of Massachusetts under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty. That is the only reference I see to a rule. I confess I do not know, and therefore I am seeking information as to whether or not it is necessary to have some section providing for the service of the process in this case and similar cases.

Mr. MACCRATE. The claimant is interested in getting into court, and unless the claimant follows the admiralty course of procedure he will never get into court with his case. When you lay down a provision that he must follow the rules of that court you have done as much as you can in regard to the procedure to be followed.

Mr. GARD. What I am trying to arrive at is whether the language I have just read is sufficient to cover a question of service. I do not know; I am asking for information.

Mr. MACCRATE. The rules of the court would lay down the procedure as far as the service is concerned.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLYNN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was unable to hear all that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACCRATE] said, but I take it that he assumed that the last section is unnecessary.

Mr. MACCRATE. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The United States court will not have jurisdiction until given it by this act. Once given jurisdiction, then the provision in reference to bringing suits aganst the United States would apply, and this last section would be wholly unnecessary.

Mr. GARD. There must be some service.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course, but it would have to be in accordance with the provisions of the act defining service.

Mr. GARD. There is nothing in this bill defining service.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It does not have to be; the general law with reference to service applies as soon as the court gets jurisdiction.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The Senate in introducing bills of this kind used an old form and requested the committee of the House to strike out this section as superfluous and entirely unnecessary.

Mr. GARD. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill if it is considered to be in conformity with the law.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 1222) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett.

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett rising out of a collision between said schooner and the United States monitor Ozark, off Five Fathom Bank Lightship, on the 19th day of April, 1917, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owners of said schooner Henry O. Barrett by reason of damages to and detention of said schooner, may be submitted to the United States court for the district of Massachusetts, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal.

SEC. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owners of said schooner Henry O. Barrett, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all of section 3.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GLYNN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DONNELLY & EGAN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3977) for the relief of the legal representatives of Donnelly & Egan, deceased.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, from a hasty examination of the report on this bill it would appear that the Court of Claims has passed upon it adversely. It involves the damages for the taking of some cotton during the Civil War.

Mr. DARROW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DARROW. The objection, as I understand it, at that time was absolutely because of the lack of establishing to the court's satisfaction of loyalty which has since been done. There was never any question about the taking over and use of the cotton.

Mr. WALSH. Well, the court, as late as November 16, 1914, after refusing a new trial and after having petitioned Congress for relief and having the matter referred to the court under the Tucker Act, handed down a finding that it formerly made. That is as late as 1914. The facts, as I understand it, are not disputed as to the amount of cotton and the value of it, but does the gentleman know as to the status of the legal representatives of these two original claimants at this time?

Mr. DARROW. The legal representatives are still living, as I understand it. There are relatives still living who are asking for this relief.

A MEMBER. Will the gentleman state the amount of this claim?

Mr. DARROW. $26,535.

Mr. BLANTON. To save time, unless the gentleman wants to discuss the matter, and in case the gentleman from Massachusetts does not object, I intend to object to the bill—that is, unless the gentleman wants to discuss it.

Mr. DARROW. I will say to the gentleman from Texas I have no desire to discuss the bill. I think it is a proper bill and ought to be passed.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, in the most solemn and emphatic manner I wish to protest against the passage of the resolution shortly to be reported to this House declaring the war with Germany and the late emergency arising therefrom at an end, by which means Congress, disregarding its duty to the country and the limitations of the Constitution, seeks to usurp the executive functions of the Government.

I can not persuade myself that any lawyer—I am not speaking now of political lawyers, but of real lawyers—believes that the Congress has constitutional authority to do this thing; nor can I persuade myself to believe that anyone who loves his country more than his party will vote for this resolution. To me it seems unthinkable he should do so. What would be the relations, internationally speaking, between our country and the German Government if this resolution should prevail? We would have then neither peace nor war, and no diplomatic relations whatsoever with the people of Germany and Austria. Necessarily we would have no voice in the settlement of any of the questions growing out of this war, because we would have taken ourselves out of the controversy and thereby denied ourselves the opportunity to see that a just and lasting peace should be concluded and kept.

Then, again, what will be our situation with reference to the seized property and ships which belonged to the nationals of Germany and Austria? We will, by the passing of this resolution, have placed ourselves in the position of a highwayman who puts a pistol to the head of an individual and demands that he surrender his property or perish. We say, in this resolution, to these nationals that if they do not surrender their property rights we will become a party to starving the men, women, and children of their countries.

We do not in the resolution, however, undertake to say there is any moral right in our position. We merely say that unless they surrender their property we will withhold from them all economic, commercial, and political rights. Whether our claims to this property be just or unjust, we will, by passing this resolution, stand discredited and dishonored in the eyes of all the peoples of the earth. How much better would it be for the Senate to reconsider and ratify the treaty of peace than for the Congress to be called upon to stultify itself in the sight of all right-thinking peoples everywhere. If the Senate would ratify the treaty, and it should then be found that any injustice or hardships were entailed under it, these could be corrected.

It is a harsh suggestion, but I think it is true, nevertheless, that this is but one more shifting of the scenes in this conspiracy by the Republican Party to discredit the President for political advantage. It is a desperate game at which the Republicans play in order to try to deceive the American people into returning that party to power.

History undoubtedly, though tardy, will record the truth and political punishment be meted out to those who aid in the committing of this political crime.

If not now, sometime, justice and fair dealing, national honor, and love of country will come into their own, and then the perpetrators of this political subterfuge will stand pilloried in the court of an enlightened public opinion. [Applause.]

WILLIAM MALONE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9046) for the relief of William Malone.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to pay, out of any money of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to William Malone the sum of $75, being the cost of an abstract of title sent to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in August, 1916, and lost by some employee of that office.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GLYNN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PETER M'KAY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 390) for the relief of Peter McKay.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do that for the purpose of asking concerning the amount of this compensation carried in the bill. The bill provides for a payment of $939. The reason I make the inquiry is because it appears on page 6 of the report as sent by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army that if Mr. McKay had come within the provisions of the compensation law with reference to injuries of employees of the Government, under the act of May 30, 1908, his compensation would have been $596.33. I do not like to object to the bill, because I realize that Mr. McKay was injured, probably badly injured, I think, from the reading of the bill, without any fault of his own, but what I would like to know is why a greater sum should be given McKay on a bill outside of the compensation law than he would have received had he been within the compensation law of 1908?

Mr. GLYNN. I do not know the committee have established any hard and fast rule. Mr. MILLER of Washington is more familiar with the case, and I will ask him to explain it.

Mr. GARD. That is what I want to know. Under the compensation law he would have received, according to the report of the Chief of Engineers, $596.33. This provided originally for $2,500, but a reduction was made to $939, which is a year's pay, as I take it.

Mr. MILLER. I believe the compensation law was passed in 1908, and this injury occurred in 1904.

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. And it would not come under the compensation law, as I understand it.

Mr. GARD. I say it would not. The point I make is that this man's claim under the compensation law would amount to $596.33, and not being under the compensation in 1904 he is not entitled to anything.

I would suggest that Mr. McKay, who legally is not entitled to anything from the Government, should receive no greater compensation than one who would come within the meaning and scope of the compensation law. Therefore if the gentleman is willing to accept an amendment providing that he should receive $596.33, it would seem to me to be following the ordinary course of procedure, and not giving this man any more or any less than other persons in the Government employ receive under the compensation law.

Mr. MILLER. I may answer the gentleman from Ohio that I believe it was the precedent prior to the enactment of the compensation law, in the settlement of claims of this character, to give one year's pay. I believe that was the principle upon which many of these claims were settled.

Mr. GARD. That was the principle.

Mr. MILLER. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that this injury occurred in 1904. I know the gentleman, Mr. McKay. He lost his leg under the most distressing circumstances. In the effort to heal himself he has lost everything he has in the world. The Senate passed a bill giving the old gentleman $2,500, but the House, under the precedent so long established by the committee, cut it to one year's pay, at the rate of pay he would have received at the time of the injury, which was 16 years ago.

Mr. GARD. I understand that. What I am trying to have the gentleman advise me of is as to why under the condition where this man, who was most unfortunately injured, and I think without any fault of his own, but without any recourse and compensation from the Government, should get a greater return by compensation than a man who came within the scope of the compensation law passed four years afterwards.

Mr. MILLER. My only answer is that it is in keeping with the precedents the committee reported in cases of like character at the time the injury was suffered by this man.

Mr. GARD. I think the better precedent would be that we provide for this man as much as would have been provided for him had he been within the operation of the compensation act. Is the gentleman willing to accept such an amendment?

Mr. MILLER. I can do nothing else if the gentleman insists on it.

Mr. GARD. I do not do it for the purpose of beating down this man, because it is an unpleasant thing to do. I merely do it because we should have this case correspond with cases under the compensation law.

Mr. MILLER. I can only say to the gentleman from Ohio that it is in accordance with other cases that were reported on by the committee, and this case would have received the same amount had it been possible to have had the bill passed before this. And I think if the gentleman from Ohio knew the distressing individual circumstances in this case, knowing him as I do, he would not object.

Mr. GARD. I dislike very much to make the suggestion I do, because I realize it is an unfortunate case.

I note in the bill that this is to be appropriated to or paid to "Peter McKay or his legal representatives." Is McKay living or dead?

Mr. MILLER. He is living.

Mr. GARD. Why do you use that language?

Mr. MILLER. I do not know why that language was put in the bill. I observed it. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. GARD. I think the bill should be corrected in these two particulars.

Mr. MILLER. I presume it is for the purpose of providing, if Mr. McKay should die before he got the money, that his legal representatives would receive it, which in this case would be his old widow.

Mr. GARD. Of course, that is the law. That if you make an appropriation to him in his name, and he dies when the appropriation is made and before he collects it, it would be collected——

Mr. MADDEN. It would not have to be probated if it was put in the bill in this way.

Mr. MILLER. The suggestion is made that if the phraseology of the bill is carried it would not be necessary to probate this amount in the event of the death of Mr. McKay.

Mr. GARD. I have no objection to it. If the gentleman will offer the amendment I have suggested, I have no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman offer his amendment?

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman cares to offer it in accordance with what I have said, in order that it may come within what is the unquestioned operation of the compensation law and afford this man just what he would have received had he been under that law, I should not object to the consideration at this time.

Mr. MILLER. I would not feel like offering an amendment, I will say to the gentleman, in view of the circumstances of this case as I know them, where the amount would not pay the doctor's bill and for the amputation of the claimant's leg.

Mr. GARD. I object, then.

SWANHILD SIMS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6198) authorizing payment of compensation to Swanhild Sims for personal injury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. May we have the bill reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Swanhild Sims the sum of $2,500 as compensation for injuries received on or about February 21, 1919, at Seattle, Wash., when she was struck by a truck operated by the United States Army.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Committee amendment, page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$722.25."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, as I read from the report, this woman, Swanhild Sims, while standing on a bridge was struck by a motor truck operated by a chauffeur of the War Department. The truck had skidded on its approach to the bridge, and went from one side of the approach to the other, and when it came across on the side where Swanhild Sims was it broke down the railing, and the breaking of the railing threw her off the bridge. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is the fact, Mr. Speaker, and I would say further that the committee considered the circumstances connected with this injury, and the fact that statements were made by the War Department officials that no blame particularly could be attached to the chauffeur of the Motor Transport Corps. An affidavit is filed by the chauffeur stating that he had had trouble for some months with the steering gear of his car and that he lost control of it as he approached the bridge, and that the skidding of the machine threw the machine from one side of the approach to the other, knocking down the railing, and this woman was thrown over and received serious injury. The bill provided for $2,500, and the committee considered after investigation that it would consider only the actual expenses, which include her hospital and medical expenses, and other expenses sustained by her.

Mr. GARD. Where is the affidavit?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The affidavit of the chauffeur will be found at the bottom of page 4 of the report, and states that the machine was out of control entirely, due to the stiffness of the steering gear.

Mr. GARD. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$722.25."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GLYNN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AUGUSTA LOUISE DE HAVEN-ALTEN.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the resolution (S. J. Res. 134) to readmit Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten to the status and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RAKER. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman will not object until the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE] explains it or will permit me to. This is a case of a family that formerly lived in Chicago. The facts in the case justify the consideration of the bill. I would like to submit a statement or will be glad to allow the gentleman from Colorado to make one.

Mr. RAKER. I will reserve the right to object, in order that the gentleman from Illinois or the gentleman from Colorado may make his statement. I would like, in preference to the right of reserving the right to object, to explain to the House the provisions of the affidavit of this lady, found on pages 36 and 37 of the hearings, where she states that primarily she came back to this country to obtain a divorce in order to obtain property. In other words, is the House of Representatives to resolve itself into a divorce court?

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives is not assuming the functions of a divorce court. The House of Representatives is asked to pass this resolution because only in that way can this woman, who was born an American citizen and all whose relatives for generations have been American citizens, be saved from absolute destitution. I understand the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has very deeply founded objections to any woman who marries a foreigner. I am not quarreling with that.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, not at all. I trust the gentleman would not put it that way. The objection I have is to an American woman marrying a foreigner and then, just the moment things do not go right, she commences to squeal and jumps back to the United States and asks for protection.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, the "moment" referred to is a pretty long moment. She started the divorce proceedings from this German as far back as 1904. She has not seen him since 1911, as the gentleman will recall.

Mr. RAKER. By her own written declaration she entered into an agreement with her husband that they should live separate and apart.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman knows very well what the reason was. She had two daughters, one of whom was about to be married, and the daughters regarded it as more or less of a disgrace to have a divorce in the family; but even under those circumstances she could not withhold her action for divorce forever, and again in 1910 proceedings were instituted and they are now pending. The case has been tried once and the husband's infidelity proven by undisputed evidence, but because it was not of sufficient "notoriety," because there was not sufficient public humiliation of the wife to satisfy the German court, the case was continued for further evidence; and except for the status of her husband as an officer of the German Army, which prevented a further trial of the proceedings against him——

Mr. RAKER. The lady stated on the stand, as did her counsel, that so far as the property in Germany was concerned, she expected it was gone; but in her affidavit it is shown here that this same German husband of hers told her that if she would withdraw her claim on the German property he would withdraw his objection to her divorce.

Mr. VAILE. Does the gentleman, as a Member of the American Congress, object to the American Congress proceeding in a manner which may prevent the German husband, who never did anything to conserve this property, from getting it? The gentleman apparently thinks that this American woman should permit all this property to go to her German husband to be squandered. This woman married on her eighteenth birthday. She was married 36 years ago in Switzerland. At that time she came into the possession of a very considerable inheritance, amounting to $100,000 in cash.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. VAILE. In just a moment I will yield. This $100,000 all went to her German husband under the provisions of the German law. The gentleman from California will remember that this $100,000 has all been squandered by this German husband, except possibly about $25,000, which is invested in German real estate.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. This is the statement of the defendant on page 36, an affidavit:

I am further informed and believe that my husband is prepared to withdraw all opposition to my demand for a divorce in the event of my withdrawing all claim to my property, real and personal, situated in Germany, which I have refused.

Mr. VAILE. If she has any claim left to that pitiful remnant of her former estate upon which her husband has been living and most of which he has squandered during those years following her marriage, why should we require her to surrender that? Her husband did not earn this money. It was earned by an American.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Would it not be a good precedent to enable American women who are uncomfortably situated over there to get away from the thraldom and come back to this country?

Mr. VAILE. I think it would be a good thing for them to come back, but this divorce proceeding was begun years ago.

Mr. BLANTON. They ought to have more sense and never live there.

Mr. VAILE. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman. This woman's father was an American naval officer, who retired after being severely wounded in action in the Civil War. He went to Switzerland to educate his children.

He went, not to Germany but to Switzerland, when his daughters were little girls. Now, I do not know just what the reason was. Some people think it is desirable to bring up their children in countries where they have an opportunity to learn other languages while they are young. During her father's lifetime they frequently visited the United States. Her father died when she was 15 years old. After that time she lived with her stepmother, a Swiss woman, who was the mother of two boys, half brothers of this petitioner, one of whom was in the French Army and the other of whom died a corporal in the Army of the United States in the Great War.

Mr. RAKER. In paragraph 2 of the affidavit she made when trying to get to Switzerland again, which she entered as a German subject, on page 36, she makes this statement:

Since my marriage I have spent very little of my time in Germany, for the most part traveling in Italy, France, Egypt, Algeria, and Switzerland. I was last in the United States of America in the year 1917.

But the moment there is a question of property involved she comes to the United States and employs counsel, who, with a fine-tooth comb rakes over the statutes of the various States to find the State wherein she can secure a divorce the most easily. The record shows that they were afraid the peace treaty would be disposed of, and that her property would be involved in that. So therefore she comes to Congress asking us to grant her this relief as a divorce court, so that she may acquire her property, not on the question of citizenship. I am ready and willing to extend any special act and to give any relief to those returning here who are seeking citizenship in the United States, who appeal to Congress for the restoration of their rights; but this whole record from beginning to end shows that her primal object, her main purpose is to get Congress to act as a divorce court, so that she may secure property through a release from her own act, when she has been traveling all over the world and cares very little about the United States.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that a woman who is a grandmother should not be very much blamed if she wants to get hold of her property. Even I, who am young and strong and a male, like to hold on to what little property I have.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Let me read her own affidavit on page 36:

2. That I was married in the city of Berlin (Prussia), Germany, to the Baron Eberhard Curt-Alten on October 21, 1886; that the issue of said marriage, two daughters, are married, but the deponent has severed all relations with my said daughters since the year 1912.

This mother that the gentleman speaks about with flowing tears, who at one time had an American father, who comes to the United States solely for property, has not only left her country but has repudiated her daughters, by her own affidavit. That is the situation.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I happen to have known the father of this woman.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, her father has a great record.

Mr. MADDEN. He was a distinguished captain in the American Navy, in which he served for 24 years. He was wounded in the service and retired as the result of his wounds. Her mother's father was also an officer in the American Navy, where he served for 45 years. Her other relatives were ambassadors to European countries representing the United States. There is every reason in the world why this bill should be passed. This woman's Americanism has never been questioned.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. So that the House may fully understand, the purpose of this bill primarily is to allow this woman to obtain property.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me make the facts as to the property clear.

Mr. MADDEN. We had a case like this in the House about two months ago, and the gentleman voted for it.

Mr. RAKER. No; I did not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me explain the property situation: The property is a trust left by the grandfather in an American bank for this woman. That property is now in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. RAKER. Well——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And the Alien Property Custodian does not wish to hold it, and, of course, can not dispose of it either now or in the future.

Mr. RAKER. That is none of his business. It is his duty as a sworn officer to hold it, and he must comply with the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, the United States Government does not want to take the interest on this woman's trust from her, and it can not take the principal.

Mr. MADDEN. What this woman wants is to get the property that was willed to her in trust by her grandfather, which property is now held by the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And it will still be a trust fund, no matter what we do.

Mr. MADDEN. It will still be a trust fund, but she can not get it unless she gets her citizenship restored.

Mr. VAILE. It is property which the Alien Property Custodian earnestly desires to return to her. Since the gentleman from California has referred to this as wholly a property proposition, let me call his attention to the fact that the Alien Property Custodian stated before the committee:

The injustice of this case is absolutely abhorrent to me.

The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] put this question to him:

You desire her unconditional readmission to the United States, to assume the character and privileges of a United States citizen for the purpose of primarily obtaining property?

To which Mr. Garvan replied:

I do not like the word "primarily," because I can not search the heart of the woman. From the testimony I would say that her first desire was to feel herself an American citizen—from the violence of her patriotism abroad during the war.

At a time when patriotism abroad during the war meant something our representative in Berne said:

This case is fresh in my mind, because it is about the only case I know of where an American who remained in Austria or Germany apparently acted like a good American.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Are both of the daughters of this woman married to German officers?

Mr. VAILE. They are married to Germans and reside in Germany.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They have grown up, have left their mother, they have gone their own way, and in accordance with the biblical injunction, they cleave to their husbands.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman from California suggests that as soon as we had war the grandmother left Germany and he also called attention to the fact that she had been separated from her daughters since 1912—five years before.

Mr. MADDEN. She began divorce proceedings three years before the war. She could not get service on her husband in the divorce proceedings, because he was a reserve officer in the German Army.

Mr. RAKER. The record, page 31, shows that she did get service. I want the House to understand this, it does not make any difference to me. The only fundamental question is not the property involved, not that she is an elderly lady, not that she married and went to Germany——

Mr. VAILE. Not that she is an American.

Mr. RAKER. She became a German subject under her own voluntary act.

Mr. VAILE. Thirty-six years ago when she was only 18 years old.

Mr. RAKER. She has been in the United States since that time. The very moment that a question of property is involved these people come back and appeal to the United States either through the divorce court or, if they can not get the divorce court to act rapidly enough in the United States, then they appeal to Congress, because of the reason of the fact that their father was a general or their mother was a woman of standing 40 or 50 years ago.

Mr. MADDEN. Her father was a citizen of the United States.

Mr. RAKER. That does not give her any right to come here and obtain a special act of Congress in the way of a divorce from her husband in order to obtain property. The only question is this: Is the great Congress of the United States to assume the attitude of dealing with personal property, when a person has deliberately of their own free will married an alien and become an alien, traveled over the whole world, cared little for her native country, but when she finds she is in trouble comes back and asks a special act of Congress to give her relief.

Mr. MADDEN. What is more natural in the world than that when people get into trouble they come back home to get the sympathy to which they are entitled.

Mr. BEE. They come back to their mother country.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from California now having given expression to his views, I hope that he will not object.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. BEE. Is this lady now in this country?

Mr. RAKER. She is; she came here last October, 1919, for the purpose of commencing divorce proceedings.

Mr. BEE. She is back in the United States now?

Mr. RAKER. She is.

Mr. BEE. Does not the gentleman from California think, under the circumstances, that if she made a mistake she ought to be given a chance to spend the last days of her life in her home country among her home people? The failure of this bill might prevent it, whereas otherwise she will have a chance in her declining days, among her own people in her own country.

Mr. RAKER. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that there are two propositions involved. The record is here, and I am not speaking of my own knowledge, but am speaking by the card and by the record. Her counsel found that he could not get a divorce rapidly enough and thought that the peace treaty would not be adopted immediately and therefore the custodian would withhold her property. Another question is there is a remnant of property in Germany, and if she got a divorce she might lose control of that. Therefore she comes to this great, big-hearted Senate and to these good-natured Members of Congress and says, "I was once an American citizen; now do this; it does not make any difference to you; restore me to American citizenship and I will still remain the wife of Baron Alten; I will still be the wife of a German subject and have an opportunity to go back to Germany and recapture the remaining property in Germany."

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman would not object to her taking any property in Germany as an American citizen?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MADDEN. We ought to give her every opportunity in our power to go back and take all of her property and at the same time let her enjoy her love for America.

Mr. RAKER. Let me make one more statement and then it is up to the House. I want to eliminate the question of property, the question of marriage, the question of the separation from the daughters, the separation from her husband. Does this House believe that we ought to adopt such legislation as will set a precedent that when any wife at any time in any case from Germany, Austria, or France gets into trouble with her husband we will immediately pass a special act giving her again the citizenship?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Did not the committee two years ago report a bill permitting an American woman to retain her American citizenship if she married a foreigner?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think we did.

Mr. RAKER. There has been a bill introduced in the House changing the law, and the committee voted it down, leaving the law as it is, that if an American citizen marries an alien she becomes an alien.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now it is different. I helped to dispose of it in that time, but I have revised my views, and in view of the fact American women are soon to be voting I have not the slightest doubt that Congress will soon give the right to a woman who marries a foreign man as it gives an American man who marries a foreign woman.

Mr. RAKER. To make the matter clear, I remember the gentleman's position six years ago in reference to a bill introduced by my colleague, I think, from California [Mr. Kent], which went to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the bill came here and I objected to it and finally the session adjourned without action. That was the situation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I fought it on the floor and killed it here.

Mr. MADDEN. Gentlemen, remember the old story of the 99 who were safe within the fold and the other who was astray and was brought back.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the distinguished gentleman from Illinois whether, after we receive this prodigal daughter back into the fold and place her in a position where she can secure her good American money that the Government has kept out of Germany, will that prodigal daughter remain here and spend the rest of that American money in America or go back to Germany and spend it there?

Mr. MADDEN. I think the experience of the last 36 years has been sufficient to justify us in thinking that she will stay here, in the hopes of living in comfort.

Mr. BLANTON. In view of the fact she is a grandmother I shall not object, but if she were one of these high society foreign-husband-seeking 24-year-old widows I would object. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten, daughter of the late Capt. Joseph Edwin de Haven, of the United States Navy, a native-born citizen of the United States and a resident of the State of Illinois, married in 1886 Eberhard Alten, an alien of German birth and parentage; and

Whereas the said Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten left Germany in 1911 and has not since returned, and in 1912 sued her said husband for absolute divorce, which suit is still pending in Germany, and has since 1911 lived apart from her said husband; and

Whereas the said Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten has since returned to the United States and renewed her residence therein and petitioned Congress to be readmitted to the status and privileges of a citizen of the United States, under and by virtue of the power and laws of the United States of America: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten, daughter of Capt. Joseph Edwin de Haven, be, and she is hereby, on her own application, unconditionally readmitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the preamble, and in line 3, page 2, after the words "Haven-Alten," strike out the words "daughter of Capt. Joseph Edwin de Haven" and insert "a native-born citizen of the United States."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Under the bill as it now is written by the committee when the bill came from the Senate it had a preamble which explained the marital state of Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten. Now, the committee has stricken out all of the preamble and the committee has stricken out in the bill the fact that she is the daughter of Capt. Joseph Edwin de Haven. The bill now provides:

That Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten, a native-born citizen of the United States, be, and she is hereby, on her own application, unconditionally readmitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

Is it not necessary to have something in this bill showing why she was reinstated?

Mr. VAILE. It seemed to the committee that that sufficiently appeared by the fact that she did apply to be readmitted.

Mr. GARD. No; it says that she is a native-born citizen of the United States in the following language: "That she is hereby, on her own application, unconditionally readmitted," which seemed to be entirely opposed to the declaration she was a native-born citizen. Why not insert in the bill some language showing why she was reinstated to her citizenship?

Mr. VAILE. I will agree to such language.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman knows the facts better than I do. I suggest that because I think it is absolutely necessary, otherwise we are conferring citizenship on a native-born citizen.

Mr. VAILE. I think the gentleman's point is well taken.

Mr. RAKER. It shows on the face of the bill that Augusta Louise de Haven was her name and that Alten was the name of her German-born husband.

Mr. VAILE. That is stricken out.

Mr. RAKER. No; in line 3, page 2, she is referred to as Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten.

Mr. VAILE. I am ready to propose a proper amendment.

Mr. BRIGGS. Could not there be a recitation that she married in 1886 an alien of German birth and parentage?

Mr. VAILE. I would propose the following amendment: After the word "States," in line 5, insert the words "who lost her citizenship by marriage with an alien."

Mr. BEE. Forfeited.

Mr. VAILE. Who forfeited her citizenship by marriage with an alien.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 2.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAILE. I now offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "States," insert "who forfeited her citizenship by marriage with an alien."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on striking out the preamble.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the joint resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. VAILE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF SHARON, PA.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10598) to provide for the payment to the First National Bank of Sharon, Pa., for certificate of indebtedness to the United States No. 3240, for $10,000, which has been lost.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman whether this certificate of indebtedness is past due?

Mr. GLYNN. It is past due. It was due July, 1918.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the First National Bank of Sharon, Pa., the amount of the indebtedness of the United States upon the certificate of indebtedness No. 3240, issued April 10, 1918, and July 9, 1918, for $10,000, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent, which said certificate has been lost, and is believed to have fallen into the wastebasket in the office of said bank and had been destroyed by fire: Provided, That the said bank shall give a bond of indemnity to the Secretary of the Treasury in such form, term, surety, and amount as the said Secretary may require.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem certificate of indebtedness of the United States of America No. 3240, of the denomination of $10,000, of the issue dated April 10, 1918, and maturing July 9, 1918, with interest from April 10, 1918, to July 9, 1918, in favor of the First National Bank, Sharon, Pa., without presentation of said certificate, the certificate of indebtedness having been lost or destroyed: Provided, That the said First National Bank of Sharon, Pa., shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of said certificate of indebtedness of the United States of America in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost or destroyed certificate of indebtedness hereinbefore described."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Was application made to the Treasury to reimburse the bank?

Mr. GLYNN. I understand it was. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS] can inform the gentleman as to that.

Mr. HULINGS. I will say to the gentleman that application was made to the Secretary and search was instituted throughout all the banks of the country, so as to procure the evidence that was sufficient for the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RUCKER. You could not make such a proof of loss as was satisfactory to the Treasury Department?

Mr. HULINGS. It was not that. The Secretary of the Treasury said that under the law now prescribed there was no warrant for them to pay the loss, but after going through the whole thing the Secretary has recommended that the bill be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas). The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division on the vote, just to check up.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 0.

On motion of Mr. GLYNN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill for the relief of the First National Bank of Sharon, Pa."

WILLIAM S. BRITTON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3610) for the relief of William S. Britton, formerly second lieutenant of Infantry, who has been erroneously dropped from the rolls of the United States Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask to have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reinstate William S. Britton, formerly second lieutenant of Infantry, who has been erroneously dropped from the rolls of the Army, and to restore him to his former position and rank in the service by the issuance of a new commission to date from the 14th day of May, 1919, and to continue during the pleasure of the President, not longer than to the date when he shall be released by military hospital authorities; and if such release shall have occurred prior to the passage of this act to honorably discharge him from his commission as of the date of such release.

SEC. 2. That said William S. Britton shall be entitled to receive the full pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of Infantry from the time he was dropped from the rolls of the Army until he shall be so discharged and that his status in, and relation to, the Army of the United States shall be in all respects the same as it would have been had he not been dropped from the rolls of the Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, how does he claim he was erroneously dropped?

Mr. MILLER. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that Lieut. Britton was erroneously dropped from the rolls on May 14, 1919. He was at that time in a hospital. He had been wounded in action, gassed, and shell shocked, and rendered unconscious, and remained in that condition for some length of time, during which time he was unable to give any account of himself as to where he was, or anything about it, and he was placed upon the records of the Army as a deserter and dropped from the rolls as such. The letter from the Secretary of War, which I have in my hand, and a portion of which is appended to the report, recommends that Lieut. Britton be restored to the Army and suggests the form of a bill, which form has been followed in the preparation of this bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Secretary has suggested that we legislate that he was erroneously dropped?

Mr. MILLER. Yes. The Secretary suggests that Lieut. Britton has been erroneously dropped and recommends that it be cured by this legislation, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He recommended that we legislate that he had been erroneously dropped?

Mr. MILLER. It might admit of that construction; yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is what I wanted to know, whether the Secretary recommended that.

Mr. MILLER. I may read the phraseology of the Secretary, which says:

On May 14, 1919, William S. Britton, second lieutenant of Infantry, was erroneously dropped from the rolls of the Army for desertion.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. Is it not within the power of the Secretary of War to correct the error?

Mr. MILLER. It is not, when a man is put on the rolls as a deserter. It requires special legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I am very sympathetic with the bill and think it should be passed. What I want to ask is whether or not the bill is sufficiently safeguarded to give expression to what it undoubtedly intends to do—to remove the charge of desertion? Lieut. Britton is now carried on the rolls as a deserter. Of course, he was not a deserter except in the merest technical sense. He was not a voluntary deserter, because he was not competent mentally. Now that his competency is restored does the gentleman think the bill is sufficient to correct the military record which now carries him as a deserter?

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that it is in the customary and usual form.

Mr. BEE. To remove the charge of desertion it occurs to me in line with the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, you ought to remove the charge of desertion against this man and then restore him. In other words, the charge of desertion heretofore pending against him should be "hereby removed," and then he should be "hereby restored" as an officer of the United States Army.

Mr. GARD. I think that is the better form.

Mr. MILLER. It is an excellent form, and is the one the department doubtless should follow, but they followed the other form.

Mr. BEE. The trouble is that the grandchildren of this man 50 years from now will be confronted with the charge of desertion against him, and with no chance of its removal.

Mr. MILLER. The military history of this case is in the War Department.

Mr. LAYTON. In 50 years from now do you not think that the bill itself will show it was an error and that he was erroneously dropped because of that error?

Mr. BEE. They would look at the bill——

Mr. GARD. They would look at the record and not at the bill.

Mr. MILLER. I may say that this is a time-honored way of doing this in order to reach this class of cases, and the Secretary of War has recommended it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EDWARD SIGERFOOS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2807) to correct the military record of Edward Sigerfoos.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Edward Sigerfoos, deceased, who was a colonel in the United States Army, and who was nominated by the President for appointment as brigadier general October 4, 1918, said nomination being confirmed by the Senate October 10, 1918, after the death of said Edward Sigerfoos, which occurred after his nomination, October 7, 1918, as the result of wounds received in line of duty, shall hereafter be held and considered to have become a brigadier general of the United States Army in the service of the United States, and to have held that office until the date of his death; and the President is hereby authorized to issue a commission as brigadier general of the United States Army in the name of Edward Sigerfoos, with rank to date from October 4, 1918.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEE. Reserving the right to object, who is in charge of the bill?

Mr. WELTY. I am in charge of it.

Mr. BEE. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. This does not affect any pensionable status with regard to any of this man's family?

Mr. WELTY. I think not.

Mr. BEE. I do not object to the bill, but I do not think it would be proper to fix a pensionable status by reason of this correction.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Sigerfoos was commissioned as an officer in the United States Army after the breaking out of the war with Germany. He was nominated by the President to be a brigadier general on October 4, 1918, and October 10 the nomination was confirmed by the Senate.

On the evening of October 20 The Adjutant General received a cablegram from France stating that Gen. Sigerfoos had been wounded and died of said wounds received October 7, and that on the next day, October 21, Mrs. Sigerfoos received the commission, and which commission was returned at the request of The Adjutant General, because Gen. Sigerfoos died before the Senate confirmed his appointment. Gen. Sigerfoos received the distinguished service medal and died on the field of battle, and I hope that there will be no objection to the consideration of this bill at this time. It simply authorizes the President to again deliver this commission to the widow.

Mr. BEE. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information and maybe offering an amendment. In line 10 this language is used:

Shall hereafter be held and considered to have become a brigadier general, United States Army, in the service of the United States, and to have held that office until the date of his death.

I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if that language should not be changed so as to read and better express the purpose of the bill: "Shall hereafter be held and considered to have been a brigadier general in the United States Army in the service of the United States at the time of his death"?

Mr. WELTY. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that this bill was passed in this language by the Senate, and approved by the Committee on Military Affairs, and I would not like to have it go back to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Well, that argument is not at all persuasive, merely because the language is in a bill that is sent over here from the other branch. When did he become a brigadier general under this law?

Mr. WELTY. He was dead at the time the Senate confirmed him. The Senate confirmed him on the 10th of October, and he was killed in action on the 7th of October. Under the ruling of the War Department no commission can be issued to a person unless he is living at the time the Senate confirms him.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think he would have become a brigadier general——

Mr. WELTY. If he had lived three days longer he would have been a brigadier general. The commission was issued by The Adjutant General and by him sent to Mrs. Sigerfoos.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The commission would have issued as of the date of the appointment and not of confirmation.

Mr. WELTY. Yes; but under the ruling of the War Department unless a person is living at the time the Senate confirms the appointment the commission must be withdrawn, and The Adjutant General wrote to Mrs. Sigerfoos and asked her to return that commission under that ruling. This bill is simply to grant authority to the President to send that commission to Mrs. Sigerfoos for her to preserve.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words in order to ask a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman indicated that under the rules of the War Department this officer would have become a brigadier general on the date that he was confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. WELTY. On the date of his appointment.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that under the rules of the War Department, even if he was appointed by the action of the War Department and later on confirmed by the Senate, he would not actually become a brigadier general in the service of the United States until he evidenced an acceptance of that commission?

Mr. WELTY. That part of it is correct; but in case of death, as I understand it, if the officer is living when confirmed the commission will issue.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the commission would have to be sent to him and accepted by him before, as a matter of fact, he could become a brigadier general.

Mr. WELTY. Gen. Sigerfoos was in command of a brigade at the time he was killed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WELTY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12530) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object. Is not this one of the bills that has already been passed?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. No. This has been on the calendar for several weeks.

Mr. WALSH. Then I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill has a privileged status.

Mr. BLANTON. I object. It has a privileged status another day.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It may save a day for other matters which may be necessary.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is not necessary.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. There are a number of formal committee amendments, and I ask that I may be permitted to present them en bloc after the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to present a number of committee amendments en bloc. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

Page 55, strike out lines 8, 9, 10, and 11.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I realize that a fleet of dreadnoughts and a squadron of armored tanks could not stop the passage of a bill of this kind, and I do not intend to waste any time of the House in trying to do it; but I do want to say a word in commendation of the splendid service rendered to this House and this country by two of our colleagues. I refer to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

It is not a pleasurable task for any Member of Congress to object to private bills. Whenever objection is made, to a greater or less extent you hurt the feelings of your colleagues specially interested in those measures. Hence many Members hesitate to oppose private bills. But I do want to say that the whole country should feel indebted to these two gentlemen for the magnificent service rendered, not just once in a while, but all the time, for these two distinguished gentlemen are always on the job. In addition to finding time for all their other tasks with which they are burdened the same as we are, in addition to attending to all their other duties as Members of Congress, every time a claims day comes these gentlemen are on the floor of the House constantly, many times going without their noonday meal even. Every one of these private bills that is brought up here receives their attention. They have made a personal investigation of it. They are familiar with the facts. They know the merits and demerits of it, and when demerits appear they have the courage of their convictions to stand up here and object. It means a whole lot of hard work. The constituents of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the constituents of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] will never realize the many hours of hard, tedious work that these gentlemen have put on these various bills. They are only following in the footsteps of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who used to perform this same valuable service. They have taken his place in a large measure. I do not believe in throwing flowers at people after they are dead and giving them no recognition while they are living. That idea has prompted me to express here to-day, so that it may go into the RECORD, this slight and humble, yet earnest and appreciative, commendation of the splendid service rendered by these two colleagues of ours. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. FULLER of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CROW TRIBE OF INDIANS—REREFERENCE.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the calendar Senate bill 2890 and rerefer it to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the calendar Senate bill 2890 and rerefer it to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GARD. Let us have the bill reported.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (S. 2890) to provide for the allotment of lands of the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, what is the request?

The SPEAKER. The request is that it be rereferred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SNYDER. I desire to have it referred back to the committee for further action.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the so-called Nolan bill for the relief of the Pension Office. It was passed three weeks ago on a day that I was absent from the House. I now ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on that bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

M'CLINTIC-MARSHALL CONSTRUCTION CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6092) for the relief of the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed for the present.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, have we a right to have the bill disposed of at the present time?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman's request is granted, it would stay on the calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. Where it is objected to it could not be called up later; but if the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is granted, it may be called up again this afternoon.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I ask that the bill may be passed for the day.

Mr. BLANTON. If it will not be taken up again to-day, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ALBERT T. HUSO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12333) for the relief of Albert T. Huso.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I see that this bill involves $753, and the Postmaster General, under date of February 11 last, states that the postmaster was guilty of negligence within the meaning of the statute of 1888. No evidence has been submitted to the department to warrant a different action in this case. Has any evidence been submitted to the committee which would justify a favorable action upon this claim in view of the attitude of the department? It would appear that there are no additional facts set forth in the report on the bill. It is a dangerous thing to establish these precedents in these cases.

Mr. GLYNN. The evidence shows clearly enough that the postmaster had not changed the combination on the safe for some four or five years. But that did not seem to be very material or very important to the committee in view of the fact that this safe was blown open by burglars with dynamite. There is a provision in the postal regulations which provides that the inner door of the safe shall be locked. You who know anything about safes know that there is a thin door in many safes, hardly thicker than a piece of tissue paper, one-eighth of an inch or less in thickness, and which is absolutely no protection whatever to the contents of that safe. The outer door was locked, and that, of course, is a protection. But when a burglar can blow open the outside door of a safe he is not going to be held up by the thin inside door. I am not referring now to the heavy door underneath but to the thin door inside, which did not happen to be locked.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly the burglar is not going to be held up if the door is unlocked, as it was in this case. Having blown open the outer door they found the inner door unlocked.

Mr. GLYNN. Which is so thin that it offers no protection.

Mr. WALSH. That depends on the kind of a safe; some are hard steel doors with very secure locks, and sometimes it requires considerable drilling even before they can get through the inner door. I do not know anything about the facts of this case because they are not fully stated, but the laws and regulations of the Post Office Department require that the inner door shall be locked, and in this case it was not.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, this little post office is in a small town of 150 people. I do not know what the revenue of the office was, but probably $300 or $400. It is not to be expected that a young man who is hustling after business in a country store can be expected to be acquainted with all the rules and regulations of the Post Office Department, which require that the inner door of the safe shall be locked.

But, as is shown in the report of the committee and also in the letter from the Postmaster General, this safe was blown by burglars, and, as has been stated, even if the inside door had been locked it would have afforded no protection against these burglars with dynamite. Under the circumstances it would seem fair that the postmaster should be reimbursed. There are plenty of precedents for this. It has been the custom of Congress to reimburse postmasters in many instances. This bill was reported and passed by the House some years ago.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the gentleman could make the same argument in case the outer door was closed but unlocked and they did not have to blow it open with dynamite. The regulations require and under some administrations at least we have had postmasters who were familiar with the law and the regulations. It requires that they shall keep the stamps and other valuables of the office in a safe of a certain kind and that the inner door shall be locked. That might not be any protection if blown open by dynamite, but the regulations do not say that if blown open by dynamite the responsibility on the part of the postmaster ceases.

Mr. HAUGEN. Let me read from the Postmaster General's letter. It is as follows:

> The evidence relative to the burglary of March 12, 1913, shows that the post office was forcibly entered by burglars, who apparently worked the combination of the safe therein, from which they took the postage stamps and money-order funds, as claimed by the postmaster; but the postmaster had failed to lock the inner doors of his safe and had not changed the combination since the safe came into his possession, four or five years previously.
> Relative to the burglary of October 2, 1913, the evidence shows that burglars forcibly entered the post office and blew open the outer doors of the safe, from which they took the postage stamps, as claimed by the postmaster. In this instance the inner door of the safe had not been locked.

Now, that is the practice of the department, but, after all, the door was forced open.

Mr. KEARNS. Do these small post offices keep safes for money and stamps?

Mr. WALSH. Some classes do.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman says this is a town of only 150 inhabitants.

Mr. HAUGEN. The town is in my home county. I have known this postmaster ever since childhood. He is a man of high standing and of absolute veracity. He conducted a store in this town, the population of which is about 150 inhabitants.

Mr. WALSH. It has become a sort of a habit to blow that safe open, as this is the second time it has been burglarized within six months.

Mr. HAUGEN. There have been several burglaries in that vicinity, not in this particular post office but in that vicinity. The gentleman knows——

Mr. KEARNS. Do the post offices of that size keep a safe?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. GLYNN. The regulation require that he shall be responsible for the stamps, and if——

Mr. KEARNS. But is a safe required?

Mr. WALSH. When they get a safe there are certain regulations applying to it with which they are obliged to comply.

Mr. KEARNS. Suppose they had no safe and the store had been broken open and the stamps or money taken?

Mr. WALSH. It depends upon the circumstances as to whether it would be considered negligible. In this case the Postmaster General thinks it was negligible.

Mr. KEARNS. I know of post offices that have no safes at all.

Mr. LAYTON. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. WALSH. I reserved the right to object in order to get a little more information than is contained in the report.

Mr. GLYNN. I will say this to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I have been a postmaster. I know the kind of safe the Government furnished to me in a town of 10,000 people. The outside door is probably an inch and a half thick and ought to be locked, and then there was an inner box of about the same thickness and above that was the thinnest kind of door that was absolutely no protection. There is no sense of having it. That is about the same sort of safe as this kind. Why, a man with a hammer could strike it a blow and shatter it. Now, it seems to me we ought not to require a high degree of diligence in the case of a postmaster living in a village of 150 people where he has a good many other things to do. That kind of a safe is not any protection anyway. A burglar can blow it up and blow it all to pieces in very short order.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, if we establish a practice here of paying these claims for losses that the department indicates, and it is not controverted, result in part from negligence and let down the doors, why our postmasters will not take any care of the property at all. Now, in the first instance they did not blow open this safe, they unlocked it. That occurred in March. In that instance the inner door was unlocked and a part of these stamps were abstracted. Again in October they came along and although the combination on the outer door had not been changed they blew it open with dynamite and again found the inner door unlocked. Now, it seems to me the circumstances, with the nonconformity with the postal laws and regulations, are not such as to warrant us in expending over $800 in settlement of this claim, and I am inclined——

Mr. HAUGEN. The Postmaster General states the evidence shows in the last burglary that the burglar forcibly entered the post office and blew open the outer door of the safe.

Mr. WALSH. That is the October affair, not the one that occurred in March. Now, the postmaster knew of the one that occurred before and he had a little experience and he should have profited a little by it it seems to me. He worked the combination of the safe and the postmaster had failed to lock the inner door and had not changed the combination since the safe came into his possession, four or five years previously.

Mr. HAUGEN. This was in a country store; everybody understands that these small safes afford no protection against burglary but do afford protection to the contents against fire. That is about the only purpose of these small safes. The smaller post offices do not have burglar proof safes. What added protection does changing the combination give—whether it is changed or not?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not easier to blow the safe than to work the combination?

Mr. GLYNN. As a matter of fact a large proportion of these country stores are said to hang the combination out and to say "Do not blow up the safe, here is the combination," because it is absolutely no protection against burglarly.

Mr. HAUGEN. It takes but a few minutes for an expert to blow a safe of that kind. One of the banks in our county—this same county—was robbed of over $30,000 in bonds recently.

Mr. WALSH. After all, there may be some distinction for paying for losses that occur through negligence and paying a burglar for coming and stealing a valuable piece of property. There is a little distinction. But if you are going to say to these people do this and violate the regulations, and then we will pass a special bill and say we will credit your account so much, when only the other day we passed a $13,000 claim, in my judgment we are simply inviting these people to be careless. I am rather doubtful about the justice of this claim and I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

AUTHORIZING DISPOSAL OF LAND AT WATERVILLE, ME.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3187) to dispose of a certain strip of public land in Waterville, Me.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell to the owner of the abutting land for cash the strip of land fronting 10 feet on the southeasterly side of Elm Street and extending, of that width, southeasterly along the southwesterly side of the Federal building site in Waterville, Me., a distance of 122 feet 4½ inches, more or less, at a price not less than the pro rata square-foot cost of the land paid by the United States, which strip is not needed by the Government; to convey said land to the purchaser by the usual quit-claim deed; and to deposit the proceeds of such sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt. Or the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, grant said owner an easement in perpetuity in said strip of land for driveway purposes, charging therefor such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury deems just and reasonable.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PETERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WALSTON H. BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 495) for the relief of Walston H. Brown, sole surviving partner of the firm of Brown, Howard & Co., and of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was reported in full.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the chairman, I move that this bill be passed over for the day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be passed over for the day. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ESTATE OF HENRY A. V. POST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2300) for the relief of the estate of Henry A. V. Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. May we have this one reported, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read in full.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be passed over for the day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The Clerk will report the next bill.

OWNER OF DERRICK "CONCORD."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9629) for the relief of the owner of the derrick Concord.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman the reason for the amendment on page 2.

Mr. GLYNN. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLEARY] perhaps can explain that. Frankly, I can not.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, the amendment of the committee, as stated in the bill and in the report, shows that section 2 should be stricken out and other language inserted in section 1. There is a confusion in the amendment, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has noted, and the first four lines and down to the proviso should be retained in the bill instead of having them stricken out. The part to be stricken out was simply the proviso in section 2, in order to have it conform to the form the Senate has used, and which the House Committee on Claims adopted in the bills already passed.

Mr. WALSH. But the amendment in reference to notice being given to the Attorney General is that in the form carried heretofore in bills of this class?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is the form that the House has insisted on in several bills that have gone through the committee and the House.

Mr. GARD. We passed a bill a while ago in which there was nothing of that kind.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I was trying to explain that. These three bills that passed did not provide that the Attorney General should appear and defend the United States, although that is implied, of course, in the Senate bill. The House form as it stands puts that provision in, and at the same time provides that the money shall be paid out of the United States Treasury out of any fees not otherwise appropriated. By an error section 2 was to be stricken from the bill entirely, where only the proviso to section 2 should be stricken out, and the form retained as in the other bills.

Mr. WALSH. The proviso in section 2 is used in the amendment to section 1?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. And that is the reason it should be stricken out in section 2. Section 2 should remain as it is, except for the proviso, in order to make it concur exactly in form with the other bills.

Mr. WALSH. I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the derrick Concord, arising out of collision between said derrick and the U. S. S. Robin on January 10, 1919, at the north pier of the Merritt & Chapman Derrick & Wrecking Co.'s dock at the district salvage base, Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y., for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owner of said derrick Concord by reason of damages to said derrick, may be submitted to the United States court for the eastern district of New York under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same right of appeal.

SEC. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owner of said derrick Concord, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provision of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

Also the following committee amendments were read:

On page 2, line 9, after the word "appeal," strike out the period, insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act."

Second amendment: Page 2, strike out all of sections 2 and 3.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The first amendment should be disposed of first.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, is this to have a suit brought in admiralty?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why do you put in this proviso to the effect that the Attorney General shall be notified, when you refused to put it in the Senate bill a little earlier in the afternoon and insisted at that time it was not necessary?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if I understood the proposition at that time, the question was not whether the Attorney General should be notified, which would be done as a matter of course, I presume, but whether or not the money should be paid out of the Treasury of the United States under this act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] very distinctly called attention to the fact that the bill then under consideration did not provide how the United States should be brought into court and how notice should be made.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Ohio called attention to section 3, which provided for service, and that was stricken out in all these bills.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio called attention to the fact that the bill made no provision as to how the United States should be notified, unless I misunderstood the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. In order to settle the dispute I may say that the idea that I intended to convey is given a better expression by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio conveyed it very distinctly at the time, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the gentleman from Connecticut, and the gentleman from Iowa insisted it was not necessary to describe how notice should be served, because there was a general statute on the subject. If there is a general statute, what is the purpose of putting this in?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will pardon me, the question, as I understood it and as my colleague understood it, was that section 3 provided for a service of process, which we stated would be cared for under admiralty laws and that the section was not necessary.

Now, as to the notice of the Attorney General, that question, to my knowledge, did not come into the proposition at all, but the controversy was on section 3.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It was practically the same question. That is what I want to get at, whether it is necessary. In that bill you made no provision as to how notice should be served on the United States. There is no provision, except to notify the Attorney General or the district attorney of the United States. I understood from the gentlemen all around, then defending the bill, that it was not necessary to have any specific provision, and no specific provision is in that bill. Now, what I want to know is, if I may properly ask that question, if it was not necessary in the former bill to provide how the United States should be notified why it is necessary in this bill?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I do not think it necessary at all, Mr. Speaker, but this is the House form, and we endeavored to make the House form comply substantially with the Senate form as they send bills to us from over there.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is better practice, if the House has a form and the Senate has a form, for the committees to get together and have the same form, because it is ridiculous for the House to pass a Senate bill in one form and say that is sufficient and then insist that a bill in the House shall be amended according to the House form in order to make it sufficient. It is not necessary to amend one in order to make its form different. I have no objection to the amendment. I know the proposition has been in many bills, but if this amendment is necessary, it ought to have been in the other bills that were passed. If it is not necessary in the other bills, it is just wasting time to pass it in this bill.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The confusion arises because of the forms adopted by the Senate committee and the House committee. If the gentleman desires, we will move to strike out this provision and insert section 2.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is to strike out the provision and insert the Senate proviso.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I believe we can substitute the Senate provision.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McKEOWN. I notice that there are a great many of these claims for damages done by vessels of the United States, and I take it that that occurred during the congestion during the war. But I want to know if this committee has any information as to whether any attempt is being made by the department to bring to the attention of their employees this negligence which is going on and which results in the United States being mulcted in damages every time some Government boat bumps into some other craft, resulting in a suit being brought for damages against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In each case where a bill is presented the committee immediately takes it up with the department, and the department sends full information regarding it. I presume they endeavor to prevent a recurrence in the future. In this case the Navy Department requested that this bill be passed, so that the claim may be passed upon by the courts.

Mr. McKEOWN. I want to know if the department is taking steps to prevent in the future accidents of this kind that are occurring now, for which we shall have to pay damages.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I could not answer that question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment. On page 2, line 21, strike out the line beginning "Provided" and the remainder of section 2, leaving section 2 remain in the bill with that exception.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 2, lines 21, 22, and 23, covering the proviso, "Provided, That such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is an amendment to text. The way to do is to agree to this amendment and then disagree to the committee amendment.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I offer this amendment now to strike out the proviso.

The SPEAKER. The committee amendment strikes out the proviso and the rest.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Is it not possible to substitute an amendment for the committee amendment from the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to strike out the proviso on lines 21, 22, and 23. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the question now is merely upon the amendment making an appropriation for the payment of the judgment. I do not suppose it makes any material difference, but in the case of private claims, where we pay a claim, it is usual to make an appropriation for the payment of the claim, because that is what we do; but it is not usual, where we provide for a suit being brought against the United States, to provide in the same act for the payment of the judgment. Judgments against the United States, when the time for appeal has expired or appeal has been refused, are certified by the auditors or the Court of Claims, or whoever has charge of the matter, to the House of Representatives, and are included as a matter of course in the general deficiency bill. It seems to me that that is the better practice on the whole.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman that that is the better practice, but I may say that the Committee on Claims has passed out a number of bills providing that a certification from the court shall mean payment of the claim, just as it is carried in this section 2.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know it has sometimes been done and sometimes it has been refused to be done. I think it would be just as wise for the Committee on Claims to adopt the policy, wherever we authorize a suit to be brought, to provide for the payment of the judgment outside of the bill. The advantage of that is that where the Committee on Appropriations brings in a deficiency bill providing for the payment of judgments and other things it is easy to ascertain the amount of money appropriated. On these special bills the clerks of the House and the Senate have to go over these bills and drag out and figure out the amount of the appropriation without any notice being given to the Committee on Appropriations at all; and while they do that as to private claims it is rather a difficult thing to catch up with all these bills submitting claims to the Court of Claims and we never know how much money is paid for these judgments; that is, we have no record of it in our record, and we ought to have a record of all the appropriations that are not permanent appropriations.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The suggestion of the gentleman is a valuable one, and, as far as I am concerned, I propose to bring that to the attention of the Committee on Claims in the future. However, we have passed three bills in this form now, and if this one goes through I believe the Committee on Claims will adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois on this matter.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment to strike out section 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of the Merritt & Chapman Derrick & Wrecking Co."

On motion of Mr. CLEARY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN E. MOORE CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11572) for the relief of the John E. Moore Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this is another one of these admiralty cases, seeking to send a claim to the admiralty court, but the facts in this case seem to be so clear that I do not think we ought to cumber up the docket of the admiralty court. As I understand the facts, this tugboat ran into a sunken wreck which had been properly buoyed. Warning had been given. The tugboat had gone down by the wreck, and in coming back it grazed the marking buoy and punctured its hull and a little later sunk. It would seem to me that the captain of the craft was not exercising sufficient care.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. GARD. In the gentleman's opinion, is it not better to have the question of responsibility determined in a proper court than to have the possibility of this claim coming in here at some later time? The reason I say that is that I notice in the report of the Secretary of the Navy it is stated that—

> While the record indicates that the Navy is in no way liable for the damages sustained by the tug E. M. Millard on August 8, 1919, nevertheless it is believed that the John E. Moore Co., the owner, is entitled to have its claim judicially determined, and as H. R. 11572, a copy of which you inclosed with your letter, has for its sole purpose the authorization of the owner of the E. M. Millard to sue in a district court, it is respectfully recommended that the bill receive favorable attention by the Committee on Claims.

And he recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is aware of the fact that that belief is very prevalent down in the departments, particularly in the Navy Department, with respect to nearly any kind of a claim that results from a collision with a craft belonging to the Navy Department or arising out of any circumstances in which naval craft are at all concerned. But here is a case in which it would seem to me that referring it to the court would simply result in finding what the department has set forth. There is no claim, as I understand it, that there are any other circumstances connected with the case.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Are there any facts in the record which will justify a court to investigate the case? Is there sufficient on its face to make a prima facie case?

Mr. WALSH. There does not appear to be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SANFORD). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MACCRATE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over until the Member returns who has it in charge——

Mr. WALSH. You can not pass it over in that way. I have no objection to the bill going over.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will withdraw the objection if the gentleman wants to pass it over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

THE WILLIAM GORDON CORPORATION.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12281) for the relief of the William Gordon Corporation.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CERTAIN LANDOWNERS OF NEW CASTLE COUNTY, DEL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11834) for the relief of certain landowners of New Castle County, in the State of Delaware.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice, with a view to eventually striking it entirely from the calendar, because the Secretary of War has determined by an official decision to pay this claim. If that is done, there will be no need for this legislation, but I want to retain the bill upon the calendar until the claim is paid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CATHERINA REA, ADMINISTRATRIX.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9048) for the relief of Catherina Rea, administratrix of the estate of John Rea.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, it seems, from the information I am able to derive from the report, that these distilled spirits are claimed to have been used in hospital emergency treatment at the time of the disaster in San Francisco caused by the great fire. I believe these distilled spirits were taken by the relief and Red Cross organizations, and a bill was presented for the value of the brandy, and payment refused. I am therefore wondering why it is that the bill now comes in the form that it does.

Mr. HERSMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. HERSMAN. Before John Rea died I knew him very well and I knew all the circumstances. I knew of his financial condition. This is not a bill to secure payment for the brandy. It is simply a bill to reimburse the estate of Mr. Rea for $173.50 for the Government stamps on the brandy.

Mr. GARD. I understand that; but his claim was that the brandy was taken by the relief workers at the time of the fire.

Mr. HERSMAN. All the testimony shows that the brandy was taken by Government officials or State officials at that time.

Mr. GARD. If it was so taken and used in hospital emergency treatment, why was not the bill paid, including the amount of the stamp tax? Why was not the bill paid by the relief commission that used this brandy?

Mr. HERSMAN. The only testimony here as to why it was not paid is contained on page 3 of the report.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In the statement of Mr. Charles J. O'Connor.

Mr. HERSMAN. He states that the committee refused to pay the claim because it was the policy of the Red Cross and the relief association in San Francisco not to pay for confiscated liquor. Therefore they refused to pay the claim.

Mr. GARD. It appears that claim was made to the board of directors for the release of Red Cross funds for the payment of this brandy for the amount of the stamp taxes paid by him on three barrels, and it was refused. He has not only lost the brandy, but has been required to pay the tax.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The fact of the matter is the bill was presented in due form to the Red Cross and later to the relief association on the ground that the association should pay for the confiscated liquor which had been used during the earthquake. He presented his claim in a proper way, but it was refused; but now he only asks the payment of the tax and not for the loss of the brandy.

Mr. GARD. The point I make is this: If the gentleman's claim is correct—and I assume that it is correct for the purpose of the statement—instead of presenting his claim to the Government for the relief of the amount of the stamp tax paid, why should he not have an action against the relief committee not only for the stamps put on the brandy but for the brandy which was taken and used by the relief committee during the earthquake?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman realizes that it is a difficult matter to institute a suit against the relief committee, which was a relief organization formed to meet such an emergency as existed during the earthquake disaster. The Red Cross turned over the matters to the relief association, and that relief association has since gone out of existence and wound up its affairs.

Mr. MCKINIRY. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say that the emergency committee wound up its affairs several years ago and has gone out of existence.

Mr. GARD. I presume it has; that is why I am making the inquiry. Why should not the relief committee, which acted during the emergency, which used this brandy for hospital treatment, why should it not be responsible for the payment of it? I assume that that committee did a great many things that relief committees do in a time of great emergency.

Mr. MCKINIRY. The logic underlying the claim against the Government is that the stamps were put on the barrels to get them in a warehouse. The stamps having been placed on the liquor, neither the Government nor the owner ever received the benefit of the purposes for which the spirits were intended.

Mr. GARD. The spirits were used by these people in hospital treatment. I can not understand why, having had the benefit of it, they did not pay the man for his brandy. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill except it seems to me that the man is entitled to more than the amount of the stamp tax.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. He has waived all of his claim to anything except to the amount of the stamps.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand from the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this brandy was used in an emergency for relief purposes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. During the San Francisco earthquake.

Mr. BLANTON. And the Government required the payment of the stamp tax. This Congress is asked not to pay for any portion of the value of the brandy, but merely for the amount of the stamp tax which the Government has received and upon which the owner has received no value?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes; it is a tax on property that was taken from him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Catherina Rea, administratrix of the estate of John Rea, deceased, owner of the Gilroy Winery Distillery Co., the sum of $173.50, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being stamp tax on three barrels of fruit spirits, packages 624 to 626, inclusive, which while in transit under bond from said distillery to one of the special bonded warehouses of the first internal revenue district of California, was seized by United States authorities at the Southern Pacific depot on or about April 20, 1906, for the relief committee for use in hospital work at the time of the San Francisco earthquake, and for the value of which spirits the owner has never been paid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GLYNN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WOODFORD BANK & TRUST CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11030) for the relief of the Woodford Bank & Trust Co., of Versailles, Ky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue two certificates of indebtedness of the United States of America with interest from April 10, 1919, to September 9, 1919, in favor of the Woodford Bank & Trust Co., a State banking corporation of Versailles, Ky., in lieu of two certificates of indebtedness of the United States of America, Nos. 14978 and 14979, respectively, each bearing date of April 10, 1919, each calling for $5,000, series 5 J, and each maturing September 9, 1919, the said certificates of indebtedness of the United States of America having been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That the said Woodford Bank & Trust Co., of Versailles, Ky., shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of said certificates of indebtedness of the United States of America in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the said certificates of indebtedness hereinbefore described which were lost, stolen, or destroyed.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out lines 4 to 12, inclusive, of page 1, and lines 1 to 3, to the word "destroyed," inclusive, page 2, and insert the following: "authorized and directed to redeem certificates of indebtedness of the United States of America, Nos. 14978 and 14979, each of the denomination of $5,000 and each of the issue dated April 10, 1919, and maturing September 9, 1919, with interest from April 10, 1919, to September 9, 1919, in favor of the Woodford Bank & Trust Co., of Versailles, Ky., without presentation of the certificates, the said certificates of indebtedness having been lost, stolen, or destroyed."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANTRILL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

C. V. HINKLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4184) for the relief of C. V. Hinkle.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, this bill for the relief of C. V. Hinkle, from the statement of facts as I read it, is a very unfortunate one, where a man was accused of a crime, suspended by the post-office authorities, and as soon as it was discovered he was not guilty he was reinstated. The present bill provides for a partial compliance with his request in the letter of February 7, 1920, that he be accorded compensation for all the time of his suspension.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that, as I understand his case, this man was a clerk in the post office in the town of Conway, Ark., at $1,000 a year. In March, 1913, a series of post-office thefts from the registered mail were occurring in that post office. He was suspected, and under a report of an inspector in June, 1913, he was dismissed from the service because of this charge that was filed against him. He remained out of the service from March, 1913, until September, 1915. In September, 1915, the assistant postmaster confessed that he was guilty with reference to the identical registered matter that this man had been accused of stealing and discharged for taking. Immediately upon that discovery of the guilt of the assistant postmaster, now confined to the penitentiary, having plead guilty to the charge, the young man was reinstated to his original position, which he had been let out of on June, 1913, and which he had been out of until March, 1915. It was the judgment of the committee that under the circumstances the Government of the United States ought not to carry the punishment of this man to the extent of financial deprivation any more than could be helped.

In other words, if this had been an individual or corporation that had under similar circumstances discharged this man, and subsequently it had appeared that another man in the same establishment had committed the offense with which this man was charged, and he had plead guilty to it, then this man Hinkle would have had a suit for damages against this corporation much greater than the little compensation that is awarded to him now. That is the view of the committee.

Mr. GARD. How would he have a suit for damages? If a man worked for me and I suspected him of stealing from me and the fact was he was not guilty but I suspected him of it and I discharged him and then I discovered that he was not in fact guilty at all, he could not have any action for damages against me because I discharged him.

Mr. BEE. He may not have an action against you except there has been false imprisonment or an affidavit——

Mr. GARD. But there was no imprisonment.

Mr. BEE. I know. Now, this man was not in a position to protect himself against the inspector upon whose suspicion he was subsequently discharged.

Mr. GARD. I understand that he was suspended and then upon further investigation the assistant postmaster finally made a confession that he had rifled the mails and therefore the Government immediately reinstated him to his same position, but instead of getting $1,000, which he got in September, 1915, he gets $1,400.

Mr. BEE. Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio they reinstated him at $1,000 but he was promoted to $1,400. Now, if the gentleman will permit, it was the judgment of the committee under the circumstances that an injury had been done this young man. There is the question of disgrace. He had lived in the community under this suspicion for over two years, had gone about for days and weeks and months, as will be substantiated by the gentleman from Arkansas, the author of the bill, and it was impossible for him to support himself and his family adequately. The claim was reduced from $2,400, the actual salary to which he was entitled, to $1,300.

Mr. GARD. The committee followed the usual estimate of payment. They found he was practically entitled to this amount and they set off against that the amount of money which he earned.

Mr. BEE. Leaving him $1,300. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will not object to this bill. Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio, and I know this appeal I make will not be upon barren ground, that we have passed bills here to reimburse these great shipping concerns in the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars and other bills of that character, and here is a meritorious claim for a young man, unjustly accused by officers of the United States Government, under disgrace in his own community where he has always lived, and all that he asks in return is now to be reimbursed what he actually lost during that time, and I hope the gentleman from Ohio will not object.

Mr. GARD. He asked that all the money be given.

Mr. BEE. Certainly. He asked for the amount of his salary.

Mr. GARD. What I would like to have the gentleman inform me, and probably the gentleman is a member of the committee that has charge of the bill, and can, did the Assistant Postmaster General give any reason for not recommending the enactment of the bill, because he particularly states in his letter that the department does not recommend the enactment of the bill to which reference is made?

Mr. BEE. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio my understanding is that he was not adverse to the bill, but it was because the Post Office Department did not want to be in a position of making a recommendaiton favorably to this character of legislation, not that the Post Office Department was opposed to the bill. That is my understanding of the report of the Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am the author of the bill, and the statement made by the gentleman from Texas states the position of the Post Office Department accurately, as I understand it. I want to state to the committee that I know Mr. C. V. Hinkle. For a period of time the mail at the Conway post office, Arkansas, had been rifled, and he was under suspicion, and a post-office inspector was detailed to make an investigation and report to the Post Office Department. He did so, and upon that report this man Hinkle was discharged from the service of the Government. But later on it was found that he was not the real culprit, and afterwards another man confessed to it, plead guilty to the theft, and is now serving a term in the penitentiary. I also want to state that this matter was brought to the attention of the President, and by Executive order Mr. Hinkle was reinstated to his former position at the same salary. During the time that he was under suspicion this man went about the little city of Conway with the name of a thief branded upon him, as I am informed. It was almost impossible for him to get work anywhere. He wrote and stated to me he wanted to clear his name of this odium, and day in and day out and week in and week out he sought to do so. Finally another inspector found out who was the real culprit. It was difficult for him to get work in that city sufficient to support himself and his family. I wish also to present the report of the Claims Committee, which reported this bill, which gives the history of the matter in a clear and concise report. I quote the report, omitting the caption.

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4184) for the relief of C. V. Hinkle, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment: In line 6, strike out the figures "$2,408.33" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,308.33."

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

While the claimant, C. V. Hinkle, was a clerk in the Conway (Ark.) post office, at a salary of $1,000, he was suspected of rifling registered mail, and on circumstantial evidence was suspended without pay on April 19, 1913, and removed from the service June 28, 1913. It was afterwards found that the stealings were made by the assistant postmaster, who confessed, and is now serving a term in the penitentiary. Under an Executive order Mr. Hinkle was reinstated in his former position of clerk at $1,000 on September 15, 1915. The salary loss is the amount carried by the bill, but as the claimant had been earning $50 per month for 22 months, totaling $1,100, it is recommended that this amount be deducted from the sum named in the bill.

Attached hereto is a letter from the Post Office Department, together with a communication of the claimant, both of which are made a part of this report:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., October 29, 1919.

Hon. GEORGE W. EDMONDS,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. EDMONDS: With reference to your communication of the 22d instant, requesting an opinion as to the merits of a bill (H. R. 4184) appropriating $2,408.33 to reimburse Mr. C. V. Hinkle, a clerk in the post office at Conway, Ark., for loss of salary, I have to state that while Mr. Hinkle was a clerk in the office named, at a salary of $1,000, he was suspected of rifling registered mail and on circumstantial evidence was suspended without pay on April 19, 1913, and removed from the service June 28, 1913. It was afterwards found that the depredations were committed by the assistant postmaster, who confessed and is now serving a term in the penitentiary. Under an Executive order Mr. Hinkle was reinstated to his former position as clerk at $1,000 on September 15, 1915, and is at present receiving a salary of $1,400.

The department does not recommend the enactment of the bill referred to.

Sincerely, yours,

J. C. KOONS,
Acting Postmaster General.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. V. Hinkle, late clerk in post office, Conway, Ark., the sum of $2,408.33, the same being for salary for 29 months, at the rate of $1,000 per annum, the period during which he was dismissed from duty as said post-office clerk, upon charges preferred, which charges were found untrue, and by executive order he, the said C. V. Hinkle, was reinstated, it being found that the real culprit was not the said C. V. Hinkle, but another person, who is now serving a Federal penitentiary term.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "$2,408.33" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,308.33."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JACOWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MRS. ANNIE M. LEPLEY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1321) for the relief of Mrs. Annie M. Lepley, as postmaster at Plymouth, Amador County, Calif., for money, postal money orders, and postage stamps stolen.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is another one of these cases for loss of postage stamps and money taken from a safe in a post office, involving some $2,055. The safe was not locked, and the inner door was left unlocked. The department does not file a letter recommending this legislation, and I do not think it is in line with the precedents established here to pass this kind of a bill.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. If the House will give me just a few moments I would like to briefly explain the case. It will take but a short time. This is a claim by a widow, Annie M. Lepley, who has one daughter, which daughter has been her assistant, a girl about 20 years of age. They live at the town of Plymouth in California, a mining town. Shortly after this burglary I happened to be in that part of the country and visited the store, and the business men and bankers, and others, and looked over the situation, and also the record that has been presented to the Post Office Department. The record shows that the door to the store, as in these various small towns, was locked with a padlock. That door was broken up. The money was in the burglar-proof part of the safe. The mother testifies, and the daughter, the assistant postmaster, that she that night left the store something after 9 o'clock; that she locked the inner door, the burglar-proof vault; that she shut the day door, which locked with a key, and locked the outer door of the safe, and turned the combination. At about 1.05 a. m. on March 13, 1915, this burglary occurred. Upon investigation in the morning, or that night, it disclosed the implements which the burglars used, various tools and sacks of all kinds, and other things. And as the burglars left the store the night watchmen shot at them, but they were unable to catch them. She immediately reported the matter to an inspector, who made an examination of the case, which shows clearly that the facts here in the department are so favorable to this lady's case that she is the present postmaster, and has been to the present time, and her daughter is assistant postmaster, and that she has not paid this money to the department. And all we ask in this bill is a credit on her account by reason of the burglary.

In regard to the recommendation, I have looked over everything I can find, and the same recommendation is presented here as in all other bills. Now, just one word. On the 19th of December, 1919, this House unanimously passed a bill for Mr. F. M. Barfield, and that case I have before me. It is not as strong as this case, but it is similar in character. The door of the building was not locked. He locked the outer door of the safe. The inner door was unlocked, and even the combination to the vault was not changed. And the department in that case simply made, as in this one, this recommendation:

The matter of extending to this postmaster the relief contemplated in the bill is therefore left to the discretion of Congress.

The report in the present case is at the end:

The facts are submitted for such action as Congress may desire to take.

Now, I trust that the committee will permit this widow, who has proven her worth since this time as postmaster, this reimbursement, and will see fit to allow the department to give this widow the credit for the money, and so forth, that was taken from her by burglary under the circumstances as presented. She complied with every human effort that could be made, according to the record as presented to the Post Office Department, her affidavits and all. And it is a worthy case. It is a case deserving of the consideration of the House.

Let me read you a sample from this other case, the Barfield case. Here is a letter by the Postmaster General in that case:

[House Report No. 354, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.]

Mr. ROMJUE, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 6522). The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6522), having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

The claim for which reimbursement is asked in this bill (H. R. 6522), is based upon losses sustained by F. M. Barfield, while postmaster at Pinehurst, Ga., in the burglary of said post office on the night of July 19, 1909. The amount involved is $64.88, the actual amount lost by the burglary. There is hereto attached a letter from the Postmaster General of date September 8, 1919, and made a part of this report. That the money was stolen from the post office by some burglar is not disputed.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., September 8, 1919.

Hon. GEORGE W. EDMONDS,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. EDMONDS: I am in receipt of your communication of September 4, with which you transmit a copy of bill (H. R. 6522) for the relief of F. M. Barfield.

Complying with your request, I beg to inform you that, under the provisions of the act of May 9, 1888 (25 Stat., 135), as amended by the act of June 11, 1896 (29 Stat., 458), Mr. Barfield filed in this department a claim for credit on account of $24.02 postal funds and $40.86 money-order funds, total $64.88, lost in the burglary of the post office at Pinehurst, Ga., during the night of July 19, 1909, while Mr. Barfield was postmaster at that place.

The evidence shows that the outer door of the safe in said post office was opened without the use of force, but the inside drawers were broken open, and that the funds described were stolen from said safe. The first impression of the postmaster was that the safe had been opened by working the combination. The postmaster stated to the inspector he believed that he had locked the safe on the night before the burglary, but was not positive enough to make affidavit to that effect. He recalled several occasions on which he had failed to lock the safe from the fact that he had found it open in the morning when he arrived at the office. It appears further that the postmaster purchased this safe at second hand, and that he never changed the combination of the lock as required by section 356 of the Postal Laws and Regulations of 1902, which reads as follows:

"5. A postmaster upon taking charge of his office shall immediately change the combination on every safe therein; and where at any time a safe is procured, either new or secondhand, he shall immediately change the combination. Failure to make such change shall be considered as prima facie evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the postmaster in any case where claim is made for credit for money or other property stolen from such safes which have been opened without resort to violence."

The postmaster's failure to change the combination of his safe was considered negligence within the meaning of the statute cited, and for that reason, together with his inability to certify definitely that the safe had been locked, his claim was disallowed under date of January 18, 1910.

Under date of February 21, 1914, the solicitor for this department forwarded to Hon. H. D. STEPHENS, House of Representatives, copies of all material papers relating to this claim for use in the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6398) then pending before Congress for the relief of this claimant.

The evidence in this case appears to establish conclusively that the postmaster actually sustained the loss described and that the stolen property was rightfully in his possession at the time of the burglary. However, under the law the Postmaster General had no authority to allow this claim. No new evidence has been received by the department since the settlement of this claim which would justify the allowance thereof. The matter of extending to this postmaster the relief contemplated in the bill is therefore left to the discretion of Congress.

Yours, very truly,

A. S. BURLESON, Postmaster General.

Then he recites the postal statutes:

5. A postmaster upon taking charge of his office shall immediately change the combination on every safe therein, and where at any time a safe is procured, either new or secondhand, he shall immediately change the combination. Failure to make such change shall be considered as prima facie evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the postmaster in any case where claim is made for credit for money or other property stolen from such safes which have been opened without resort to violence.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to the fact that in that Barfield case, in the Sixty-fifth Congress, as a member of the Committee on Claims, I filed a minority report, calling attention to the bad precedent that we would set, and I opposed this bill on that ground, that it would establish a bad precedent; that the Postmaster General has promulgated and has in force and effect a rule which requires stamps and money orders and various documents of value to be kept properly locked, and where his regulations are not complied with he refuses and turns down all such claims; but because of the fact that this Barfield claim was less than $100—merely $64—it was rushed through and passed.

Mr. RAKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BLANTON. I call attention, further, that in this case we now have under consideration, likewise in the Sixty-fifth Congress, he will find a minority report, filed by me as a member of the Claims Committee, setting up all these facts, and the further fact that it is against the precedent of the Congress to allow such claims; and this case was not taken up in the Sixty-fifth Congress because of that minority report.

Mr. RAKER. It was taken up just like others——

Mr. BLANTON. And objected to.

Mr. RAKER. And you could not get to it. Many other cases were not reached.

Mr. BLANTON. If we permit this case, it will establish another precedent, and I am calling the attention of the gentleman from California to the fact that there are numerous claims of this character, and that if we allow this one it will require the allowance of a number of others.

Mr. RAKER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact: The Barfield case came up in the regular order. There was a large attendance in the committee that day. I was here and remember the circumstance. The matter was read, and the precedent was referred to, as I recollect.

Now, that was established irrespective of the amount. Here is a strong man who gets his money, but here is a widow struggling along, who is spending her subsistence to maintain a night watch for the benefit of the town; two burglars go there when she is asleep after a hard day's work and break open that safe and destroy or steal the Government's property. Ought she not to have some consideration? It is not a question of setting a precedent. It is a matter of doing justice. This Congress passed that other bill. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will let this bill pass.

Mr. WALSH. I will let it pass by objecting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL MONDAY NEXT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns this evening it adjourn until Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns this evening it adjourn until Monday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PERRY L. HAYNES.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1309) for the relief of Perry L. Haynes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, I will be glad to have the further word of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT], who probably knows about the case. From a reading of the report it seems to me that there is a great deal of doubt as to whether the man who had charge of this money, Second Lieut. Perry L. Haynes, was not guilty of very considerable negligence, to use a mild expression, in turning over the money to the character of man that he did turn it over to; and also I would ask the gentleman for information especially with regard to the testimony of Mate Beebe, Charles J. Beebe, as appears on page 6 of the report, wherein Beebe states—and that is the man on whom it is now proposed to put the responsibility—that he turned over the package to the provost at Fort Wright, and this provost's name was Rosey, although I believe his real name was Rosenski, and Rosey receipted for it and received the loose letter. I have not been able to find, by any careful reading that I have been able to make of the evidence in the record, whether or not there was any effort made on the part of the examining officer to find out whether Rosey had this money or whether Mate Charles J. Beebe returned the money, or what did become of the money, because there is no trace of the money from the time it left the possession of its custodian, Lieut. Haynes, and was given to Beebe, Beebe being a man who could read with very considerable difficulty, and he probably did not notice what character of communication he had that was handed to him. I say there is no connection in the evidence, as far as I can get it, after it left the hands of Lieut. Haynes and passed into the hands of Beebe, as to what reasonably became of the money contained in this particular letter package. Can the gentleman from Connecticut inform me on that?

Mr. MERRITT. I think if the gentleman will read the testimony and also the finding of the court, he will find that Beebe receipted for these three envelopes.

Mr. GARD. Yes; I know he did.

Mr. MERRITT. And he delivered two of them, and the third, containing the money, he did not deliver. That is clearly set forth. It is also shown by the testimony that Lieut. Haynes was doing exactly what the orders called for, and exactly what had been done since 1915. That is shown at the top of page 14, and is also shown by the finding of the board, which states:

(1) By following the custom in vogue of transferring public funds derived from sales of Quartermaster Department from Fort Terry, N. Y., to Fort H. G. Wright, N. Y., Lieut. Perry L. Haynes, Coast Artillery, National Guard, on the p. m. of December 29, 1917, turned over to the wharfinger, Corpl. Dougood, at Fort Terry, to be transferred to the quartermaster coast defenses of Long Island Sound, Fort H. G. Wright, N. Y., a sealed envelope containing $855.75 in currency and $591.42 in checks. This envelope, in good condition, was entered on the manifest by Corpl. Dougood, but was manifested for New London, Conn., instead of for Fort H. G. Wright, N. Y. The envelope was turned over in good condition to Mate Charles J. Beebe, of the steamer Timothy Pickering, and his attention called to the fact that it was intended for the quartermaster at Fort Wright; that Mate Beebe failed to deliver said envelope containing $1,447.17 to the wharfinger at Fort Wright; that neither said envelope nor its contents, $1,447.17, have been found; that two other envelopes containing $22.59 and $144.57, respectively, were also delivered to Corpl. Dougood at the same time and by him delivered to Mate Beebe; that Mate Beebe did deliver said other two envelopes to the wharfinger at Fort Wright.

(2) That payment on the checks contained in the lost enevlope was stopped by telegraphic instructions from Lieut. Haynes.

(3) The responsibility for the loss of this envelope was due to carelessness on the part of Mate Beebe, either in receipting for an envelope that he did not receive or else in failing to take proper care of what he actually did receive.

So that as far as Lieut. Haynes is concerned he did exactly what custom required to be done in the case. Lieut. Haynes was a member of the Coast Artillery of the National Guard, and he simply followed the custom which had been handed down to him by the Army man who handed over to him the matters he had charge of when he came to the post. He followed instructions.

Mr. GARD. I notice on page 15 that, when observing Beebe on the witness stand, they found he was too old to have the care of Government funds, or to be required to assume the responsibility.

Mr. MERRITT. He did not give the envelope to Beebe. He gave it to Dougood. Of course, he had no control over the age of Beebe, and Lieut. Haynes was not responsible for Beebe's being there. My opinion is that Lieut. Haynes observed all reasonable care, in accordance with the orders and in accordance with custom. I do not think he should be held responsible for the personnel on the boat.

Mr. GARD. Was there any inquiry as to Beebe except the limited reference here as to his—as to the location of the package?

Mr. MERRITT. It did not seem to me that that was important, as far as Lieut. Haynes's responsibility is concerned.

Mr. GARD. It is quite important, because if the money is returned or recovered there would be no likelihood that the money would be returned, and there would be no liability on the part of Lieut. Haynes or compensatory action on behalf of the Government.

Mr. MERRITT. The evidence shows that the package was stolen on the way from Fort Wright to Fort Terry, or from Fort Terry to Fort Wright, whichever it was.

Mr. PARRISH. Reserving the right to object, is there anything in the record showing that the money was receipted for when Lieut. Haynes turned it over to the party to whom he delivered it?

Mr. MERRITT. It was receipted for.

Mr. PARRISH. Is there something to show that?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes; clearly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reimburse Second Lieut. Perry L. Haynes, Coast Artillery Corps, National Guard, in the sum of $855.75, which amount represents funds belonging to the Government of the United States for which he was held accountable and which were lost through no fault of his.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERRITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

GEORGE W. GAMBLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1288) for the relief of George W. Gamble.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McKEOWN. Reserving the right to object, is this another post-office case where there was a burglary?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. This is the case of the clerk of the circuit court for Rock Island County, Ill., who has charge of the naturalization fees, to reimburse him for $45.50, because his office was burglarized and the money taken.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is there any question of negligence arising from the care and custody of the money?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Not the slightest. It was properly locked up on the third floor of the courthouse. The office was burglarized and the money taken.

Mr. RAKER. Of course, it makes a difference if a strong, able-bodied man's money is taken, but when they burglarize a safe and take a widow's money you do not allow her anything.

Mr. WALSH. Was it the widow's money?

Mr. RAKER. I do not quite get the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is making a statement about burglarizing a safe and taking a widow's money.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Was it her money?

Mr. RAKER. I think the gentleman heard what I said.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman states that it was the widow's money that was stolen.

Mr. RAKER. I think my statement is in the RECORD. I can repeat it.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman ought to state the facts.

Mr. RAKER. I can repeat my statement.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is not stating the facts, as usual.

Mr. RAKER. I think I made my statement very clearly—that it would seem to make a distinction whether it was the money of a strong man or the money of a widow.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. I object.

Mr. MacCRATE. I hope the gentleman will not object to this. It is a very meritorious case.

Mr. RAKER. I want to explain the situation, that is all. I will not object if I may have a right to find out the facts about this case.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will not object. This is a bill which ought justly to be paid.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for the regular order. I will not permit the gentleman from California to shed a few more tears over his case.

Mr. RAKER. That statement is wholly unjustified and, of course, is not a fact. I trust the gentleman when he revises his speech will make his remarks conform to the facts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. I object, Mr. Speaker, if I can not secure the right to have the bill explained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WILHELM ALEXANDERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12634) for the relief of Wilhelm Alexanderson.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PARRISH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if he can give the House any idea as to how many more of these bills of this character we may expect? On the last day on which private bills were considered we had a number of these bills, and this makes the third of this character that we have had to-day. Is there no way by which the Government can be relieved from these lawsuits and this liability at the port of New York?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In answer to that question I will say that the Committee on Claims has not reported out any bills of this kind unless the department has stated that the matter should be referred to the court. Now, there is a general law providing that the Navy Department may settle losses up to a limited amount, about $500, and they are settling hundreds of cases of this kind.

Mr. PARRISH. Yes; I am aware of that.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The Committee on Claims would like very much to be relieved of the responsibility of handling these numerous claims, but in the absence of a general law it becomes absolutely necessary for each case to be considered on its merits. This is the last bill of the kind on the calendar now, and, as far as I know, the last case now before the committee, although there will be others in the future.

Mr. PARRISH. I do not object.

Mr. McKEOWN. I think there is a good deal in what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] said about the freedom with which these recommendations are made by the Navy Department, and I am in accord with the position of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH], that we ought to be very careful in the consideration of these claims, because it is an easy matter to pass them on to the Court of Claims and shift the responsibility. I am glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania say that they will be careful with these cases.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman and I are in complete accord; but we must do something to meet these individual cases which the Navy Department can not consider. I want to say that this bill provides that the Attorney General shall be notified, and carries provisions along the lines suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]; and I think without any doubt the Committee on Claims will employ that form in the future in any other similar bills that they report.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will yield, owing to the congestion in the harbors at Norfolk, Boston, New York, and other places during the time of the war, there were a great many instances where Government-owned vessels collided with privately owned vessels, inflicting damage. The question of the responsibility of the Government can best be determined by submission of the cases to a court. That seems to me to be very proper. I will say to the gentleman that there are a great number of these cases, and there probably will be a much greater number in the years to come, and that I have been in favor of a general bill conferring, within certain limits, general jurisdiction to sue the United States in the admiralty courts.

Mr. PARRISH. I notice in the bill that was passed a few minutes ago that the Secretary of the Navy distinctly stated in the letter he wrote that he did not believe the Government was responsible. I would like to ask the gentlemen in charge of these bills if they believe it is good policy to permit the United States Government to be sued in cases where those in charge have made a thorough investigation and state, after that investigation has been made, that the Government is not responsible in a case of this kind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Wilhelm Alexanderson, of Atlantic City, N. J., owner of the motor boat Spray, against the United States, for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said motor boat Spray and the U. S. S. Grebe, a mine sweeper, which is owned by the Government of the United States and operated by the Navy of the United States, on the 30th day of May, 1919, may be sued for by the said Wilhelm Alexanderson in the district court of the United States for the district of New Jersey, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of Wilhelm Alexanderson or against Wilhelm Alexanderson in favor of the United States upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GEORGE W. GAMBLE.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, Calendar No. 162 provides for the relief of George W. Gamble, just passed over, where I objected. I did so solely on the ground that I was not given an opportunity to explain. I now withdraw my objection to that bill.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 162.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to return to the consideration of Calendar No. 162. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1288) for the relief of George W. Gamble.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $45.50 to George W. Gamble, clerk of the circuit court in and for the county of Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, which sum was lost through the burglarizing of his office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PARRISH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how this money was locked up which they claim to have been stolen?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It was in the third story of the courthouse in a steel box carefully locked and secured. The evidence before the committee showed that every possible care was taken to protect the money, which belonged to the United States Government and was in charge of the circuit court, although the custodian got nothing in the way of compensation.

Mr. PARRISH. It was in a safe?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In a steel box; in a safe properly locked.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. In looking over the bill it shows that the safe was in the third story of the building and the burglar broke through the transom and obtained the money. Whether he blew open the safe or not I do not know, but I imagine he opened it, as most of the safes can be opened without being blown open. Therefore they lost the money that was in the possession and belonging to the United States Government.

Now, the committee having allowed the bill to be considered, and I think rightly, I want to refer to this to call attention to the other bill that I did not get fully before the committee. There the party had the door locked with an ordinary padlock; I suppose a Yale lock that would require to be broken. You break open the door and then open the first door of the safe. The other door was locked, the inner door was locked, and the safe was fully protected, and the Government's money was taken out. It was in the custody of the postmaster. Now, of course, it does not make any difference whether the parties are male or female, strong, able-bodied clerks, or widows, but I just hope that the next time we get back to these cases that are meritorious our friends will see their way clear to let the House consider the bills.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman make any distinction between this case and a case where by law or by regulation promulgated under the law certain receptacles must be provided and must be kept in a certain condition in order to absolve the officials of negligence?

Mr. RAKER. In answer to the gentleman's question in as concise form as I can, I think there is no question that there should be a following of the statute as well as the rules and regulations to obtain a refund from the Post Office Department for the moneys that are taken.

I think that is clear, but all cases depend on circumstances and facts of each case. In this instance I was going to show, although I did not have time, that the party had only been postmaster a little while. She had not become familiar with the fact that the combination must be changed. Now, to show that Congress does rely on the facts of each case, I want to say that two months ago this House permitted a bill to pass where the party had not changed the combination and where the safe was not locked.

I make this statement so that next time, with due deference to my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, if my voice a while ago seemed not to be harsh and that he thought there were tears in my voice and in my eyes in speaking of the facts and conditions as they exist, it appeals to a man's heart and to his sympathies in trying to do the right thing and to protect those who ought to be protected. I thank the House for the time it has given me and also the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PASQUALE DOLCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7573) authorizing payment of compensation to Pasquale Dolce for personal injuries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I notice the compensation in this case by a committee amendment is reduced from $10,000 to $2,500, and that amount is greatly in excess of what he would have been allowed under the compensation law if compensation was permissible. I do not know how the committee arrived at this reduction of $7,500.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I followed the practice of the young attorney of putting in more than we expect to get. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GLYNN] went over the case thoroughly and arrived at that figure of $2,500 as being fair compensation.

Mr. WALSH. Last week we passed one or two bills, I think, where we only gave $1,080 in cases where death ensued. This amount seems to be rather excessive. It seems that he had a fracture of his skull without depression; that he was otherwise bruised by scalp wounds, facial bruises, bruises on his legs, and in the back in the sacro-iliac region.

He is 52 years old and was struck by this automobile driven by a corporal taking a major or a superior officer in a hurry to catch a train. Well, possibly the gentleman is entitled to some compensation for the negligent driving of this machine. I understand that the department finds that the corporal was driving recklessly and negligently, but I could not quite agree that $2,500 is a proper compensation to pay this gentleman for his damages.

Mr. MACGREGOR. What would the gentleman from Massachusetts think he ought to get if he was in a court of law?

Mr. WALSH. Well, it is not to be handled in just that way, because there is no legal obligation here. His wages lost were $1,200. His doctor's bills amounted to $516. I should think if he got $1,800 that would be treating him very liberally in presenting him with this gratuity.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Would the gentleman be willing to have a fracture of the skull for $1,800?

Mr. WALSH. No; I would not be for $18,000, but that does not change the principle. This is a mere gratuity. It was an injury that happened in May of last year at 5 minutes past 9 in the morning. If he went in a court he might possiby recover the loss of what he would have earned, and so forth, but we are not bound by those rules here. I believe where we pay a poor widow $1,080 where her husband was killed through negligence of some Government employee that we are not very consistent if we come along a week later and pay somebody $2,500 where he suffered the fracture of his skull and the loss of $1,200 in wages and $516 in doctors' bills.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Does the gentleman think that he can make a right by two wrongs?

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Because we gave the widow not enough, is that any reason why we should fail to compensate this man?

Mr. WALSH. I have not said we did not give the widow enough.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The gentleman intimated it.

Mr. WALSH. No; but I am saying we are giving this man too much.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the testimony in the case show that there was liability on the part of the Government at all?

Mr. WALSH. Not the slightest.

Mr. McKEOWN. It does not show that they were engaged in any special line of duty at the time?

Mr. WALSH. No; there was no liability. He was taking an officer to catch the train and driving his machine in a hurry as corporals usually do when they are driving a superior officer.

Mr. McKEOWN. I was going to say to the gentleman that if we are liable all the time for the fast driving of these Army cars we are certainly in bad shape.

Mr. MACGREGOR. There is abundant evidence of negligence, and the only reason why there is no liability is because under the law a citizen has no right to sue the Government.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the record disclose that they were performing duty under order at the time the accident happened?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I assume that the corporal was obeying the orders of his superior officer.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is one of the necessary ingredients to place a liability on a corporation or a private individual.

Mr. GLYNN. The evidence is that he was going like a fire engine with the officer to catch the train, and the likelihood is that it did not make one particle of difference whether the officer caught that train or the next one. But he wanted to catch that train. Now, the question is that the man suffered that misfortune, and there is something more than $500 of doctor's bills to be taken out of this $2,500.

Mr. McKEOWN. Has any action been taken against the sergeant or corporal for his conduct?

Mr. GLYNN. I do not recall there was, I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not take the position he ought not to be paid something. But if the Government is to pay damages every time some sergeant or corporal driving one of these cars runs over somebody at the rate they usually go we will have a long time to settle up.

Mr. GLYNN. I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that that is the established policy of this Government; certainly it is the policy of the Claims Committee that if a person, through no fault of his own, is injured by the recklessness of some soldier or officer in the Army that the innocent person ought not to be obliged to suffer that misfortune alone.

Mr. McKEOWN. I agree with the gentleman——

Mr. GLYNN. And your committee places this in a position where a private corporation would be placed.

Mr. McKEOWN. I agree with the gentleman, but I was just calling the attention of the committee to the fact, and desire to say that I think the committee ought to call the attention of the War Department to the facts and have these conditions stopped, if possible.

Mr. GLYNN. Now, with reference to some objections of the gentleman from Massachusetts. To my mind there is a distinction. They have provided for cases where the relation of master and servant exists. Where a person is an employee of the Government and he is injured then they have sought to provide compensation, but where the relation of employer and employee does not exist, then it seems to me that we should look at the cases something as we would look at them if it were a private corporation and if they were injured by a reckless employee as a servant of a private corporation.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. If the gentleman will yield, when the American Expeditionary Forces ran over a citizen of France they did not merely get $1,050, and I think we ought to pay the American people as much as we pay a Frenchman, certainly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, unless there is some disposition on the part of the people interested to agree to a very material reduction of this amount, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from Massachusetts will withhold his objection.

Mr. WALSH. I will withhold it in order for the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I think this amount is very moderate and fair.

I feel that this man, who was injured in May, and is still suffering from these injuries, should have fair compensation when he was injured by the recklessness of an employee of the United States Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman intend to meet the requirements of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MACGREGOR. That is what I am trying to get at. It is simply a question of agreement as to amount. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if it would meet his objection if it was reduced to $2,000?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, in response, I would say that unless it was reduced to $1,716, which is apparently the loss from wages and expenses of doctors' bills and the committee would offer that as a committee amendment, I would object. The gentleman, I know, appreciates it is not a personal objection. But I believe we can not keep on making these precedents, because we will be rolling these claims up by the thousands and will not be able to pay them. I think we have got to keep within some bounds of reason here and try to follow some standard. As the gentleman from New York recalls, last week we paid two or three death claims and we based them solely on loss of earnings. One poor woman had paid $76 for a doctor's bill before her husband died, and we paid her $1,000. I think we are liberal with this particular person, unfortunate as he was. I believe if we should confine it to $1,716 that would be treating him very fairly under the circumstances.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to Pasquale Dolce the sum of $2,500 as full compensation for injuries received on May 19, 1919, at Buffalo, N. Y., when he was struck by a truck operated by the United States Army.

Also the following committee amendments were read:

Strike out "$10,000" in line 5 and insert "$2,500."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute for the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,716."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "as" in line 6 insert the word "full."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There was a committee amendment, and that amendment was amended by a substitute. Did the Clerk get it that the committee amendment was then agreed to?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk states that he did. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MACGREGOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREE ON NAVY PAY BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BRITTEN as one of the managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 11927, the Navy pay bill, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. BROWNING.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEW CARLISLE, IND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8881) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to reimburse the First National Bank of New Carlisle, Ind., for the loss of war-savings stamps and thrift stamps.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, is anyone particularly in charge of the bill?

Mr. HICKEY. I know something about the facts of the case.

Mr. GARD. What I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to was that if we expect to follow the same rule that we have followed in cases of this kind it certainly would be necessary to add to the gentleman's bill the fact that the surety bond should be given as required by the Treasury Department of the United States.

Mr. HICKEY. For what purpose should a surety bond be given, in the opinion of the gentleman? For the purpose of indemnifying the Government if the stamps are found?

Mr. GARD. For indemnifying the Government against loss if the stamps are found.

Mr. HICKEY. I am perfectly willing to have that amendment, but it would seem——

Mr. GARD. I will state to the gentleman that the very next bill on the calendar provides that where certificates of indebtedness were stolen from a York County savings bank in May, the bank is to first file with the Treasury Department a bond in a sum double the amount of principal in order to save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the savings stamps.

Mr. HICKEY. If the gentleman from Ohio will read the report he will observe that the bank deposited with one of the Federal reserve banks the sum of $1,000 in bonds, and that the Government had been reimbursed by the sale of those bonds to the extent of the value of the stamps.

Mr. GARD. The Government has been reimbursed?

Mr. HICKEY. Yes; to the extent of the value of the stamps.

Mr. GARD. It would not be necessary, then, to offer the amendment?

Mr. HICKEY. It would seem not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the First National Bank of New Carlisle, Ind., agents of the Treasury Department, for the sale of war-savings stamps and thrift stamps, the sum of $923.25, to reimburse said bank for war-savings stamps and thrift stamps lost on account of burglary during the month of April, 1918.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the title will be amended in accordance with the text.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. HICKEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

YORK COUNTY SAVINGS BANK, OF BIDDEFORD, ME.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2811) for the relief of the York County Savings Bank, of Biddeford, Me.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whoever has knowledge about this bill a question or two about it. In looking over the testimony in this case I find that the postmaster, in order to arrive at the amount of stamps that he lost, gives the amount that he had on hand in the previous quarter, and it is——

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is referring to the wrong bill, I believe.

Mr. BLACK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought this was the postmaster's bill.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No. This is to return to a bank certificates of indebtedness.

Mr. BLACK. It was to another bill that I had reference. I withdraw my reservation of an objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem certificate of indebtedness of the United States of America No. 13867, denomination of $5,000, of the issue dated August 6, 1918, and maturing December 5, 1918, with interest at the rate of 4½ per cent from August 6, 1918, to December 5, 1918, in favor of the York County Savings Bank, of Biddeford, Me., without presentation of the certificate, the said certificate of indebtedness having been lost or destroyed: Provided, That the said York County Savings Bank, of Biddeford, Me., shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of said certificate of indebtedness of the United States of America in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost or destroyed certificate of indebtedness hereinbefore described.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment? There are only a few more bills on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GLYNN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.), the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, April 5, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] told me that he wishes to make a statement, and I promised to give way to him.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in an investigation made by the Joint Committee on Printing as to where the public documents go and how they are distributed, I wish to make a short report this morning as to one way by which publications are distributed.

Mr. Frederick J. Haskin, located on U Street, I think, is a newspaper correspondent and a representative of—I can not state how many papers in the United States. I suppose Senators have received a copy of their home paper and in the paper noticed inserted an advertisement of Mr. Frederick J. Haskin, in which it is stated that if the reader will clip the advertisement out of the paper and attach to it a 2-cent stamp and send it to Mr. Frederick J. Haskin he will send in return any public document that the sender may ask for.

I have a report of the number of Government publications which have been delivered to Mr. Frederick J. Haskin from January 5, 1918, to March 30, 1920. I call the attention of Senators to the fact that during that period, a little over one year, Mr. Haskin has received 1,329,475 copies of Government publications. I can not state whether they have all been sent out to parties requesting them or not. I find in the list as high as 82,715 copies of one document.

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire from whom Mr. Haskin receives these documents?

Mr. SMOOT. From the different departments of the Government, from the Public Health Service, from the Bureau of Mines, from the Agricultural Department——

Mr. KNOX. Does the Senator happen to know whether he has received them directly from the departments or on the orders of Senators and Members of the House?

Mr. SMOOT. I know that he has received them directly from the departments, and they have been delivered directly to his office.

Mr. KNOX. The reason why I make the inquiry is because Mr. Haskin came to me some time ago and stated that there were a certain number of documents to my credit for which there was no demand and which had been lying there for some years. He stated that he had a plan by which he could disseminate these documents and they would fall into the hands of people interested in them, and I gave him an order for quite a quantity. I wondered whether that was the way he got his collection.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no doubt that he made the requests from the departments and received the documents, although he may have called upon Representatives and Senators and asked them to give him an order for public documents to their credit and he would make the selection thereafter. But that is neither here nor there. I am only making this statement as a basis for what I hope will take place in the very near future in the consideration of a certain bill which, I hope, when it is presented to the Senate will not take long to discuss and put on its passage.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Some time ago—I am not now able to give the source of my information—I was told that a number of these documents, and so forth, were received from the departments and sold. I do not mean even to suggest that it was done by Mr. Haskin, but it prompts me to make this inquiry: Are these documents distributed gratis or are they charged for?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think Mr. Haskin charges anything for the documents. He requires, however, that a 2-cent stamp be sent to him before he will send any document. Of course, there are a lot of farm bulletins among them, which it never costs 2 cents to send, but I am not saying that Mr. Haskin is making money out of these documents, because I do not know it. However, I think it gives him a standing with a clientele of people in the United States by the free distribution of these documents, which he uses in order to secure the appointment as representative of newspapers from all parts of the country.

Mr. President, these documents are printed for distribution by the departments and Senators and Representatives, and the intention originally was that they should be sent to the constituents of Senators and Representatives. The Joint Committee on Printing this morning passed the following resolution, and I think it is due to Congress to know that this resolution, under the printing act, has been adopted by that committee:

That no person connected with any department of the Government shall furnish any publication for free distribution to any private individual, corporation, or agency in lots to exceed 50 copies without first making application to the Joint Committee on Printing, giving the name of the person or agency desiring the publications, the name of the publication, and the number of copies desired: Provided, That this regulation shall not apply to publications which are sold at a price to cover the cost of same: Provided further, That the clerk of the Joint Committee on Printing be instructed to furnish to each department of the Government and to the Public Printer a copy of this resolution with a request that the receipt of same be duly acknowledged.

Mr. President, the so-called printing bill has passed the House and is now before the Printing Committee of the Senate. I hope that when the bill is reported to the Senate there will be no objection to its early consideration, for when the bill becomes a law the present practice will cease, as the amount of printing permitted to be done for each Senator and each Representative will be limited to a fixed sum in dollars and cents. Then Senators and Representatives may secure just the documents their constituents want, and if documents are printed in which they are not at all interested such documents are not to be charged to the credit of the Senator or the Representative for Government publications.

I think the practice in the past has been an abuse, and I am sure it never was intended such a course would be allowed. I am quite sure that it ought to cease.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. MYERS, which was to insert a new section to be known as and numbered section 15, to read as follows:

SEC. 15. That none of the provisions of this act shall apply to and none of its benefits shall be received or enjoyed by any person who is a member of any association, society, organization, or union of Government employees which is affiliated with, subject to, or a member or component part of, or acknowledges the authority of, any higher or superior body or institution of organized labor; and, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Pensions shall make and enforce rules for the enforcement of this section and governing the method and character of proof required in order that employees may receive the benefits of this act.

Amend further by renumbering the subsequent sections in accordance herewith.

Mr. MYERS resumed and concluded the speech heretofore begun by him. The entire speech is as follows:

Mr. President, the purpose of my amendment is to prevent the affiliation of Federal employees' unions with higher or parent bodies of organized labor or at least to prevent employees of the Government who are so affiliated from enjoying the benefits and privileges of this bill. The real object is to discourage the affiliation of Federal employees' unions with higher and outside organizations.

That brings to an issue before the Senate the question of whether or not, in the judgment of the Senate, Federal employees should be members of organizations which are affiliated with higher or superior or parent bodies of organized labor; in fact, with the American Federation of Labor. I think that question should be decided by the Senate. It is growing in importance. The employees of the Federal Government are being very rapidly gathered into the Federal employees' union, all of which are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. A large majority of the employees of the Federal Government are now so affiliated, and the American Federation of Labor, I understand, is rapidly gathering in those who are not so affiliated, and it appears to me, unless checked by law, only a question of a short time when nearly all of the employees of the Federal Government will belong to organizations which are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

I think the wisdom of that is a question which should be decided by Congress, and here is an opportunity for the Senate to pass upon it and decide it. I want the Senate to register its judgment on that question. If it is all right, if it meets with the approval of Congress, then let it be so decided, and let the status of the matter remain as it now is. If it meets with the disapproval of Congress, the sooner Congress registers that disapproval the better.

I have nothing to say against the American Federation of Labor as an organization. I have nothing to say against anybody in it. I know there are many good people in that organization. I believe that the great majority of that organization are good people and good citizens. I flatter myself I have some friends in that organization. There are many people in that organization whom I respect, and it is all right for the American Federation of Labor to exist. It is all right for people who work for wages to organize themselves into unions, and to confederate or consolidate into one superior, central body, which will govern their actions and control their policies. That, it appears, has become a necessity at this stage of the industrial world.

But whether or not we should go further than that and say it is all right for employees of the Federal Government to ally themselves with such an institution, in such a way, is entirely a different question. When I say it is all right for employees to associate themselves together in unions of organized labor, I mean it is all right for the employees of industrial institutions and corporations and private employers. That is all right. It seems to be necessary for employees to combine their strength in order to advance their interests and protect their rights. But when you come to employees who work for the Federal Government it presents an entirely different question to be decided.

I claim that employees who work for the Federal Government are analogous to soldiers in an army. They should owe their entire allegiance and loyalty and affiliation to the Government for which they work. They should not enter into any movement of affiliation or association which might put them in an attitude of antagonism to the Government for which they work, because the general welfare is at stake; the welfare of the entire body politic, of the entire people, of the Government itself, is at stake, and I do not believe that any Federal employee should be permitted, innocently or otherwise, to form any association or affiliation which might, by any chance, lead him, in association with others, to take a position or a stand which might be antagonistic to the true interests of the Government which employs him and feeds him, and upon which we are all dependent for our peace, tranquillity, and welfare.

Yet this is going on all the time at an ever-increasing rate, and I claim that some very pernicious effects come from it, some very detrimental results.

The complaints which I receive by mail and in person from Federal employees who are not members of the Federal employees' unions are very numerous and some of them very grave. I do not think the Federal Government wants to run a closed shop, a unionized shop, so that nobody other than a member of a labor union can work for the Government or enjoy his full rights. I do not think anybody would undertake that, and yet complaints come to me frequently, in person and through the mail, from employees of the Federal Government who are not members of Federal employees' unions, in which they complain that they are discriminated against and that it is very difficult for a Federal employee who is not a member of a Federal employees' union to obtain any promotion, any advancement, any increase of pay, and sometimes even difficult for him to hold his position.

From representations that have been made to me, the selection of employees to fill positions in the Federal departments is largely under the influence of and governed by the Federal employees' unions, and in the beginning by committees of those unions which pass upon applications of that nature. I am informed that when it comes to promotion and advancement, there are committees of the Federal employees' unions in the various departments which make recommendations in those matters, and that unless an employee belongs to a Federal employees' union it is almost impossible for him to expect from a committee of that union any recommendation for advancement or promotion or increase of pay, and that it is sometimes rather difficult for him, without the good will of such a committee of the Federal employees' unions, even to hold his position.

Many such instances have been brought to my attention. I have a communication here from a member of the Federal employees' union who worked in the Burau of Engraving and Printing. It is not only those employees who do not belong to the Federal employees' union who complain of discrimination and partiality that is worked through the unions. The nonunion members do not do all the complaining, by any means, but some of the people who belong to the unions write me or come to me and tell me of discrimination and injustice which is worked through the unions. Some of them say they join in self-defense; that they are compelled to join; that they are nagged at and are terrorized until they have to join for fear of losing their places. Others join willingly, but feel that the operation of the unions within the departments is not to the best interest of the Government and not for the good of the departments.

I have a communication here from one who has been an employee of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and who is a member of the Federal employees' union. He writes at considerable length, and says that during the war, when there was a great rush of work in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, when it was required to turn out a great many bonds and securities, and had a great deal of extra work on account of the war, the bureau needed many additional employees, and that a man was brought from New York and put in the bureau to have charge particularly of getting new employees; that this party was a member of organized labor; that he would not bring anybody over here and put him to work unless he was a member of a labor union; that he filled up the Bureau of Engraving and Printing almost wholly with union men. This correspondent writes of some of those men, and says:

> These men brought here through the organizer were men of low character—thugs, etc.—some having prison records. None were able to do the work they were assigned to do. The results were the bureau was tied up in getting out securities during the war. When the organizer was asked why he had brought such people here, he stated to cripple the bureau and get rid of Mr. Ralph, who they—the union men—claimed was not a friend of organized labor. The result was that Mr. Ralph resigned, owing to many complaints.

He writes further and says that, having gotten rid of Mr. Ralph, the next move was to get rid of a chief in one of the divisions there; that he was removed from his position and given an inferior and subordinate position.

He writes of many incidents in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of partiality to union men and discrimination against men who were not connected with the unions. He writes of many intrigues that went on to displace some of the men who were not union men, and says that in every instance where they were displaced they were replaced with union men, and in the great majority of cases by men who were not so competent and who did inferior work.

If the conditions which he discloses are true, it is a very bad state of affairs. I will read, without giving names, some of the instances that he cites.

> Mr. ———, a lithographer, was employed in the bureau; a member of the lithographers' union; enlisted in the war; passed through battles in the war; asked for his reinstatement upon his return to this country from the war and was refused.

My informant explains that the lithographers' union is not connected with the Federal employees' union and is not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and that the men who belong to it are not considered union men.

> Another one: Mr. ———, of the watch force, and a friend of the organizer, was transferred on the rolls as a pressman and given a higher position at a higher rate of pay.

Mr. ———, an offset pressman, another member of the union, was discharged on trumped-up charges. Senatorial influences prevented his complete discharge.

Mr. ———, not a member of the union, was discharged on framed-up charges.

Mr. ——— enlisted from the general Printing Office and upon his return was sent to the bureau as a personal matter.

Mr. ———, formerly of the District of Columbia police force, was sent to the bureau, although no printer.

Seven practical lithographers from the States were discharged, all members of the lithographers' union, to make room for the organizer's friends without experience.

Mr. ———, a former walking delegate or coworker with the organizer in loading the bureau with undesirable help, was given a desirable position.

Mr. ———, the most able man in the room, was made foreman, but compelled to resign to make room for friends.

November 8, 1919, there were employed on 13 offset presses 21 journeymen, 3 apprentices, and 2 helpers, whereas if honest labor were encouraged there would be but 13 journeymen operatives and a helper for each press or journeyman, which would make a saving of at least $5 a day per press or man.

Mr. ———, nonunion, formerly foreman, compelled to resign.

I will not give the name of the writer of that letter, because conditions are such that I think it would be unjust to him for me to do so. He cites other instances, which I will not take the time to read.

I do not believe all charges of this character have been made to me. I think many similar charges have been made to other Members of Congress, and it is a question for Congress to decide whether it wants to take any cognizance of these things or not. If Congress does not want to pay any attention to them, if Congress does not desire to take any notice of these complaints, which I am sure have been made to other Members of Congress as well as to me, it is all right; let Congress go ahead and ignore them if it so desires, but I think they portray a bad state of affairs.

I believe that the influence of the Federal employees' union in the departments of the Government produces bad results in a number of respects. I do not think there can be any serious or valid objection to the employees of a department simply associating themselves together in a local union or band or association to meet and consult about their common good and to confer about their interests and present their grievances, if they may have any, to the head of the bureau or department; but I do not believe they should be affiliated with a higher and an outside power which is entirely outside of the Government departments, a foreign body, you may say, which has other interests, some of which may conflict with the interests of the Government and may place some other authority or power some time in conflict with the true interests of the Government.

When such a thing occurs, then inevitably the result is a divided allegiance on the part of the Federal employees; at least they are put in an embarrassing position, where they can not render full allegiance or loyalty to either one of two conflicting interests with which they are affiliated, to each of which they may think they owe some duty. Those conditions do arise; there is no doubt about that. We might as well be frank about it; we might as well face the facts as they are. We know that the American Federation of Labor in late months has repeatedly put itself in a position of opposition to Congress and to the United States Government. That may be all right for people who do not work for the Government; it may be all right for an independent citizen who is a farmer or tradesman or professional man or who works for a private institution. If he thinks that the Government is unjust about anything it is his privilege, as a citizen, to put himself in opposition to the Federal Government, providing he does not go too far in his opposition, and he takes the risk of doing that. However, I do not question his right to some extent, within the bounds of loyalty and law, to put himself in opposition to the Federal Government. That may be the right of a man or a body of men not working for the Federal Government; but those who are working for the Federal Government should not put themselves in a position where they can be drawn, through affiliation with others, into a position of opposition to the Government, which they are sworn to serve and from which they draw their living and to which they owe their supreme and entire allegiance.

As I have said, I am not at this time criticizing any association or any body of men which does not work for the Government in putting itself in opposition to any policy or action of the Government so long as those involved do not violate any law. Leave that for them to decide; leave that to their judgment. If people who do not work for the Government are banded together in a body or association, so long as they do not transcend the law, if they want to put themselves in opposition to the Federal Government, its policies or acts, or into an attitude of hostility thereto, let them decide whether or not that is proper. I am not now criticizing them; for my purpose at this time I concede their right to do so; but is it right for them to draw along with them, into their position of opposition or hostility to the Federal Government, those who work for the Federal Government? I say there we have an entirely different state of affairs, and that, I claim, is wrong.

As I understand, all, or nearly all, of the Federal employees' unions are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, a higher and superior authority, an outside body of organized labor which has no connection with the Government. Through that association it is inevitable that Federal employees will at times be drawn into a position of opposition to the Federal Government. The members of the Federal employees' union, I understand, all pay assessments to the American Federation of Labor; they pay dues to the American Federation of Labor, and they may be called upon to pay strike benefits to the American Federation of Labor.

At any rate, if the American Federation of Labor may put itself in opposition to the Government or to the peace and welfare of the country, the members of the Federal employees' union, who are thereby affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, must necessarily give that parent body their moral support, and thereby come in conflict with the interests of the Government for which they work. There have been, as we all know, instances of that kind. Last summer a threat was made that all of the railroad employees of the United States would go on a nation-wide strike, and while, as I understand, they are not all affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, some of them, I believe, are; and we know if the railroad employees had gone on a nation-wide strike they would have had the influence and support in their strike of the American Federation of Labor; in fact, it was plainly and openly so stated by officials of the Federation.

Had that strike occurred, and had the American Federation of Labor given a nation-wide railroad strike its moral and financial support, the employees of the Federal Government, who are members of the Federal employees' unions, would have been contributing by their moral support, and probably by dues and assessments and strike benefits, to the men who were arrayed in open opposition to the power and authority of the United States Government. That would have been a most deplorable state of affairs.

The only way to avoid the possibility of anything of that kind is for the employees of the Federal Government to form their own local associations, associating together for their common good and to advance their interests by means of their own local associations, but not to affiliate with an outside body of organized labor of higher power which might drag them into conflict with the authority of their Government.

The steel strike of last summer, which, to a very considerable degree, disturbed the industrial peace and welfare of this country, and no doubt in a measure increased the cost of living to all of the people, had the active support of the American Federation of Labor, its open support, its avowed support; not only its moral but, I understand, to some extent its financial support.

I am not saying anything against those who engaged in the steel strike; I am not here for that purpose; that is not the issue I am discussing to-day. I will concede that the steel workers had a right to strike. If they thought they were not getting justice and thought they could better their condition by striking and that the strike was justifiable, then they had a right to strike. We will let that part of it go at that. I am not finding fault, furthermore, with the action of the American Federation of Labor in declaring its sympathy and extending its support, moral and otherwise, to the steel strikers; but when we come to consider the fact that employees of the United States were drawn into the movement because of their affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, by extending their moral support and good will, and, possibly, strike benefits as well to the steel strikers, all of which went to increase and keep up the high cost of living and worked for industrial disturbance and unrest in this country, was it right for the employees of the Federal Government to be in that position and to be drawn into that attitude? If not entirely a question of right and wrong, was it best for the country, and was it best for the Government, that they should be allowed so to do?

Congress is the judge of that; Congress is the judge of whether it was right or wrong; Congress is the judge of whether or not it was best for that condition of affairs to exist; Congress is the judge of whether or not it was justified and a proper thing, a wholesome thing, a good condition of affairs. Congress can not escape that liability; it can not run away from it; it can not turn its back upon it; it can not close its eyes to it without being false to its duty. It is for Congress to decide whether or not that was best, and if Congress does not make the decision it is shirking and evading its duty.

If we meet the issue and decide that it was right, that it was best, that it was wholesome, and that it was justifiable for employees of the Federal Government to be drawn into affiliation with a higher outside body and into giving their moral and other support to an outside strike, to a private dispute, as it might be called, between employers and employees, which disturbed the rest and peace and prosperity of the country and aided in keeping up the high cost of living, and if we want to go on record and will go on record as saying that was right and best and that it has our approval, I will submit, if that is to be the judgment of Congress, but I think the matter should be decided.

I repeat, I see no objection to Federal employees combining in their own local associations for their mutual good, for consultation, and to advance their interests in a legitimate way; but I do not believe it is a good policy or to the best interest of the Government for associations of that kind to be allowed to affiliate with higher and superior bodies of organized labor, separate from the Government employees, which have no connection with the Government. I have given a number of instances of what I consider the detrimental effects of such affiliation, and I shall cite a few more that I think are apt illustrations.

One very startling phase, to my mind, of the Federal employees' unions and their autocratic rule is the fact, which I have learned, that those who join the Federal employees' unions are not permitted to resign from those unions. That seems anomalous to me. Once in the Federal employees' unions, according to the charters and rules of those unions, the members must be in for life or so long as they remain Federal employees. They are not permitted to resign. I never before heard of so autocratic a rule in any organization as that rule, a rule that a member is not permitted to resign.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if he has the rule to which he refers or has authority for saying that there is such a rule? I confess that it is entirely new to me. I supposed, of course, that any member of the Federation of Labor or of any organization affiliated with the Federation of Labor had a right to quit the organization whenever he chose.

Mr. MYERS. I am speaking of the Federal employees' unions, not of the American Federation of Labor. I have not the rule, but I have authority for what I say, and I will give the authority. I think it a most unwholesome rule, because I know there are many members of the Federal employees' unions who are tired of the domination of those unions. They do not believe in them. They are sorry they joined, and they would like to be out of them. They are opposed to the policies and methods of the Federal employees' unions, and they want to get out; they have tried to get out, but they have been informed they are not permitted to get out. I have here a copy of the letter, dated November 6, 1919, written by Mr. Van A. Zahn, secretary and treasurer of Federal employees' union No. 2 of the National Federation of Federal Employees, of this city. I have also a letter written by quite a number of the members of that Federal employees' union, signed by about a dozen of them, and addressed to Mr. Zahn.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. STERLING. Is the union of which the Senator speaks affiliated with the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. MYERS. I can not say positively. I think it is; but I am not speaking on that point now.

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator understand that the rules of the union itself, aside from any affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, prohibit a member from severing his connection with the union?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir. The point I am talking about now has nothing whatever to do with the American Federation of Labor. I am not charging it to the American Federation of Labor. I am not speaking about the American Federation of Labor at all, but about Federal employees' union No. 2 of the National Federation of Federal Employees, whether it is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor or not.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on this question I should like to say that the letterhead of the Federal employees' union states that it is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. MYERS. I thought it was.

Mr. KENYON and Mr. STERLING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. MYERS. I yield first to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator if the federations of employees of the Government of which he speaks do not provide against any strikes? Do they go to the extent of countenancing strikes?

Mr. MYERS. Some of them, at any rate, have nonstrike charters. I do not know whether all of them have or not. There was a vote taken in one of those unions a few months ago upon a question of amending the charter so as to eliminate the antistrike provision, and it did not quite carry, but came very near carrying.

Mr. KENYON. I have understood that that was the provision. Why is it any worse to belong to one of these unions if they do not have the strike provision—and I agree with the Senator that Government employees should not be allowed to strike—than it is to belong to a Masonic lodge or a church or any other kind of an institution? What is the harm in their getting together and talking over their affairs?

Mr. MYERS. I just stated that I had no objection to that whatever, if they do not affiliate with a higher and superior body of organized labor, apart from Government employees, which claims some allegiance from them. I make no objection to their own local associations. I now yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Then the Senator's objection does not go to the question as to whether an employee may sever his connection with the local union to which he belongs, does it?

Mr. MYERS. I think prohibiting resignations a very unreasonable rule and one which I am sure is distasteful to many members. I think it especially becomes objectionable when such associations are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, an outside higher body of organized labor.

Mr. STERLING. But standing separate and alone, the Senator's proposed amendment does not go to that question. I think he will admit that.

Mr. MYERS. My amendment relates to affiliation with higher bodies, not to rules against resignations. I am using that matter of a rule against resignations to show that no matter how distasteful such higher affiliation may be, a member of an employees' union can not get away from it as matters now are. I now resume my statement. About a dozen members of Federal employees' union No. 2 of the National Federation of Federal Employees wrote a letter, a copy of which I hold, to Mr. Van A. Zahn, secretary and treasurer of that Federal employees' union, stating that they wanted to withdraw from the Federal employees' union of which they were members. I have here a copy of the letter to those parties from Mr. Van A. Zahn, secretary and treasurer of Federal employees' union No. 2 of the National Federation of Federal Employees, which, it appears from the correspondence in my hand, is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Van A. Zahn is an official of Federal employees' union No. 2 of the National Federation of Federal Employees, and he speaks with official authority. He addresses one of the members who wrote the letter to him, saying certain ones wanted to withdraw. In Mr. Van A. Zahn's letter he says:

> You are informed that we are unable to accept their resignations on account of our constitution, which does not allow members to resign unless they are leaving the Government service. Our only course in their cases would be to mark their records here in the office as "dropped on account of nonpayment of dues," a course I would regret very much to take.

It appears, therefore, that Federal employees who join the Federal employees' unions, which are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, are not permitted to resign from those Federal employees' unions; that if they become dissatisfied with the course of the employees' unions or with their affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, or with any stand or attitude or action of the American Federation of Labor, with which they may object to affiliating, they are absolutely not permitted to resign from their local organization. I think that a monstrous act of autocracy.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. STERLING. The rule referred to by the Senator from Montana is, indeed, a very strange one—to say that a man must be bound to one of these associations or unions against his will when causes may have arisen that require or make it very desirable, at least, that he should separate himself from the organization. It is a very strange thing that he can not resign or retire. As a last resort, I suppose he has his remedy in the courts; but unless permitted to resign and sever his connection with the organization he would not be a free citizen.

Mr. MYERS. It costs money to go into court; and I do not think Federal employees who are dissatisfied with the employees' unions or their affiliation with other bodies of organized labor should be compelled to go into court to establish their individual rights. That is a degree of autocracy that I think amounts to the infliction of slavery, the deprivation of the individual will, and the suppression of all individual rights. I think it illustrates the plan on which Federal employees' unions are conducted in general, and the degree of coercion which the officers and managers of such unions attempt to exert and do exert and enforce in most instances over the men whom they have gotten into their power.

In further reply to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], I will say, as I said awhile ago, that I have no objection to Federal employees forming their own local unions amongst themselves, merely for the protection and advancement of their own interests; but, when affiliated with the American Federation of Labor or other higher bodies of organized labor, they are liable to be called upon to pay strike benefits, to contribute dues and assessments toward keeping up strikes and industrial disturbances that may be absolutely inimical to the authority of the United States Government and the welfare of the American people. I will, however, go into that a little later.

As I have said, my objection to the attitude of the Federal employees' unions is based on their affiliation with higher and outside bodies of organized labor which are entirely separate from and independent of the Government and which are liable to place Federal employees in an embarrassing position, where they will owe or think they owe a dual allegiance or a divided allegiance, so that their entire loyalty, allegiance, and devotion may not be given to their Government.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, of course some of these local unions have probably been affiliated with the American Federation of Labor for a long time—for years, in fact. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows of any case where a Federal employee, or the local organization to which that Federal employee belongs, acknowledges an allegiance to the American Federation of Labor superior to his or its allegiance to the United States as employees of the United States?

Mr. MYERS. I can not say as to that; I can not put my finger on any Federal employee who has acknowledged an allegiance to the American Federation of Labor superior to his allegiance to the Government. If he did so, he would be guilty of a violation of his oath, guilty of treason; he would violate the oath which he took when he became an employee of the Government. Nobody is going to make an acknowledgment of that kind, of course.

Mr. STERLING. Is not that really the very important thing now in this discussion, as to whether or not by virtue of his affiliation with the American Federation of Labor or the affiliation of his union with that organization he recognizes a superior allegiance? If he does, of course he will yield to the demands of the American Federation of Labor, and he will, for example, go on strike as against the interests of the Government and even imperil the interests of the Government by going on such strike. So it is very important to know whether or not that superior allegiance has ever been recognized.

Mr. MYERS. I do not think that a Federal employee has to go out on the street and shout out that his allegiance to the American Federation of Labor is superior to his allegiance to the United States Government, but he may commit acts in aiding the American Federation of Labor that place him in an attitude of hostility and of opposition to the authorities of the United States Government, which will amount to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. SMOOT. I have before me the statement of receipts and disbursements of the National Association of Federal Employees for the months of November and December. For the month of November they disbursed on account of affiliation with the American Federation of Labor $665.08, and for the month of December the amount paid on account of affiliation with the American Federation of Labor was $916.78. I take this statement from the Official Employee, a magazine for Government workers, volume 5, No. 7, issued February 14, 1920.

Mr. MYERS. I will give the Senator from South Dakota and the Senate some instances of what I think is the objectionable and detrimental effect upon the Government and upon Government employees of the affiliation of employees' unions with the American Federation of Labor. Last fall there occurred a strike of bituminous-coal miners which was clearly an undertaking to starve and freeze the people of the United States, who constitute the Government, into submission to what were deemed on all hands extreme, arbitrary, oppressive, and revolutionary demands of the miners. The President of the United States declared that strike was unjustifiable and contrary to law; the Attorney General of the United States declared it was unjustifiable and illegal; a Federal court at Indianapolis, presided over by Judge Anderson, declared that it was contrary to law, and it was enjoined on that ground. Yet, in the face of all of that and after all of that, the executive committee of the American Federation of Labor assembled here in Washington, right under the shadow of the Capitol, and declared its sympathy with that strike; declared in favor of the strike; declared that it would go to any lengths to uphold the strike; declared that it would do everything within its power to uphold that strike and to make it successful. I say that thereby the executive committee of the American Federation of Labor put itself in an attitude of hostility to and defiance of both the executive and the judicial branches of the Government of the United States.

I can not speak authoritatively, but I have no doubt that the American Federation of Labor contributed strike benefits to the coal miners who were on an unlawful strike in defiance of the United States Government, in defiance of the President, in defiance of the Department of Justice, in defiance of a Federal court. It was so stated in reliable newspapers. It was published in a Washington newspaper that the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia voted a certain amount of money to the striking coal miners, who were out in defiance of a court injunction, to sustain them during that strike. The Federal employees' unions of the District of Columbia are members of, constituent parts of, and affiliated with the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia, and they must have contributed their share to those strike benefits, and I am informed they did so.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. THOMAS. I am informed, in that connection, that what perhaps I might safely call an assessment was made for that identical purpose, and that as a result of that action the sum of $2 each was required from the members of these federated unions, or a great many of them, and that some of them paid it with extreme reluctance and virtually under duress.

Mr. MYERS. There were statements to that effect in the city newspapers. Now, I say, if those statements are true, then every Federal employee who contributed strike benefits or assessments to the striking coal miners, after the strikers had been put under the ban of the law by an injunction, rendered to the American Federation of Labor an allegiance superior to his allegiance to the United States Government, and I think that a most deplorable state of affairs. Others may look upon it lightly; others may pass it over lightly and give it little consideration, but I think it bespeaks a most deplorable and almost intolerable state of affairs.

There is an instance in which I think a divided allegiance resulted disastrously to the interests of the United States Government. I will not say that any contribution of a Federal employee to the maintenance of that strike caused him to neglect his work in the department or that the work of the department suffered; but if there were any such contributions—and it has been reliably so reported—I say that the dignity and authority and honor of the United States Government suffered at the hands of the very men and women who were being fed by that Government for which they were working—the Government which was supporting them and maintaining them. It is a state of affairs that I do not think should be allowed to continue. I do not think we should allow an opportunity for repetition of any such state of affairs. I think it is a monstrous state of affairs, if I have been correctly informed, and I have no doubt I have been.

The coal strike ended by compromise soon after that; but if that strike had gone on all winter, if it had gone to the extreme limit of the endurance of the strikers, see in what a condition the members of the Federal employees' union of this city would have been placed! See what their attitude would have been! They would have been forced into an attitude of open or covert hostility to the Government which they were sworn to support and obey and from which they were receiving money. It would have been taking a part of the money of the United States Government, drawing it in wages and salaries, and turning it over in part to lawless strikers, with which to fight the authority of the United States Government.

Of course, the coal strike did not go very far. It was ended by compromise. It may have been best that it was so ended, but I doubt it. I thought then, and think now, that it would have been better for the Government to have taken a firm, unyielding stand and to have fought it out with the coal strikers, regardless of what the consequences might have been. I do not believe in compromise with lawlessness. I believe it would have been better in the end for the Government to have maintained its stand for right. However, if the strike had gone further and lasted all winter and the employees of the Federal Government had continued to give strike benefits and assessments to the striking miners, it would have brought about a condition of affairs that would have been truly intolerable. Great suffering of the people would have resulted, and money paid by taxpayers to Government employees would have been used against them to prolong their suffering and defy the Government. I mention that as an instance of what this condition of affairs may lead to.

Now, mind you, please, I am not making any objection to Federal employees having their own local associations among themselves without any higher affiliation; and, mind you, please, further—get this, please—I am not now making any objection to the American Federation of Labor as such or to any of its actions. That is not the issue before me to-day. I am not now discussing that issue. I admit the right of labor to organize. I admit the right of the American Federation of Labor to exist, and if any of its component parts sees fit to strike and the American Federation of Labor sees fit to extend to the strikers strike benefits and assessments and moral support I am not now objecting to that. Let that stand and speak for itself. All I am objecting to to-day, at this time, upon this issue, is the affiliation of Federal employees with the American Federation of Labor, and I am not now objecting to the bill that is before the Senate. I am not now seeking its defeat. I am not urging its defeat. I am not now fighting the bill, but I am simply saying that I think the Federal employees, in the event of the enactment of this bill, should be required to elect between staying out of, staying away from affiliation with, the American Federation of Labor and getting the benefits of the bill. I say let them take their choice.

I am not saying anything against the Federal employees. I am not an enemy of Federal employees. I understand that I have been so characterized. I understand that one of the newspapers of this city, which is generally regarded as the organ of the Federal employees, has referred to me, among others in the Senate, as one of the enemies of the Federal employees. I am not an enemy of the Federal employees. I have voted for every bonus that the Federal employees have ever been given by the Government. I have done so cheerfully and willingly. I voted for the $240 bonus last year, and I expect to vote for it again. I am in favor of it. I think during these times of high cost of living that the employees should have it. Whether or not we should go any higher than $240 a year in granting a bonus I do not know. I have my doubts. I doubt if I would vote for any more, but I am willing to vote again for the $240 bonus. I have not cast any votes in this body that were inimical to Federal employees.

During the war I voted for the Borland bill, a bill that would have required Federal employees to work eight hours a day so long as the war might last. When our soldiers abroad were working and fighting ofttimes 24 hours a day in the trenches for $30 a month, I thought the Federal employees in the departments here, safe and snug in their departments, drawing fair salaries, should be required, as a war measure, to work eight hours a day, and I voted for it in the face of the opposition of Federal employees; but that is the only measure of which I can recollect at present for which I voted in the face of the pronounced opposition of Federal employees. So I am in no sense an enemy of the Federal employees; but I do not think they should be allowed to belong to unions which affiliate with an outside body of organized labor of a higher and superior character.

Now, I will go on to another phase of this matter.

We all know that the American Federation of Labor has declared war on all Members of Congress who have not voted as it wanted them to vote, and has declared that they are all to be defeated in the coming election, if up for reelection, if their defeat can be accomplished by the united action of organized labor all over the United States, with all the power that it can bring to bear. That is the privilege of organized labor. I make no particular complaint of that. I do not believe in class movements of that kind in politics, either for or against candidates for office. I do not believe it is a good American principle to try to cast thousands of votes in one block by pulling strings for or against any candidate on account of what he may have done or may not have done while in public office; but I am not now complaining of that. That, under the American system of government, is the privilege of any organization—the right to support or fight any candidate who is running for public office; but in that crusade against Members of Congress who have not been subservient to the will of organized labor, the Federal employees' unions must necessarily take part, and of it be a part, so long as they are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Therefore the Federal employees, the very clerks and employees whom we support by creating their positions and voting money and bonuses for their salaries, will be engaged in a factional political warfare, contributing their share of the expense, and giving their moral support to the movement to decimate Congress by eliminating from it all of the Members who have not been subservient to the demands of organized labor. The people whom we feed will be fighting some of us.

I make no complaint now about that as to members of organized labor outside of the Federal Government employ, but I do not believe it is fair or right, just or proper, or a good policy, or in the interest of the Government for organized Federal employees to engage in a crusade as a body against the reelection of Members of Congress simply because those Members have not voted in accordance with the wishes of some organized body outside of the Federal Government which is seeking to have its own desires enacted into law or which opposes certain laws.

It may be all right for people outside of the Federal Government employ to engage in such crusades if they want to. At any rate, they must be the judges as to their actions. I do not like the principle; I do not think it is wholesome; I do not think it is American. Be that as it may, I do not think Federal employees should allow themselves to be dragged into such partisan, factional, political activity—into saying: "Members of Congress who vote to please us will be reelected, if we can bring it about by acting in a body; and those who do not so vote will be defeated, if we can bring it about. We, the Federal employees, propose to use the very money that we draw from the Government, and that you vote to us, to defeat you for reelection if you do not vote as some class organization outside of the Government dictates that you shall vote."

We can not escape the conclusion that Federal employees will be drawn this year, during the coming campaign, into such a crusade. In fact, I have here an article clipped from a recent issue of the Washington Times, which is as follows:

CLERKS INDEX CONGRESSMEN—TABULATE SENTIMENT OF LAWMAKERS ON QUESTIONS AFFECTING SALARY.

All employees in the Government service, whether they live in Washington or San Francisco, will soon know just who are their friends or enemies in Congress, and they will be strongly urged to vote accordingly at the coming elections.

The National Federation of Federal Employees, in its headquarters at 1423 New York Avenue, is busily engaged at present card indexing every Representative in the Capital as an important part of the voters' information bureau which has been established by the federation.

The sentiment of Congressmen on the legislative program of the Federal employees' union has been carefully followed, and every vote cast for or against measures of concern to Federal employees has been tabulated.

SIMILAR TO AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR PLAN.

The union legislative program, including such issues as minimum wage, retirement, and numerous other measures, together with the attitude of each Congressman toward the program, is being prepared to send broadcast to the headquarters of the locals throughout the United States.

The system being followed by the national federation is similar to that of the American Federation of Labor in keeping tab on officials' attitude toward labor.

The employees' union will not only keep its membership of nearly 100,000 informed, but will disseminate as well its voting information to every employee in the Government service.

WATCH NEW CANDIDATES.

While present Congressmen will be the principal subject of such a list, new candidates for the office will not be overlooked. It is planned to sound out thoroughly each new aspirant to Congress as to his attitude toward the Government employee.

The National Federation of Federal Employees is massing its full strength to procure a friendly Congress. Not only will it blacklist certain Members of Congress, but every effort will be made to have every employee in the Government service exercise his full voting right.

To encourage voting among nonresident employees in Washington, the federation is completing data on election laws, election dates, and other information relative to every State in the Union, which can be handily gotten by calling at the headquarters of the federation.

I do not believe this bespeaks a wholesome state of affairs. I do not believe it is desirable for Federal employees to crack that kind of a whip over the heads of Members of Congress. As it is, they are doing it boldly, openly, and without reserve. I cite that as one of the things to which affiliation of the Federal employees with the American Federation of Labor leads, which, while not putting allegiance to the American Federation of Labor above their allegiance to the Federal Government, while not treason or disloyalty, I think bespeak an unwholesome state of affairs. It bespeaks a determination to effect an organization which will crack whips over the heads of Congress and dictate to Congress what legislation it shall and shall not enact and what it may and may not do. I believe that if allowed to be kept up it will lead to a condition that will tend to make the legislative department of the Government subservient to the employees of the executive department.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator might go further and assert, I think, with perfect truth that it has already had that tendency.

Mr. MYERS. It has that tendency now, and it has that effect to a large degree.

Mr. THOMAS. We know that many bills, appropriation bills and others, become effective by a majority vote of the Members of Congress because those thus voting, or a great many of them, are afraid to vote otherwise.

Mr. MYERS. We all know that is so.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. THOMAS. I will not interrupt him again upon this subject, but let me say that this condition of the civil service was predicted by its opponents long before it was established. I did not believe it then and, of course, it was generally discredited by public opinion, but those who inveighed against civil service, among other things, pointed out the certainty of organization followed by an attitude toward the legislative branch and possibly the executive branch of the Government as a result of thorough organization that would make the civil service the masters and not the servants of the United States Government.

Mr. MYERS. The predictions have undoubtedly come true. As to the open, bold, and avowed declarations of the American Federation of Labor, that it will exert every power to control the next Congress of the United States and make that Congress subservient to its will, we are all informed. It is reasonable to assume, I think, that in carrying out those declarations large sums of money will be expended. I have a clipping here from the New York World on that subject, which appears to be reliable and authentic, stating some of the arrangements that have already been made by the American Federation of Labor for raising a large campaign fund for putting in force its determination to control the next Congress of the United States. I ask that this article may be inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR IS EXPECTED TO RAISE HUGE SUM FOR CAMPAIGN USE—CONTRIBUTIONS ARE TO BE RESTRICTED TO 4,000,000 WORKER MEMBERS OF NATION.

(By John J. Leary, jr.)

WASHINGTON, February 20.

To make its campaign for the election of a Congress friendly to labor effective it is expected that the American Federation of Labor will in the course of the next few days issue an appeal to the unions of the country asking for funds.

Here is the political platform of the federation as expressed by its national nonpartisan political campaign committee:

Stand faithfully by our friends and elect them.

Oppose our enemies and defeat them, whether they be candidates for President, for Congress, or other office, whether executive, legislative, or judicial.

THOUSANDS TO BE SPENT.

As outlined, the campaign cost will run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, and it is expected that these will be provided in the form of small monthly assessments voluntarily levied.

As the federation has a membership of 4,000,000, an idea of the amount of money that can be raised is gained when the statement is made that a 5-cent per month assessment means $200,000 a month, and in the months remaining before the polls close in November, in excess of $1,500,000. The total sum is expected to exceed that amount.

Contributions to this fund will be restricted to members of the labor movement. Funds are not to be solicited and are not desired from either of the great parties, from their nominees, or from interests that in return therefor are likely to make demands later that might prove embarrassing.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES.

The money thus collected will be expended under the direction of a subcommittee appointed by the executive council of the federation made up of Samuel Gompers, Frank Morrison, and James O'Connell. In general charge will be a committee of 24, known as the American Federation of Labor National Nonpartisan Political Campaign Committee. On this committee are:

Mr. Gompers; James Duncan, head of the Granite Cutters' Union; Joseph F. Valentine, of the molders; Frank Duffy, general secretary of the carpenters; William Green; John L. Lewis, leader of the miners; T. A. Rickert, of the garment workers; Jacob Fisher, head of the barbers' international; Matthew Woll, president of the photo-engravers; Daniel J. Tobin, national head of the teamsters; Frank Morrison; John Donlin and William J. Spencer, of the building trades; James O'Connell, head of the metal-trades department, and A. J. Berres, its secretary; John W. Hays, of the printers; John J. Manning, of the clothing workers; James Lord, head of the mining department; Bert M. Jewell and John Scott, of the railroad department; and John P. Frey, editor of the Molders' Journal.

The woman voter will be looked after by Mrs. Sara A. Conboy, Misses Anna Fitzgerald, Melinda Scott, and Anna Neary.

TO ESTABLISH BUREAUS.

Under the direction of this committee a national press bureau, a bureau on organizing, and a bureau of records will be established here. Already the press bureau is functioning under the direction of Chester M. Wright, of New York, while Henry McInerney has been placed in charge of organization. The selection of a labor man of national note as director of the speakers' bureau will be made shortly.

For the use of the committee an entire floor of the Federation Building has been set aside. Additional room will be taken in the new building of the Machinists' Union, directly opposite the Federation Building, which will be ready for occupancy within a fortnight.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, I will offer in this connection this clipping from the morning press:

LABOR OPENS POLITICAL WAR—REPRESENTATIVES WHO VOTED FOR RAIL BILL ON BLACKLIST.

PHILADELPHIA, March 10.

Decisions of American Federation of Labor officials, reached in Washington two weeks ago, to oppose all candidates for public office who are regarded as foes of organized labor bore fruit here to-day in the opening of a campaign against 25 Pennsylvania and 7 New Jersey Members of the House of Representatives.

In a bulletin issued by the Philadelphia-Camden advisory boards of the federation attention is called to the railroad bill recently passed by Congress and approved by the President, and the defeat of all voting for it is urged.

Mr. MYERS. I read that article in the morning paper and I thank the Senator for introducing it at this point. It is most apropos.

It is a question for Congress to decide whether or not it is wholesome that we drift into a government of classes, where class is arraigned against class and where elections which are carried on are simply contentions of one class against another class for the control of the Government, for the benefit of some particular class of our people. Do we want to go further in that direction? Is it wholesome and desirable that we should have gone in that direction as far as we have gone?

What are the present tendencies? Are they not to go still further in that direction? Very decidedly, I say. Is it desirable that the employees of the Federal Government be dragged into that maelstrom of class contention, class arrayed against class, class seeking control over class for the benefit of class, that our entire Government and the election of officials be prostituted into a battle of classes for the control of the Government and of the whole American people for the benefit of some particular class?

Is it desirable that the employees of the Government, who hold their positions by our will and who draw their salaries from appropriations made by the Congress, should be active factors in that class warfare for the control by a class of the Government and of the entire American people for the benefit of some particular class? That is just what the employees of the Federal Government are now; at least those of them who are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. They have assumed that position boldly, openly, avowedly, and the Congress is the only authority that has the power to stop it.

Congress can only stop it by providing that the Federal employees' unions shall no longer be affiliated with outside higher, superior bodies of organized labor, or if they are so affiliated that they shall not participate in the benefits of legislation enacted by Congress, such as the pending legislation.

In this propaganda or campaign for class control of the Government, which is set forth in the newspaper article which I have just placed in the RECORD and in the newspaper article which the Senator from Colorado has just read, the Federal employees, so long as they are constituent and component parts of the American Federation of Labor, are bound to be drawn as a part and to take their part and to do their part therein and to contribute their share of money to defeat certain Members of Congress because those Members have incurred the hostility of certain classes and factions of our people by not bowing down to their will and being subservient to them. There is no escaping the conclusion that the Federal employees will necessarily be a part of that movement.

I have here some other newspaper clippings on the subject, a few of which I will read. I suppose the Senators have read most of them, but they are so bold and open in their declarations that I think it is well to set them forth as a part of my argument as to why Federal employees should not be allowed to go further in the direction in which they are now going:

The policy of the American Federation of Labor to support only those political candidates favorable to organized labor was unanimously indorsed by the Central Labor Union last night.

W. W. Keeler, president of the central body, announced he would appoint the legislative committee of the union to cooperate with the executive council of the federation. The resolutions adopted declared that District unionists will forsake party lines in the next general election to vote for candidates loyal to labor. The central body also adopted resolutions favoring investigation of the cooperative movements between the farmers and labor, with the object of bringing such organizations under control of the federation. A committee of 10 will be named from the District to assist in this investigation.

That is a clipping from a recent issue of the Washington Post. It relates to the action of the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia. The Federal employees' unions of the District of Columbia are members and component parts of the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia.

I have another article here from the Washington Post, of a date some time back, which I will read:

Organized labor's campaign to elect a Congress friendly to it was opened formally yesterday by Samuel Gompers, president, and J. A. O'Connell, vice president, of the American Federation of Labor, in addresses before a shipbuilders' trade convention here. Both speakers vigorously assailed the present Congress as the "most reactionary in the history of this country," and declared that from it labor need expect not the slightest assistance in the way of "remedial legislation."

Inviting the representatives of 500,000 shipyard workers present to join the federation in its fight to "reward our friends and defeat our enemies," Mr. Gompers promised them every assistance of his organization in forcing the Government to continue the war-time ship construction program to its logical conclusion, giving the United States the "greatest merchant marine in the world."

"We propose to move ahead no matter what obstacle is placed in our way," said Mr. Gompers, referring to the campaign. "The labor movement can not stand still; it must of necessity progress."

"It is a policy just the reverse of that in every other country," the speaker asserted, describing the liberal movement in Europe. "It is your duty to see that this tendency toward autocracy is curbed. In our fight you can expect the bitterest opposition from every enemy of labor, especially from every standpatter, reactionary, and some damn fools on the 'hill.'"

J. A. O'Connell, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, referred to antistrike legislation as a deliberate attempt to enslave labor through compelling workmen to remain on the job against their wills. "We must prepare to clean house," the speaker said. "Labor is entitled at the very least to an even break in representation in Congress."

Announcement of the federation's decision to wage an active campaign, he said, already has led Congressmen to review anxiously their records, but he warned these that labor would do its own reviewing.

The convention adopted a resolution favoring Government ownership and operation of the American merchant marine and another proposing that three members of the board supervising operation be representative of the men employed in the industry.

Mr. Gompers speaks for the Federal employees' unions of the District of Columbia when he refers to the "damn fools on the hill." He speaks for the Federal employees' unions of the District of Columbia, men and women who are holding positions by virtue of the will of Congress and drawing their pay from appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator think he speaks for them, but about the Senator and myself and others in similar positions?

Mr. MYERS. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. I think that is undoubtedly correct.

That is all right for Mr. Gompers. He is an independent citizen. As an American citizen he has the right to express his mind and to speak his opinion of Members of Congress or of any other official of the Government. But I do not believe it a proper attitude for employees of the Federal Government to be put in by their acknowledged spokesman. I do not think it comes with becoming propriety from employees of the Federal Government, through their authorized spokesman. I think it bespeaks an attitude that is not conducive to proper conduct of the Government and the upholding of the best interests of the Government and the common work in which Congress and the executive departments and employees of the Government are engaged, and should be engaged, with hearty good will and genuine cooperation.

There are other stands which organized labor is taking which I will not criticize at this time, in so far as is concerned organized labor not connected with the Government. It is the privilege of those engaged therein to take those stands. They are free American citizens. It is optional with them as to taking or not taking stands in regard to such public matters; but when they involve with them, as a part of their organization, Federal employees, I think it sometimes becomes wholly improper, so far as the Federal employees are concerned. Some things that may be all right for others I think not becoming or desirable in Government employees.

There is a general disposition on the part of organized labor all over the country to oppose and denounce any and all antisedition legislation at this time. It has most vigorously and bitterly opposed the enactment of the antisedition bill which was introduced in this body by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], which passed this body and is now in the House, and is known there as the Sterling-Graham antisedition bill. Organized labor all over the country is very vigorously opposing the enactment of that proposed legislation. I have received many communications on the subject. I will read one that I received from the officials of Cut Bank Lodge, No. 726, of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, of Cut Bank, Mont. It is addressed to me and bears a recent date. It is as follows:

BROTHERHOOD RAILWAY CARMEN OF AMERICA,
CUT BANK LODGE, No. 726,
Cut Bank, Mont., February 6, 1920.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As a body of loyal citizens, we, the members of Cut Bank Lodge, No. 726, Brotherhood Railway Carmen of America, are bitterly opposed to the Sterling-Graham peace-time sedition bill, and demand that the Senators and State Representatives of the State of Montana do not support the said bill in any manner, and we further demand that they make known their protests to the Congressmen and Senators who will pass on this proposed bill.

CUT BANK LODGE, No. 726,
BROTHERHOOD RAILWAY CARMEN OF AMERICA.
[SEAL.] W. E. HEILAND, President.
F. G. NEUMUTH, Secretary.

That is a peremptory demand by organized labor that the Sterling-Graham antisedition bill, and all other antisedition bills, be defeated. I have received protests against the Sterling-Graham bill and against all antisedition measures pending at this time from a large number of labor unions in Montana. I have here one which is most remarkable in its language and assertions. I have not answered it because I do not consider it is couched in respectful language. It is most intemperate and violent in its language. It evinces an unreasonable spirit, with which I think argument useless. I make this my answer to it. I will read it. It is as follows:

LIVINGSTON, MONT., February 4, 1920.

Senator THOMAS J. WALSH,
Senator HENRY L. MYERS, and Representative CARL W. RIDDICK,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIRS: There are at present before the Congress of the United States several bills seeking to amend the present Federal sedition laws. These measures are to increase the penalty for sedition, make it easier to secure convictions, and, above all, to advance the forces of reaction and repression.

The present sedition laws have proven adequate in the past for the protection of our country and its institutions, and we believe they are still adequate for the protection of American institutions.

In our opinion the desire for a more stringent sedition law is for the sole purpose of making it easier for the big interests of this country to fight organized labor. In proof of this, your attention is called to the records of the courts in trials of alleged violations of the espionage law. Thousands of members of organized labor have been railroaded to the pen for long periods of imprisonment, in some instances practically meaning a life sentence, for the sole reason that they made use of the good old American privilege of free speech, while agents of the German Government, representatives of the German war office, aliens, received light prison sentences for dynamiting ships, railroad bridges, munition plants, and carrying on a destructive campaign in the interests of the military forces of the Central Powers.

On the other hand, we defy you to show us a single instance where any rich man has received a jail sentence for graft connected with Government war work, although we have reason to believe graft was rampant in this country during the war, to wit, the Hog Island scandal, the powder graft, and the spruce railroad steal by Ryan in the interests of the Milwaukee Railroad, and profiteers generally.

When the Declaration of Independence was drafted, it was the rich, the exploiting class, royalty, and aristocrats generally that denounced it, while the workers everywhere hailed it with delight. To-day it is not the workers who are fighting the fundamental principles of our country, but the big interests that are seeking to destroy every vestige of free American institutions, free speech, free assemblage, and free press; all are being assailed by the big moneyed interests, while laboring men all over the country are defending Americanism.

If you and the other elected Representatives at Washington will read the Declaration of Independence sufficiently to have it committed to memory, you will be better able to truly represent your constituents and be much better American citizens.

The members of Federal Labor Union No. 15582, American Federation of Labor, desire you to know that we are opposed to all the sedition bills now before Congress, and, further, we think that it is time that our Representatives got back to the good old principle of Americanism and quit trying to enact class legislation in the interests of Wall Street, the big interests, and the exploiting class generally.

WM. JARVIS,
C. A. ROGERS,
G. W. ALLEN,
JAMES D. GRAHAM,
Committee.

Read and approved at a regular meeting of Federal Labor Union No. 15582, American Federation of Labor, held on Wednesday, February 4, 1920, and secretary instructed to send copies to Montana Representatives at Washington, D. C.

[SEAL.] J. G. CARTER,
President.
WM. JARVIS,
Secretary.

That communication, in my opinion, breathes a spirit that is not wholesome for the American people. It is a spirit of intense class antagonism. As to the gratuitous reflections flung at Hon. John D. Ryan, a distinguished citizen of Montana and late Assistant Secretary of War, a gentleman who enjoys the esteem and confidence of the President of the United States and the Secretary of War, there is absolutely no cause or foundation for them. Mr. Ryan received his appointment at the hands of the President and accepted it at a great sacrifice. The Secretary of War is thoroughly familiar with every detail of Mr. Ryan's official acts and repeatedly he has publicly declared that Mr. Ryan did nothing to deserve censure, but that his acts were characterized by honesty, fidelity, and the highest patriotism. The majority of a partisan committee criticized him, but charged no corrupt act or motive.

That communication shows an intent to sow seeds of dissatisfaction, industrial unrest, class hostility, industrial strikes, and opposition to acts of the Government. It is a remarkable communication, and I think breathes a regrettable spirit. That spirit comes from higher up. Undoubtedly it is being inculcated by high authority in circles of organized labor. These people are being taught that those things are true, and I regret it. It may be all right from their standpoint, if they want to assume that attitude and disseminate that spirit of insubordination and dissatisfaction among American citizens. I will not question their right to assume such an attitude, but I do believe it is most deplorable and highly regrettable that employees of the United States Government should be drawn through affiliation into participation in any such spirit and into upholding any such attitude by a class of our people.

That, I think, the most deplorable feature of it; the fact that it drags Federal employees into that attitude of hostility to the American Government, hostility to Congress, hostility to the enactment of laws intended for the benefit of our country, and of all of the people of our country, including wageworkers, as well as all others. This affiliation of which I have spoken at some length produces that very result and I do not think it should be allowed to continue.

I have received many communications from labor organizations demanding the release of Eugene Debs, Tom Mooney, and other so-called "political prisoners," as they are styled by the people who send me the communications. In large measure, so far as I have observed, organized labor has taken the position that Mr. Debs has committed no offense against the Government of the United States, against the laws of our country; that he is unlawfully and improperly imprisoned, and is being imprisoned as a part of a systematic warfare against organized labor. That idea is being spread, that poison is being spread and inculcated into the minds of wageworkers everywhere in the United States.

I have noted a number of remonstrances from labor unions against the deportation of Emma Goldman, Alexander Berkman, and the other anarchists who were deported at the same time they were. Of course, this is a free country; people can take that attitude if they want to; but I do not believe it is right or best for the employees of the Federal Government, through affiliation with outside organizations, to be dragged into that sort of hostility toward the Federal Government. I have here a clipping which I took from a newspaper only a short time ago. I will read it:

ASKS GENERAL AMNESTY.

WASHINGTON, February 27.

Union labor to-day joined the effort to obtain amnesty for all "political prisoners" being held in Army disciplinary barracks. At a conference with War Department officials, Hugh Frayne, representing the American Federation of Labor, and Mrs. Lucy Robins, of the Central Labor Bodies Conference of Greater New York, for amnesty for political prisoners, urged that another review be made of the charges against 2,050 men still imprisoned for war-time offenses.

Mr. Frayne said later that, in response to a request of the delegation, a promise was made that a distinction will be made at the time of the review between penal offenses and forms of strike activity.

While hope was held out for the early release of practically all prisoners, War Department officials were understood to have stated that the men who persist in refusing to obey the reasonable orders of the prison authorities will receive no consideration until they change their attitude.

Whatever may be thought of the propriety of independent citizens, who have no connection with the Government, in taking that attitude and pursuing that course—and I am not just now criticizing it; those who take that attitude are the judges of the right and propriety of it; this is a free country; a man may express any opinion he may wish so long as he does not violate the law—but whatever may be the propriety of it, I say I do not believe it desirable for Federal employees to be in affiliation with people who do take this attitude, and by such affiliation to be put in an attitude of hostility toward the Government which they are sworn to support, for which they are working, and from which they are deriving their living.

These utterances which I have quoted or to which I have referred all represent, in part, the Federal employees' unions of the District of Columbia, because they are affiliated with and are component bodies of the higher bodies of organized labor which take such stand and give utterance to such sentiments. When the higher bodies, through their spokesmen, utter such sentiments and take a stand of critical opposition to the action of the Government, its courts, and Congress, they speak, in part, for the employees of the Government, because the employees of the Government are affiliated with them, and they have a right to speak, in part, for the Federal employees. There can be no escape from that. Spokesmen of organized labor are bound to represent, in what they say, the Federal employees, as well as all other branches of organized labor.

I do not believe it desirable that Federal employees be led into a continual fight on their Government, a continual course of criticism and hostility to the actions of their Government, which they are serving. Let others do it if they may wish; I am not now criticizing them; I am not at this time objecting to that; it is not the objection I am making. What I object to at this time is that Federal employees are, by affiliation, necessarily a part of an apparent crusade to sow seeds of unrest and dissatisfaction and to cause critical opposition to our Government and hostility to the acts of the Government, and that it thus comes from people who are working for the Government and whom we are supporting by appropriations that Congress makes. That is my objection. I do not believe it right or desirable or wholesome; and I do not believe it should be allowed to continue. I believe Congress should exercise its authority to step in and put an end to such a situation. Congress should say, "You can have your local associations and organizations and unions if you desire them, and you can participate in the benefits of this bill if you want to, but you can not enjoy its benefits and affiliate with some outside body or organization which is liable to lead you into critical opposition to the acts of your Government from which you are deriving these benefits."

We all know that we are living in an era of great industrial unrest, in which there are strikes and threats of strikes on all hands. Undoubtedly organized labor is back of those strikes and threats of strikes; that is what it is organized for. I am not criticizing that now; but the whole tendency of organized labor at this time is to increase wages, reduce working hours, curtail production, and cause industrial unrest through the medium of the strike. Those who are doing that have announced boldly their determination to get control of the Federal Government, so they may have their way, and in order to do that they are undertaking to ally with them the farmers' organizations of the country.

I do not think the farmers, if they look at their true interests, will approve a movement to increase wages, reduce working hours, and curtail production; I do not believe their interests lie in that direction, and I believe that that attempt largely will be futile; but the Federal employees of the Government, by virtue of their affiliation, are being drawn into an attempt to unite the farmers with the wage workers to control the country by class interests. I believe the sensible farmers' organizations are opposed to and will oppose such a move.

I have here a statement, recently issued by the authorized representatives of a number of the leading farm organizations, which decries the constant tendency of organized labor to increase wages and reduce working hours and curtail production, and thereby keep up the high cost of living, which is the inevitable result. As a part of my remarks I ask that this statement be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

FARMERS' VIEWS ON NATIONAL QUESTIONS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 12, 1920.

So much has been said in justification of the organized strike that we deem it advisable to outline the position of the farmers of the country upon this all-important question at this time. We desire to discuss the question more particularly as applied to the railroads, for the reason that the farmers are more directly affected by railroad strikes than strikes in other lines of industry or commerce.

The statement has been made so often and kept to the front so continuously that organized workers have an inherent right to strike, when and wherever they please, that the public generally has accepted the statement as being true, and, as a result, strikes have in times past received to some extent the support of public opinion. Recent events and happenings, however, indicate that the country generally is giving this question serious consideration, and as a result there is a growing demand that some other method be employed to bring about the settlement of controversies between employer and employee. This demand is more pronounced on the part of the farmers of the United States than of many other classes, for the reason that they are affected more directly than most other classes. The farmers develop a section of country adapted to the production of perishable products. They spend vast sums of money in building houses and barns, digging drainage or irrigation ditches, and in bringing the land up to a high state of productivity. Such land could not have been developed if the transportation facilities had not been such as to insure that the farmers could get their products to the markets of the country with the least possible delay and before they become unfit for consumption. What applies to the production of perishable products applies, in varying degrees, to the production of all other products, and in no case could the farmers undertake to produce extensively or beyond their own needs if there were no facilities for transporting their products to the consuming centers.

On the other hand, no great city could be built up if it were not for the fact that those who live in them may depend, first, on the farmers of the country to produce an ample supply of food for all; and, second, on the railroads or other transportation facilities to function properly at all times and deliver farm products to city consumers with regularity and as needed.

If the above is true, and no sane man will say otherwise, then it naturally follows that those who believe that labor has an inherent right to organize a strike, believe that such organizations have a right to starve the people of the cities to death, on the one hand, and to destroy the property of the farmers on the other. No such right has ever existed and no such right exists now. It is economically unsound, and the American people can and will work some other method for the settlement of such controversies. No set of men has ever had the moral or legal right to destroy property or cause suffering by conspiring together, and the welfare of all the people must ever remain superior to that of any class or group of people.

A farmer produces a crop after months of toil and heavy expenses, only to find, when it is ready to move to the market, that he is confronted with a strike, and he sees the result of his work utterly destroyed, while he stands helplessly by and witnesses the destruction. He acted in good faith in the production of his crop, and he had every reason to believe that he would have no trouble in getting his products to the consuming centers and receive a reward commensurate with the labor and expense required to produce it, but the inherent right (?) to strike has robbed him of it all, and where is his remedy? He has none.

What would be the verdict of the people if the farmers of the United States should suddenly decide to go on a strike and refuse to supply the wants and needs of those who are not in a position to produce food and clothing for themselves? They would be condemned from one end of the country to the other, and the fact would be pointed out that they, as the owners and tillers of the land, had no right, either moral or legal, to bring about such a calamity. If the farmers who own and occupy the land have no such moral or legal right, then why should it be conceded by anyone that those who handle the farmers' products have a right to block the transportation or industrial facilities of the country and thus jeopardize the food and clothing supply of the Nation? If the farmers have no such rights, those who handle his products have no such rights.

The farmers must look to Congress to solve this great question in the light of fairness for all and not for the benefit of the few at the expense and perhaps misery and suffering for all.

T. C. ATKESON,
Washington representative the National Grange.
GRAY SILVER,
Washington representative American Farm Bureau Federation.
E. A. CALVIN,
Washington representative Cotton States Board.
JOHN A. SIMPSON,
President Association State Farmers Union Presidents.

Mr. MYERS. It will thus be seen that some of the farmers' organizations of the country recognize the decided tendency of organized labor to resort frequently to the strike as an industrial weapon and decry it and deny the promiscuous and unlimited right of strike and point to the disaster sure to follow such a course. Are farmers any more interested in good government, industrial peace, and justice for all than Government employees should be? No. Then why should Government employees take an opposite stand? Notwithstanding I do not believe farmers will generally act with organized labor in trying to obtain class control of the Government, I think there is grave danger that the movement will succeed, unless the people arouse and exert themselves.

The people seem to be asleep to the dangers that beset them. There are about 530 Members of Congress. Unless there should be a most marvelous, almost a miraculous, awakening of the people, I predict that the Sixty-seventh Congress, which will come into existence in less than a year, will contain at least 200 Members who will be in entire accord with all of the demands of organized labor; and that in the Sixty-eighth Congress, which will come into existence in less than three years, there will be at least 400 Members who will be in entire accord with all of the demands of organized labor.

Then, and in that event, I predict a program of legislation to nationalize, as it is called—I call it sovietize—the industries of this country. If that should be the will of a majority of all of the people and in accord with peaceful methods and the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, all right; but I do not believe it would be advisable or in accord with the principles of our Government, and I think the attention of all of the people of the country should be called to the undoubted tendency to that end, in order that there may be a full, fair, and complete expression of opinion of all of the people on the issue, and that a majority may intelligently register its will.

The pending amendment to the civil-service retirement bill now before this body is an amendment which is intended to prohibit the affiliation of Federal employees' unions with higher and outside bodies of organized labor. It would not in any way prevent Federal employees from forming their own unions and associations amongst themselves for their own mutual advancement and the promotion of their own welfare and interests; I can see no serious objection to that; but the effect of the pending amendment would be to prevent such unions of employees from affiliating with outside and higher bodies of organized labor.

I will say frankly that the pending amendment has been denounced by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor. That council has demanded that I withdraw my amendment or that it be defeated by the Senate. To withdraw it, I decline. Whether or not it shall be defeated by the Senate is a question for the wisdom of the Senate.

I have supported many measures desired by or in the interest of organized labor. No longer ago than the day before yesterday I voted in this body for an amendment which was intended to prevent a reduction in the compensation which the policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia are now receiving. I may vote for other measures desired by organized labor. I have been opposed to some of the demands of organized labor and have voted against some of the measures which it demanded. I may vote against more measures demanded by it. However, whenever I have opposed demands of organized labor I have always done so in respectful, reasonable, temperate, calm, dispassionate language, free from vituperation, epithets, and abuse. I can differ from people without using abusive language about them. When the time may come that I am not a free man and untrammeled Senator, free to follow in this body my own conscientious convictions and to use my own best judgment in the discharge of my duties without fear or favor and without influence from outside this body, private life will look good to me. I made a living before I entered the Senate, and I think I could do so again. I have made my living since before I was 21 years of age, sometimes meager, always modest, but I was satisfied with it, and I could be satisfied with it again.

I think I have given the Senate ample reasons and illustrations as ground for the adoption of the pending amendment. I have made to the Senate, I think, some logical arguments and cited some appropriate illustrations in favor of the adoption of the amendment. Mr. Gompers says it must not be adopted. That is for the Senate to decide; I am perfectly willing to leave it to the wisdom of the Senate. I want each Senator in voting upon this amendment to follow his own conscientious convictions and to use his best judgment. I expect Senators to do that. It is, I repeat, simply a question for the Senate to decide.

If the Senate thinks that it is right and best for Federal employees' unions to affiliate with higher outside bodies of organized labor; if the Senate wants to go on record in approval of that policy; if the Senate wishes to give that policy its sanction and wishes to let the employees of the Government know that the Senate believes that it is right, proper, and advisable, here is a good place and now is a good time to do so. On the other hand, if the Senate disapproves of that policy, this is equally a good time and place to do so.

I think this question should be settled; I want it settled; it is one that is being agitated and is attracting considerable attention. If the Senate in its wisdom says it approves of the policy of affiliation by Federal employees with higher and outside bodies of organized labor, if the Senate says it believes it is right and wants the practice to continue, I shall bow to the will and wisdom of the Senate; but I think the matter should be decided; I think it is of momentous importance.

In addition to the incidents and illustrations which I have used as arguments to uphold the adoption of the amendment which I have offered, I will give the Senate one more. There appeared in the morning newspapers of the country on the morning of the 31st of March an Associated Press dispatch of the day before, which I read, as follows:

CHICAGO, March 30.

With 1,000 city hall clerks, stenographers, and bookkeepers on strike to-day, the municipal garbage-reduction plant closed through the walkout of 400 garbage handlers, and the threat of 90 per cent of firemen to resign unless wage advances were granted, Chicago to-night faced a general strike of city employees.

The city hall was picketed by striking clerks and stenographers. The police were called to preserve order after a stenographer who remained on duty was attacked. The sessions of the city council also were guarded by policemen.

The city council, which to-day rejected a revised budget calling for an increase of $4,000,000 to provide salary advances for city employees, met again to-night in an endeavor to find a way out of financial difficulties.

Other groups of city employees, including sewer workers, street inspectors, pumping-station engineers, and the laboratory staff of the health commissioner's office, threatened to-day to strike unless wage advances were granted.

The strike of the garbage handlers forced 150 teamsters out of work. Window washers at the city hall also quit to-day.

Threats that 90 per cent of city firemen would resign of they were refused an increase of $300 a year were contained in a letter from President George B. Hargan, of the firemen's association, to Mayor Thompson and Fire Chief O'Conner.

That is one more illustration of what the unionization of Federal, State, and city employees may lead to if allowed in affiliation with outside influences.

I do not know that those city employees of Chicago were affiliated with the American Federation of Labor or any other outside higher organization. The article does not disclose. They may not have been, and I admit that Federal employees might of their own motion and accord go on a strike against the Government, even if not so affiliated; but I think that they would be far less apt to do so if not so affiliated, and if they went on a strike without such affiliation they would be thrown upon their own resources to keep up the strike, whereas if they were affiliated with any outside, higher, and more powerful body of organized labor—with the American Federation of Labor, for instance—they would have brought to their aid and support all of the powerful influence and support of that outside organization.

It is said that nearly all, if not all, the Federal employees' unions have antistrike provisions in their charters. That, I think is true; but we know from newspaper accounts and from other authentic reports that there is much muttering and rumbling of a disposition among some of the Federal employees to eliminate the antistrike provision from charters of the employees' unions and that that provision can be eliminated. It is not fixed and irremovable. It is not irrevocable. It may be eliminated, and there is evidence of very much disposition in some quarters to eliminate it. The disposition in that direction seems to be growing; and I know from publications issued by some of the Federal employees' unions, from newspaper reports, Associated Press dispatches, and other authentic sources of information that in some of the meetings and conventions of Federal employees' unions speeches have been made boldly declaring in favor of eliminating the antistrike provision from the charter and, in some instances, boldly advocating the right of strike by Federal employees, the same as by other workers, the same as by employees of industrial and commercial enterprises.

This is a question which is pressing upon the country and pressing upon Congress, and I do not think Congress should sidestep it. I think it is the duty of Congress to face it and settle it, one way or the other. I think the time has come to settle it. I want to see it settled. I think it is in the interest of the country, the Government, and the employees themselves that it be settled.

As I have said, I have no objection to the departmental unions of employees of the various departments. I never have opposed that; but I do think that the matter should end there and that Federal employees should be prohibited from allying themselves in any way whatever with powerful influences outside of the Government. I think they should be prevented from forming any allegiance or alliance with any influence other than that of the Government for which they work and to which their supreme duty is owing.

I favor liberal compensation to Federal employees. I believe in giving them good, fair, adequate compensation; something more than a living wage. I have always stood in this body for that. I have voted for every bonus that has been proposed for Federal employees in every annual appropriation bill that has come before the Senate since I have been a Member of this body. I voted for the $120 bonus, two or three years ago, for all Federal employees. For the last two or three years, each year I have gladly voted for the $240 bonus. I voted for increases in compensation for the policemen and firemen of the District. In the latest legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which the Senate passed yesterday, I really was inclined to favor a bonus of $360 a year for Federal employees. I do not think it would have been too much and if the committee had recommended it I would have voted for it, but I felt disposed to respect the judgment of the committee which had investigated the matter and passed upon it. I think we should be careful in these times about increasing the expenses of the Government; but I do believe in fair and liberal compensation for Federal employees, and I have always so voted; that is my record in this body. I also believe, however, in undivided allegiance upon the part of those employees to their supreme duty, that of service to their employer, the United States Government, without any alliance with any outside body or influence whatsoever.

I think my amendment is just and proper, and that it should be adopted and that the issue should now be settled by Congress as to whether or not such affiliation as this amendment is aimed to prevent is to be allowed in future. I do not think the matter should be allowed to remain in doubt or held in abeyance any longer.

Therefore, with these remarks, I submit it to the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, at the outset let me say that I am not opposed to the object of this bill, which is designed to provide a pension fund for the retirement of those who have devoted the greater part of their lives to the civil service. I have been gazetted as an opponent of the principle, for what reason I do not know, except it be that in the discussion of the bill, in slightly different form, before the last Congress I listened to the criticisms of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and was practically persuaded that a different system from that outlined was essential for the protection of the Government and as well for its employees.

I believe in a system of pensions, intelligently devised and applied, with justice as its foundation. Those who give their lives to the country in the military and naval service have the highest possible claim upon our bounty, and their dependents left behind should be the object of the Government's most solicitous care and consideration. Those disabled in whole or in part, either by casualties or by disease, while in the country's service, should also be recompensed to the extent of such disability. The officers of the regular line or staff, whatever the nature of their duties, all of whose time is given to their duties in the Army or the Navy, upon retirement should and do receive a fairly adequate compensation in ordinary times; and the same should be true of those who serve the country in a civil capacity. The men and women devoting their lives to such service, giving the country the best that is in them, should, upon reaching a period of life when their mental and physical activities are on the wane, be also the subject of our generous consideration. I believe that no government should go beyond this, since that converts a pension system into a bounty system, and scatters the public revenues, without regard to the nature of the service or the need of the beneficiary, to all who have worn the uniform whatever their service. That system, which has disgraced and disfigured the legislative history of the past 50 years, is, in my judgment, indefensible, and has much to do with the pending demand of soldiers of the recent war for compensation or a bonus, equivalent in the aggregate to about two and a half billion dollars.

So I am not opposing the principle of this bill, and I want to assure the distinguished Senator having it in charge that I have no intention of postponing a vote upon the measure. I have some views, however, upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, which I shall support, and to which I wish to give expression before a vote is reached.

Like all amendments offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] its purpose is clear and unmistakable. It proposes to exclude from the benefits of this bill all employees of the Government affiliating with outside organizations which believe in the strike as a weapon of offense or defense, or both; and if it is accepted, as it should be, it will go very far to the settlement of the proposition and serve to establish a conservatism in the civil service regarding this and kindred subjects that in the end will redound to their benefit quite as much as, if not considerably more than, the benefit of the country at large.

Mr. President, I do not think that we can fairly consider this subject without directing attention to some existing conditions in the industrial world, and to those which have developed since the end of the Great War, because it is necessary, in order to justify this proposed legislation, to demonstrate that it is necessary, and that if conditions remain as they are, they will be aggravated by the precedents now existing and which are multiplying day by day throughout the country. I do not think I exaggerate, Mr. President, when I declare that the labor movement, so called, never until recently intended to comprehend within its ranks the officials and employees of the public, whether engaged in national, State, or municipal service. The object, and the legitimate object, of labor organizations is to meet modern conditions made necessary by organizations of employers and of capital, thus giving to them that collective strength which proceeds from union and which is essential to meet and hold its own when confronted by similar association with which they have to deal.

The fundamental idea lying at the foundation of organized labor, in English-speaking countries, at any rate, has been the assumption—a correct one, in the main—of an antagonism of interest and of purpose between employer and employee, a divergence of interest, and therefore of opportunity and of advancement, in which the wage earner acting individually is handicapped and must be overcome by counter organization. It is a sound idea and one with which no man acquainted with the industrial history of the last century can challenge.

That situation can not be applied to public employment. There can be nothing but community of interest in public affairs among all who represent the Government in whatever capacity. We speak of the Government as a sort of an abstract entity, existing apart and of itself, generally unmindful of the fact that Government consists of every employee and every official, from the highest to the lowest, whose activities are essential to the operation of public affairs. Hence all employees, whatever their grade, all wage earners of the Government, whatever their position, together with the heads of bureaus and of departments, and the President of the United States as well, constitute the Government. To argue, therefore, the existence of an antagonism, either of interest or of purpose, between those engaged in humbler occupations for the public and those engaged in higher occupations for the public is to my mind unthinkable.

Once it is introduced or acknowledged, the Government is divided against itself, antagonisms necessarily ensue, politics becomes the trade of those who fear that competition or a conflict of interest may result in their injury, and the public service suffers in consequence. Of course, organization of employees to better their condition, to improve their minds, to promote their social intercourse, and in a perfectly proper way to present their views to legislators is to be encouraged so far as they are legitimate. That they have accomplished much good goes without saying, and that is true whether we consider the associations of national employees or those of the States and the different localities.

But when, in addition to such organization, the public servants affiliate with a private union, national in extent, founded upon the existence of this antagonism and conflict of interest, identify themselves with their constitutions, their policies, and purposes, with whatever reservations, it is inevitable that they must some time, somewhere, confront a divided allegiance, one to the Government, which is their employer and of which they are a part, and the other to the outside organization, of which they are also a part, but to which they should be strangers in interest and therefore in policy. Who doubts the direction of the scale which seeks to balance such a situation?

Even in the matter of dues, contributions must be made to the outside organization, as required by the terms of its charter. These, whether general or special, must be liquidated, because, as was shown the other day by the Senator from Montana, once a man joins this organization he can never resign, and he fails to pay his dues at his peril. He is just as much a part of the organization as though it were a machine, each and every portion of which is essential to the remainder. They may in their own constitution seek to guard against strikes of any character and insist upon the observance of that reservation. It is possible that such a reservation would be respected; but the sympathy, the identity of interest, and the financial contributions remain the same.

I am told by good authority that when the great steel strike was in full blast agents of organized labor went through the public buildings, or some of them, in the city of Washington to collect a special levy of $2 per head from the members of the employees' unions, the money to be used for the benefit of those engaged in that tremendous industrial upheaval. I hope my information is incorrect, but I do not think it is.

Men and women in the employ of the Government had no alternative, because of their affiliations, but to comply with this requirement. Many of them did so reluctantly, under duress; but, having deprived themselves of the right or the power of refusal, they were just as much bound by the demand as though they were themselves a part of the striking force and engaged actively in the effort to make it effective.

The Senator has called attention to conditions in Chicago, and there we have a graphic illustration of the effect upon government of organized employees. These are striking for higher wages, but using all the weapons of an industrial strike, excluding citizens and taxpayers from their own buildings, which leads ultimately to the interference of State authorities and the use of the military arm of the Commonwealth, not only for the preservation of order, but that the machinery of the great city may again function, albeit imperfectly.

The Boston police strike is still fresh in the memory of all. Its approval by the American Federation of Labor almost immediately followed the calling of the strike and while the city was in the hands of the lawless, criminal, and riotous elements always ready in the great metropolitan centers of the country to take advantage of such conditions and ply their trade in bloodshed and murder and robbery with impunity. You can no more defend such action upon any principle than you can defend treason against the Constitution, which many grades of employees are required to take an oath to support, because if it can be defended as to a municipality it may be maintained as against the Nation.

I have no doubt there is a basis for the action of the Chicago employees; that is to say, not receiving sufficient compensation to enable them to get along, they have demanded more and have taken this method of securing it. But if a man is not satisfied with his public job, no law prevents his resignation, and at the present time when the labor market is so short I do not see how any man or woman of enterprise and ambition, normally constituted, can remain in the Government employ, because the longer they do so the more certain it is that they lose their power of initiative, their sense of self-reliance, and their ambition to get on in the world. They become cogs in an enormous wheel, and there they remain until worn out and cast aside. These employees, however, not content with refusing to work, propose that no one shall perform the work, however badly it may be needed. That means a contest against the Government itself.

Here is an object lesson that I wish all Senators, most of whom are unfortunately absent, would take to heart and understand before they cast their votes upon the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. In 37 cities of the Union the police are organized and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, whose official heads not only defend but encourage the multiplication of these affiliations, and I understand were disinclined to cancel the charter given to the Metropolitan police of this city when demand was made upon them to do so.

I can easily imagine the unionization of every police force in every considerable town in the United States, their affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, and a consequent subjection to its purposes, its objects, and its policies; and it is easy to go one step further and imagine a strike of the policemen, we will say, of the city of Macon, Ga., leading to a sympathetic strike of similar organizations in all parts of the country. How such a situation can possibly consist with a republican form of government, or any other form of government so far as that is concerned, is beyond my comprehension. It is unthinkable, and if the Congress sits here supinely, cognizant of these conditions, both actual and potential, and takes no action, then it becomes particeps criminis to a movement that is dangerous to the integrity of American institutions. We can stop it among employees by prohibiting it, and the people of the United States, the independent, intelligent, reflective, thinking masses of our population, will say amen without regard to local resentments and adverse criticisms, which every public man must encounter if he exercises any independence at all in legislation.

The Senator from Montana is not alone in his viewpoint; indeed, it was anticipated by the President's last industrial commission, which made a report sometime ago, section 5 of which was devoted to this subject. I read from the comment upon labor conditions by President Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University, in the New York Times of March 7, the article bearing the title "Why the public has lost sympathy with strikes":

> In section 5, which relates to Government employees, there is another hopeful statement to the effect that no Government employees who are concerned with the administration of justice or the maintenance of public safety or public water supplies should be permitted to join or retain membership in any organization which authorizes or orders strikes or which is affiliated with any organization which uses the strike. Another important sentence is to the effect that no interference with the continuous operation of Government functions through concerted cessation of work or threats thereof can be permitted.

President Eliot goes on to say that—

> These statements will doubtless be acceptable to a very great majority of the American people, including the greater part of the working class, commonly spoken of as labor, organized or unorganized.

And in that I think he is entirely correct. Indeed, I can not conceive how any report of any commission, official or otherwise, upon this subject could fail to make a recommendation, for it strikes one in the face instantly that he proceeds to a discussion of modern industrial conditions. We can not avoid it, and should not avoid it, if we could, for we were sent here to meet such problems and legislate upon them, and if we are afraid to do it we should resign and go home. It is better to be useless at home than to be obstructive or compliant in public life.

Canada has confronted this situation. I read a clipping from the Washington Post of March 6, 1920:

> DENY RIGHT TO JOIN UNIONS—CANADA PLACES BAN ON GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.
> The right of employees of the Dominion Government to join labor unions was denied in a letter sent to-day by the cabinet to the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress.
> The letter adds that, in so far as private industry is concerned, the Government already has sanctioned the workers' right to organize and has recognized the wisdom of collective bargaining on more than one occasion.

That is comparatively recent. I have not observed any comments in the press regarding this order, which seems to be fundamental and which our own Government might well copy. Indeed, it should have been done long since, but in this country we are very fond of the game called "passing the buck," and it is passed wherever possible from administrative to legislative hands, and vice versa. We sometimes pass it to the judiciary, feeling that they will safeguard the institutions and welfare of the country, and while we gratify certain elements among our own constituency by voting as they desire, leaving the ultimate responsibility to the Supreme Court of the United States, I might add, parenthetically, that we have sometimes regretted having done so in view of the results secured from that department of the Government.

Mr. President, while it may be true that many of these organizations, perhaps all of them, have reserved to themselves the right of refusal to enter into strikes or to participate in any manner concerning them, it still remains that they become politically active. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] the other day read into the RECORD a newspaper clipping which outlines what the Federal employees' unions are doing politically, from which it is seen that this political activity synchronizes with the declaration of the American Federation of Labor regarding the forthcoming political campaign. It is and will be their purpose to tabulate the public record of every Member of this Congress, not for the purpose of checking him up generally, not to lay that record before the people and let them judge whether it is creditable or otherwise, but to ascertain just how each and every Member has spoken or voted upon legislation in which they are interested.

A Senator, Mr. President, if such a thing were possible, may have opposed every salutary measure during his service and advocated every pernicious measure upon which he has been called to act; he may be entirely committed to great corporate interests; he may sympathize with the enemies of his country; he may have flouted and disregarded public opinion and the clear requirements of his official duty as regards every subject of national or international concern, and this association is indifferent to the record; but if he has failed to comply with its requirements regarding any matter which they desire or to which they are opposed he is to be retired from public life.

I do not think any man assuming the responsibility of a Senator or of a Member of the other House should for a moment shrink from his record. I wish the people would study them more closely than they do; it would be better for them and sometimes better for us; but I do contend that the public employees of the United States have no more right to dictate to me or to you, Mr. President, what our course shall be here and no more right to advertise something in which they are interested and concerning which our votes have offended them than have the Senate and the House the right to inquire into their political affiliations, their notions upon public questions, or the lines of their public conduct so long as they offend no law while in the employ of the Government.

The time was in older republics which passed their meridian and lapsed into ruin when aggregations of public interests did precisely that thing. The disappearance of independence of the people's representatives sounded the knell of their inevitable dissolution.

When Lucius Q. C. Lamar was first elected to Congress, having accepted the office very reluctantly, he informed the nominating convention that if he came here they could not do his thinking for him, either between the plow handles or behind the counter; in other words, if he was to represent them, he would do so according to his own judgment and to the best of his ability. The time was, Mr. President, when that was the attitude of every man in either House of Congress, when modern propaganda was unknown, and when a Senator's daily mail could easily receive his consideration in the course of an hour. That time has passed. We now receive copious and multitudinous petitions, telegrams, letters, appeals, demands, to take this, that, and the other attitude upon everything of practical importance that comes to our calendar. Half a man's constituents sometimes tell him to vote "yea" upon a particular proposition or be damned, and the other half assures him at the same time that if he does so he certainly will be damned. That is when some men feel like taking to the woods. That is bad enough, but to have semipolitical organizations of the men and women who are dependent upon Congress for their positions through legislation, and resenting refusal of their demands and clamoring for political heads, is something which, as I have said, can not be permitted with impunity.

I do not know how extensive the organization in this city is. I understand there are 107,000 Government employees in Washington. The head of the organization is a man named Steward, who, I believe, is a Government employee. He is their walking delegate, their lobbyist, their generalissimo; and I say this in no disrespect of that gentleman, although he must be held responsible for this propaganda.

Now, let us see what his revenues are. I do not know; but if we assume that his organization numbers 100,000 members and he obtains monthly dues of 50 cents apiece, then his organization commands $50,000 a month, or $600,000 a year—quite a respectable fund. The dues may be but 25 cents, if you please, but that would amount to $25,000 a month, or $300,000 a year——

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHELAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. I have learned from the literature of the Federal employees' union that the dues are 50 cents a month, or $5 a year if paid in advance.

Mr. THOMAS. I had that impression, Mr. President. I do not know whether or not the head of the Washington organization is the head of the organizations all over the country, but the fact remains that of the money which the Government pays these employees and which they say they can not live upon, the enormous sum of $600,000 is to be devoted, among other things, to politics, to disseminating literature against or circulating demands for the defeat or the reelection of this, that, or the other Member of Congress. Hence, in view of the perils which such a condition involves and the certainty that these practices will beget imitation quite in proportion to the development of weak-kneed Senators and Representatives when confronted with them, what may we expect for the future? We should meet it at the threshold, and if we have failed to do so, then to meet it at its present stage of development.

I think, Mr. President, I can say in this connection that the great majority of the employees of this Government are in sympathy with this amendment. They will not say so; they dare not say so, since political and social excommunication might follow. One Government employee told me that she joined her union because she was warned that unless she did she might never hope for promotion. I have no doubt that is true, generally speaking. That is coercion; and the only relief that employees can obtain from such requirements is through the action of the Congress; otherwise they are helpless.

Mr. President, this is a branch of a still larger political movement to which I shall refer for a few moments. Shortly after the enactment of the railroad law, or during the last days when that measure was under consideration, and doubtless because of the certainty of the acceptance of the report of the committee of conference, the American Federation of Labor announced its entry into politics, its purpose being to punish enemies and reward friends. Its official declaration, signed, I think, by Mr. Samuel Gompers, was published about that time; and I ask leave to insert it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LABOR LAUNCHES MOVEMENT FOR UNITY AT THE BALLOT BOX—AMERICAN FEDERATION ANNOUNCES ENTRY INTO POLITICS—WILL PUNISH ENEMIES AND REWARD FRIENDS, IS DECLARATION.

Organized labor's announcement of its entry into politics, a call to "all lovers of freedom to marshal their forces in defense of their rights and ideals," and to all trade-unionists and their friends to unite in defeating those seeking office who are hostile or indifferent to the rights of labor, to-day was being sent broadcast over the country.

The declaration, issued officially by the American Federation of Labor, after reciting what it termed "vain efforts to secure remedial and constructive legislation for the interest and welfare of the toilers," denounced Congress for its "failure to do its duty" and its "repression of labor."

"Scorned by Congress, ridiculed and misrepresented by many Members of both Houses," the announcement said, "the American labor movement finds it necessary to vigorously apply its long and well established nonpartisan political policy. The American Federation of Labor announces its determination to apply every legitimate means and all of the power at its command to accomplish the defeat of labor's enemies who aspire for public office, whether they be candidates for President, for Congress, for State legislatures, or any other office."

NONPARTISAN COMMITTEE NAMED.

The appointment of a national nonpartisan political committee which will mobilize the trade-unionist movement was announced, and the campaign will be started immediately. The work will begin in the primaries and will be carried through to the general elections. Each aspirant for office, the announcement said, will have his record "analyzed," and those regarded as favorable to labor will be supported regardless of party affiliations, while those antagonistic to the labor movement will be opposed.

The labor organizations' declaration was adopted at the conference of trade-union representatives here in December. The conference was authorized at the last convention of the American Federation of Labor.

Announcement of its decision was made in an official circular embodying the conclusions of the federation's general committee, which has been in session here several days. This circular will be distributed to trade-unionists in every State through the local unions, by which it will be called also to the attention of friends of organized labor.

ALLEGES RIGHTS ARE THREATENED.

"The inherent rights and principles of our people are threatened," the circular begins.

"The free institutions of our country are menaced.

"The ideals of democracy are in danger.

"The Congress of the United States has failed to do its duty. It has failed to meet the emergency. It has given encouragement and support to autocratic and reactionary policies. Its dominating thought has been the repression of labor.

"Every effort to secure remedial and constructive legislation has been strangled. Every appeal for redress has met with subtle and open hostility. The Halls of Congress have been used by labor's enemies to foster and spread a vicious propaganda against the efforts of the toilers to exercise their normal and lawful activities for the protection and promotion of their interests and welfare. Labor has appealed for relief in vain.

"The hour has arrived when those who believe in the maintenance of democratic institutions must marshal their forces in defense of their rights and ideals.

CONDITIONS REGARDED "INTOLERABLE."

"It is intolerable that a people who spared no cost to make the world safe for democracy should be forced to submit to any restriction of the glorious liberties inherited from the founders of our Nation. The perpetuation of our fundamental rights and the enactment of essential constructive legislation demand the election of men, regardless of their political affiliations, who are truly representative of American ideals of liberty.

"Conscious of its responsibilities, impressed by the grave problems resulting from the Great War, the American Federation of Labor, at its annual convention in June, 1919, adopted a reconstruction program. This program defined the essential industrial policies and legislative enactments required to establish a full measure of justice and opportunity for labor.

"Because of grave emergencies which arose since that convention it became imperative that the representatives of organized labor and of farmers should assemble and confer to devise ways and means for safeguarding their rights and liberties as free men and citizens. On December 13, 1919, a conference of representatives of labor and of farmers met in Washington, D. C.

"This conference expressed 'labor's grievances, protests, and demands.'

PLACES BLAME ON CONGRESS.

"No favorable legislative action upon the recommendations contained in the American Federation of Labor reconstruction program, or those expressed at the December conference, has been taken by Congress. Instead, many Congressmen have endeavored to enact legislation providing for compulsory labor. Despite the patriotism and sacrifice of the masses of labor of America during the World War, under the guise of antisedition laws the effort has been made to repress free association, free speech, and free press.

"Scorned by Congress, ridiculed and misrepresented by many Members of both Houses, the American labor movement has decided to vigorously apply its long and well established nonpartisan political policy.

"Confronted by a succession of hostile Congresses, the American Federation of Labor in 1906 announced its historic 'bill of grievances.' This was followed by a vigorous and successful nonpartisan political campaign. In 1908, 1910, and 1912 the same program was energetically applied. As a result many of labor's enemies in Congress were defeated and all of the essential legislation in 'labor's bill of grievances' of 1906 was enacted.

ASKS "CONSTRUCTIVE LEGISLATION."

"Constructive legislation has never been so necessary as at present. Never has it been so essential to secure the defeat of labor's enemies and the election of its friends and supporters.

"Sinister forces are already actively engaged in efforts to confuse and nullify labor's political power. Their object is to divide the labor vote so that the election of reactionaries and enemies of labor will be assured. Unless labor holds steadfastly to its nonpartisan political policy, the enemies of labor will be successful in their efforts. Labor can not, labor must not, permit its political strength to be divided in the present crisis. Organized labor owes allegiance to no political party. It is not partisan to any political party. It is partisan to principles—the principles of freedom, of justice, and of democracy.

"It is the duty of trade-unionists, their friends and sympathizers, and all lovers of freedom, justice, and democratic ideals and institutions to unite in defeating those seeking public office who are indifferent or hostile to the people's interests and the rights of labor.

"Wherever candidates for reelection have been friendly to labor's interests they should be loyally supported. Wherever candidates are hostile or indifferent to labor's interests, they should be defeated, and the nomination and election of true and tried trade-unionists or of assured friends should be secured.

DEFEAT OF ENEMIES IS AIM.

"Complying with the instructions of the last convention and the labor and farmer conference of December 13, 1919, the American Federation of Labor announces its determination to apply every legitimate means and all of the power at its command to accomplish the defeat of labor's enemies who aspire for public office whether they be candidates for President, for Congress, for State legislatures, or any other office.

"The American Federation of Labor calls upon all affiliated and recognized national, international, and brotherhood organizations, State federations of labor, central labor bodies, local unions, and labor's friends and sympathizers to unite and give loyal support to the nonpartisan political campaign now set in motion.

"This political campaign must begin in the primaries. The record of every aspirant for public office must be thoroughly analyzed, stated in unmistakable language, and given the widest possible publicity. Labor's enemies and friends must be definitely known. To this end the American Federation of Labor has created the national nonpartisan political campaign committee, and it now calls upon all affiliated and recognized labor organizations to create district and local committees and to cooperate with the national committee and coordinate its efforts.

"The future welfare, the very ability of the trade-union movement to carry on its work for humanity, depends upon the success of the campaign herewith inaugurated.

"There can be no hesitancy.

"There must be no turning aside.

"The time for vigorous and determined action is here."

GENERAL COMMITTEE IN CHARGE.

The general committee in charge of the campaign consists of the executive committee, the eight vice presidents of the federation, James Duncan, Quincy, Mass.; Joseph F. Valentine, Cincinnati; Frank Duffy, Indianapolis; William Green, Coshocton, Ohio; W. D. Mahon, Detroit; T. A. Rickert, Chicago; Jacob Fischer, Indianapolis; Matthew Well, Chicago; Daniel J. Tobin, Indianapolis, treasurer of the federation; John Donlin, Chicago, president, and William J. Spencer, Washington, secretary of the building trades department; A. J. Beeres, Washington, secretary of the metal trades department; John W. Hays, Indianapolis, president, and John J. Manning, Washington, secretary, of the union label trades department; James Lord, Washington, president of the mining department; Bert M. Jewell, Washington, acting president, and John Scott, Washington, secretary of the railroad employees' department; John P. Frey, Norwood, Ohio, editor International Molders' Journal; Mrs. Sarah A. Conboy, New York, secretary United Textile Workers; Miss Anna Fitzgerald, Chicago, president of Women's International Labor League; Miss Melinda Scott, New York, United Felt, Panama, and Straw Hat Trimmers and Operators; and Miss Anna Neary, Baltimore, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders.

Mr. THOMAS. It is a somewhat passionate announcement, embodying amid much eloquence a series of charges and statements which can be excused when emanating from men laboring under great excitement, but which, in my judgment, are largely imaginary. Generally speaking, the claim is that the rights of labor and its demands for legislation have been constantly disregarded and neglected by the present Congress, as a result of which the American Federation of Labor is compelled, for its protection and preservation, to take part in the coming political campaign, which, it declares, must begin in the primaries.

A day or two after the publication of that manifesto, Mr. Gompers, speaking in a neighboring city to a gathering of shipyard workers, promised them every assistance of his organization in forcing the Government to continue the war-time shipconstruction program to its logical conclusion, giving the United States the greatest merchant marine in the world—an assurance, I may say, Mr. President, which receives my hearty commendation.

"We propose to move ahead no matter what obstacle is placed in our way," said Mr. Gompers, referring to the campaign. "The labor movement can not stand still; it must of necessity progress."

"It is a policy just the reverse of that in every other country," the speaker asserted, describing the liberal movement in Europe. "It is your duty to see that this tendency toward autocracy is curbed. In our fight you can expect the bitterest opposition from every enemy of labor—especially from every standpatter, reactionary, and some damn fools on the 'Hill.'"

That last reference, in all probability, being to the Congress, or those Members of it who have incurred Mr. Gompers's displeasure.

J. A. O'Connell, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, referred to antistrike legislation as a deliberate attempt to enslave labor through compelling workmen to remain on the job against their wills. "We must prepare to clean house," the speaker said. "Labor is entitled at the very least to an even break in representation in Congress."

Announcement of the federation's decision to wage an active campaign, he said, already has led Congressmen to review anxiously their records, but he warned these that labor would do its own reviewing.

The convention adopted a resolution favoring Government ownership and operation of the American merchant marine, and another proposing that three members of the board supervising operations be representative of the men employed in the industry.

I might add, Mr. President, a number of clippings relating to this subject, as I have quite a considerable number of them here; but I will not burden the RECORD with more than two or three others.

I have here an editorial from the World, the date of which I unfortunately omitted to record, entitled "Functioning perfectly." This editorial was inspired in some degree by the aggressive attitude of the American Federation of Labor toward the coming campaign. I will read the editorial:

"FUNCTIONING PERFECTLY."

Strikes and lockouts referred to the United States Department of Labor for settlement in the year of 1919, we are told, involved 2,300,000 workers and cost them in lost wages upward of $100,000,000. This is rather startling. But we are further told these cases constituted "only a small percentage of the actual number of strikes." They did not even include the steel and coal strikes.

Thus the actual number of workers involved in strikes during one year must have been several times 2,300,000. Thus their wage losses must have been several times $100,000,000. What the employers lost is not even guessed at, but it must have been many times what the workers lost. What they lost altogether would unquestionably run into the billions of dollars. And it was an absolute loss. It was a loss that will never be recovered. It was a loss, moreover, which only accentuated the general cause of the strikes and made still more unbearable the costs of living.

And these uncomputably enormous losses to labor, to capital, and to the whole industrial society of the United States were suffered under a "machinery" for regulating hours and wages, which Mr. Gompers now speaks of as tending to "function perfectly"—so perfectly, indeed, that it should not be interfered with by any schemes of arbitration or peaceful adjustments as proposed by the President's Industrial Conference!

Several millions of workers, including many of those already affected by these great losses, now appear as planning new strikes to overcome the unbearable burdens in living costs imposed by yesteryear's upheavals and idleness. What can be their opinion of that "machinery" of Mr. Gompers which for them functions so "perfectly"?

Mr. President, if I read aright the evolution of the present threatened political movement, it is largely due to the antistrike clauses of the railroad bill, which the House unfortunately eliminated, and to the issuance of a writ of injunction against certain officials of the United Mine Workers of America by Judge Anderson at Indianapolis last December, the one indicating the correctness, if I may so say, of my diagnosis in 1914 of the provisions of the Clayton antitrust law upon the subject of injunctions, and the other indicating the independence of Congress and the exercise of its own matured judgment upon a subject of great public concern affecting every man, woman, and child in the United States, all of whom are dependent in greater or less degree upon the constant operation of our transportation system. The American Federation of Labor, incensed by these things, has used them as the basis of a political propaganda which may have been contemplated before and probably was. Of course these are but a small portion of the alleged grievances which, taken together, would indicate that the wage earner was not only unprotected by the laws of his country, but that they had been designed and framed with the effect, whether intentional or otherwise, of degrading him to the level of a common chattel.

Some days afterwards Mr. Gompers announced his "14 points," in imitation of a very celebrated personage of contemporaneous American history, one of the greatest of American Presidents, upon which the New York Tribune make this comment. The editorial is entitled:

THE GOMPERIAN FOURTEEN.

The 14 points of the political program of Mr. Gompers not only make a formidable array, but in one respect are superior to their prototype. They are, in the main, specific and understandable. Their details do not fade away into a fog of vagueness no eye can penetrate.

Mr. Gompers would have open income taxes openly arrived at; Federal licensing of all corporations; Government loans at low rates for home builders; a graduated tax on all usable lands above the acreage used by the owner; higher income, inheritance, and land taxes; Federal subsidies for education, with teachers permitted to organize; rigid public control of business credits; public ownership and operation of all public and semipublic utilities, including docks and merchant marine; Government development of all unused water powers; a constitutional amendment under which laws passed by Congress or legislatures when nullified by the courts could not be nullified a second time if repassed; no troops for service during industrial disputes; and, finally, making it a felony for any employer to hamper the organization of a labor union or to oppose its striking.

We pass over other matters as to which Mr. Gompers is rhetorically emphatic but not definite. But even thus deleted his program is reasonably inclusive. During the Gomperian era it would be requisite for all to have union cards, and when everyone had one the warfares of society would, of course, be between the rival unions. Gang fighting would take the place of tribe fighting. Steel workers would march against coal diggers and masons boycott carpenters.

During the war Mr. Gompers was alive to the common rights of men, but in peace time he is at the old job of assuming that somewhere are stores of wealth or groups of willing workers that everyone can easily live on if unionism becomes universal. The venerable leader of American trade unionism can not see that for the success of his system it is indispensable to have outsiders.

The Republic is based on the principle that community citizenship is more important to a man than class or vocation citizenship. It is time for Mr. Gompers and for all others to get back to full allegiance to this simple but most vital truth.

And it is, Mr. President, as vital as it is simple. Community citizenship is more important to a man than class or vocation citizenship, a fact neither recognized nor contemplated by the labor party. This is to be deplored. But I must confess, Mr. President, that the American Federation has precedent for its action. Its manifesto does not chronicle the first time that class interests have set out to secure control of the Congress or of the Presidency. It is not the first occasion wherein the people have had to contemplate the consequences of threatened Government control by privilege, because it is an unhappy truth in our political history that more than once great business and industrial aggregations, not openly, as Mr. Gompers does, which is to his credit, but through subterranean influences and by the use of aggregated wealth, have laid siege to the citadel of this Republic and occasionally captured its outer ramparts. No man denounced those plans and purposes more constantly, more vigorously, more eloquently, and more effectively than the venerable head of the American Federation of Labor. I recall in many campaigns of the past not only his virile denunciation of these unconstitutional and class methods of attempted control, but his graphic picture of the consequences of their success in terms far more vivid and eloquent than I can hope to imitate. Labor may well say to capital, "The villainy you teach me I will execute, and it shall go hard, but I will better the instruction." But that is not American.

Mr. President, in my humble way and in the limited sphere of my activities, I have for the past 40 years to the best of my ability fought against these monopolistic tendencies, and defied, as best I could, the effort to establish privilege in America as the governing force of control; and so long as I live I shall continue to oppose these efforts from whatever source they may emanate.

This is a country, Mr. President, without classes, in Government at least, and no class as such—financial, social, industrial, or otherwise—can be safely intrusted with the supreme power in this country without very seriously undermining our institutions and weakening the American concept of republican government, a concept which, I am I glad to say, is common to both the great political parties of the Nation.

That sort of thing is hateful to me, Mr. President, no matter who its advocates and beneficiaries may be. Autocracy is hateful, whether it assumes plutocratic form, corporate form, or the form of democracy. One of my reasons for rejecting the treaty was the fact that it creates a class as a privileged part of the international concert, endowing it with particular authority, singling it out as the peculiar beneficiary in a great scheme designed for an enduring world peace.

We can imagine the response of this country had the treaty made similar provision for the organized wealth of the world, or, if you please, for its banking or transportation or professional interests. It is not democratic. Not only so, Mr. President, it is opposed to every modern conception of true democracy.

I regret very much, Mr. President, that this great industrial organization, always opposing privilege and the exercise of uncontrolled political power when advanced from some other direction, should now demand, and, if possible, secure, the same authority, wield the same weapons, and exercise the same power the attempt to secure which by others it has so frequently and so successfully opposed. Whatever is wrong is wrong, no matter who advocates it. Whatever is right is right, regardless of its championship, and if it be wrong to submit the authority and the destinies of this Republic to any specific element of its people, the fact, Mr. President, is not altered by the circumstance that some other source or influence seeks the same end by the same processes.

But what is the grievance demanding such drastic remedies?

Let me for a moment ask what it is, in fact, which the National Congress has failed to do for labor; because, if we are to take these manifestoes literally, it has done nothing. I have no time to review the enactments of the Congress for the past quarter or half of a century, and single out the many laws which have been placed upon the statute books in the interest of those who depend upon their physical energies for a livelihood; but I make the statement without hesitation that the legislation of the Congress of the United States during the past 30 years has more and more been inclined to yield to the requests as well as to the demands of labor, until the time has come when the only things remaining are subjects which must be provided against upon the principle of national security and national preservation.

I do not believe in class legislation. Neither party believes in it, if we are to accept their declarations upon the subject. But, unfortunately, our actions do not square with our words. Congress has been prone to special legislation ever since the Constitution was ratified, sometimes in one direction, sometimes in another, sometimes in several directions by the same Congress. When corporate power was at its height, that power could practically dictate the legislation of the Congress, and it took advantage of the opportunity wherever its interests or supposed interests so demanded. There is no question about that. The influence assumed protean form and has done as much, Mr. President, to bring about the present condition of industrial unrest as any other one thing in our legislative history. This influence controlled, because the Congresses depended upon it for a continuation of power and places. Just as soon as the power began to wane, just so soon did Congress abandon its possessors.

In 1917 Congress passed the eighteenth amendment, the prohibition amendment. For many years prior to that time the liquor interests controlled our legislation upon the subject. They did so because they possessed, or Congress supposed they possessed, the balance of political power in the country. But as one State after the other enlisted under the banner of prohibition, so did one Member after another see the great light of a new dawn; and if a Senator can not perceive a change in public sentiment upon any subject as quickly as anyone, my observation of the last seven years has been decidedly misleading.

Of course, as the States, one after the other, fell into the prohibition column, it became quite apparent that the prohibition sentiment was in control, and we hastened to get out of the wet. I did not intend that as a pun, although it is true in a double sense. As a consequence, the prohibition amendment was adopted. The manufacturer of intoxicants was not even compensated for his losses for stock on hand. His pursuit was banned, and to-day a man carries a flask in his traveling case at the peril of his limb and perhaps his life. We saw the great change, we followed it, and prohibition became an accomplished fact.

That is equally true of what for want of a better term we call the labor movement in America. As the power of the organization waxed and its membership extended, so were its demands on the Congress duly heeded, and we transferred or extended our practice of enacting special legislation and establishing class privilege. As a result our statute books are disfigured with a series of class enactments that, in my judgment, are violative at least of the spirit of the Constitution. I shall not enumerate them. Suffice it to say that we have not been able to pass a bill through the Congress since I have been here carrying with it appropriations to be expended in the workshops and laboratories and manufactories of the Government without attaching to it the celebrated stop-watch exemption. We have been unable to legislate against the trusts without exempting labor organizations from the operation of the law. We interfered in the great railroad crisis of 1916 and enacted the Adamson law and abandoned the rest of the President's program because labor opposed it, notwithstanding the assurance of the Democratic majority that it would receive favorable consideration. We have made the effort to deprive the courts of the country of the use of their prohibitive processes, whatever the emergency may be, as against wage earners organized and engaged in strikes. Yet it is said that we have done nothing for labor.

I did not support these measures; I could not do so in conscience. But a majority of both Houses thought differently. Now, because some of us hesitate to go further, because we refuse to always bow the knee to Baal and, as independent Senators and Representatives, to obey the demands and register the decrees of outside authority, we are all to be retired to private life, a new Congress consisting of men devoted to a particular class of people is to succeed us, its members pledged beforehand not to support the Constitution of the United States but to accept its legislative program as prepared by those who are to enjoy its benefits.

I will not do it. The moment I can not represent, in accordance with my own judgment and my convictions, the people who sent me here, the moment I am obliged upon matters of legislative concern to substitute for my judgment the interests and desires of others, whether I approve them or not, that moment I will gladly retire to private life. Why should we have representative Government at all if the representative is to be shorn of his independence and of the right to exercise his own judgment, however erroneous, upon matters of public concern?

I go further and declare that a man who would accept a position in this body, or the body at the other end of the Capitol, bound in mind and body to the course he shall here follow, a course outlined and dictated by a privileged class, is not only unfit to be a Member of the American Congress, but is not entitled to the privileges of American citizenship. A Congress composed of such membership would be a travesty upon republican institutions, it would be the antithesis of representative government, it would mark the beginning of the end of official independence and legislative integrity.

In this connection let me refer briefly to the career of one of our most eminent Members, who is scheduled for political execution. I will preface it by reading this clipping from a paper published two or three days ago:

SENATOR CUMMINS MARKED FOR DEFEAT BY LABOR MEN.

Senator CUMMINS, of Iowa, is one of the Members of Congress whom organized labor will attempt to defeat in November, according to L. E. Sheppard, acting president of the Order of Railway Conductors, who is now in Washington attending the railroad wage conference.

Senator CUMMINS was the author of the antistrike provision of the railroad bill which was thrown out in conference.

The headquarters of the railway conductors is at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and it is said that this union will organize the fight against Senator CUMMINS. Mr. Sheppard said, however, that union labor had not yet decided on a candidate to oppose Senator CUMMINS, whose term will expire next March.

Mr. President, I do not exaggerate when I say that the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is one of the most eminent, one of the most useful, one of the most patriotic, Members of this body. He served his State for two or three terms as governor with eminent ability and signal success. He is a sincere and conscientious statesman, devoting all his time and energies to the duties of the great office with which he has been honored more than once by his appreciative constituency. He has brought to the discharge of his responsibilities a mind enriched by years of study, reflection, and experience; he is qualified both by nature and by education to intelligently discharge the duties of his position here and is thoroughly equipped with all the qualifications of an American legislator. He has been the friend, the extreme and unshakable friend, of organized labor ever since I have had the honor of his acquaintance. He has gone so far in supporting their demands as to subject himself to the quiet criticism of some of his associates, none of whom, however, ever had a doubt of his integrity, his honor, or his purity of purpose.

The Senator from Iowa virtually had charge of the antitrust bill in 1914, when it was under consideration here. It was nominally in charge of the former Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], who depended upon his colleague for the analysis of its provisions, the defense, both legal and practical, of its contested recitals. The evolution of its many and difficult provisions was largely the work of the Senator from Iowa. On this floor he prepared and introduced an amendment which was adopted, specifically reciting that labor was not a commodity. That was the first appearance of that statement in any legislation of which I am cognizant. He was the author as well of the exemption of labor and agricultural associations from the operation of the antitrust law. I do not think it is too much to say that but for the Senator's vigorous, earnest, and persistent advocacy of those amendments they might not have passed. The Senator from Iowa was upon the committee of conference, stood by his amendments, and succeeded in retaining them in their original form. But he has offended Mr. Gompers, so he must walk the political plank in November.

It would seem, Mr. President, that ordinary gratitude and common justice would require some allowance, if not a little sympathy, for that Senator if in after life he may have fallen from grace and has failed to measure up to the Gompers standards of labor legislation; but no, his services are forgotten, the man is repudiated. Like a squeezed lemon, he is to be thrown aside. He must give way to a more obsequious individual, because, forsooth, he framed and championed the railroad bill which has just gone upon the statute books.

Mr. President, I know of no Member of this body, unless it be the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who has given as much thought and attention to problems of railway and inland water transportation as the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. Since he became chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce he has devoted practically all his time up to the good hour when the bill finally became a law to the consideration of one of the greatest and most serious problems of legislation that ever confronted the Congress. Under his guidance a bill was finally prepared, reported favorably, and placed upon our calendar.

The bill was not entirely satisfactory to anyone, but it was the best compromise possible. It was not prepared in a moment, in a day, in a week, or in a month. It was the result of a long and patient series of hearings in which was represented every phase of every proposition subsequently adopted or rejected. The wage earners and the capitalists alike were welcomed to the committee's rooms; each and every one of them was given all the time desired. After securing this wealth of information, the bill, by the painful process of additions and eliminations, finally reached a form where it commanded the vote of a majority of the committee.

One of its most beneficent provisions related to strikes and made provision against their occurrence on lines of transportation, while thoroughly safeguarding the welfare of the operative. That was championed by the Senator from Iowa upon the floor in an argument which, to my mind, was absolutely unanswerable; for I can not assent, Mr. President, to the proposition that the right, whatever the grievance, to throw this country into turmoil and subject great communities to want and starvation is consistent with the integrity of the Union or with the larger general rights of all the people. However, I have no time to elaborate that view now. I shall probably do so on a future occasion. The Senator had the courage of his convictions, and as a representative of the people he believed that his duty, under his oath of office, required him to support that measure and he did so. For that, although the clause went out in conference, he is to-day pilloried by labor and politically ostracized by a large element in his State, whose indictment against him in its final analysis is that he did his duty as he saw it after due and full reflection and without regard to personal consequences.

Mr. President, I would be more than human if I should say that I did not prefer to see a Democrat from Iowa returned to the Senate at the next election, if such a thing were possible; that is a feeling that is common to all men who entertain my political convictions; but if the State of Iowa, under these circumstances, shall repudiate its senior Senator, it will serve notice that its representatives in the Congress of the United States must hereafter submit to the mandates of organized labor whatever they may be and regardless of consequences to them or to the remainder of the people of the country; it will serve notice upon the others that the independence of the representative is not only no longer required or expected, but its assertion will be punished by repudiation if exercised at all. This the people of Iowa will never do. Mr. President, that will not be done of any honest man, in my judgment, by a single State in this Union, provided we meet this issue as it deserves to be met and appeal to the judgment, the reason, the confidence, and the patriotism of the citizenship of this country.

If I am not mistaken about this, and if the next Congress shall be chosen by Mr. Gompers, as he says he intends it shall be, to consist of men subject to his orders and obedient to his decrees, the first bill to be introduced and at once enacted should read as follows:

REVISED OATH OF OFFICE.

You do solemnly swear that you will support and defend the constitution and by-laws of the American Federation of Labor as construed and understood by the president thereof; that you will support all legislation approved by and defeat all measures opposed by such president; that you will otherwise conform your public action to his wishes and requirements, and should you at any time refuse or fail so to do you will resign. Subject to this qualification, you do also solemnly swear that you will support the Constitution of the United States and faithfully perform all duties imposed upon you by law. So help you God.

The Constitution itself should be amended so that the enacting clause of all our legislation shall read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the American Federation and of the United States.

An oath such as I have outlined will comport with this new species of proposed legislative control. The present oath can not be observed if compliance with these new demands is to be abjectly made, for the Constitution is designed for all of us. The Senate of the United States and its companion Chamber at the other end of the Capitol were created by the Constitution to meet the needs of all men and women in America, and the oath which the Members are required to take comports only with the exercise of their sound judgment here, due regard being given to all phases of every subject coming within our jurisdiction and demanding legislative consideration.

Mr. President, I have already occupied two hours of your time; I have much to say upon this subject which I have not remotely considered; but I am so confident that the opportunity will be offered in the near future to do so that I shall not longer postpone the final consideration of the bill.

I feel very deeply, Mr. President, upon this subject. If I did not I would not speak of it. I regard it as one of the profound and far-reaching movements which can be properly and permanently disposed of only after full analysis, without passion, without personalities, and without prejudice.

I realize that a great organization, said to have a monthly income of $4,000,000, with its ramifications all over the country, and claiming a membership of between four and five million voters, is a formidable combination for any man or party to confront, and if I thought that the units composing it were all in sympathy with the purpose of its rulers I should contemplate the immediate future with some apprehension; but the average citizen of the United States, whether he be a member of a labor organization, a laborer, a farmer, a professional man, or a capitalist, is and must be, first of all, an American, and such, I flatter myself, he is. If so, then reason and reflection will teach him that the exaltation of one class in America, which means the degradation of all others, will sooner or later react upon those responsible for such a mighty and sinister change and hasten the very consequences which such action is intended to prevent.

Of course, such a plan leads to a democracy pure and simple, and a democracy acting through the volume of the mass, without the interposition of representatives or delegates, inevitably becomes a despotism of the most malignant character, where the rights of the minority are not only not respected but flouted and trampled under foot, where the man who talks the loudest and promises the most is the leader, where property rights are overthrown, where justice is denied to the weak, and the immediate impulse of the moment becomes the ruling principle of the majority, only to give way to something more entrancing. History from its beginning, Mr. President, is replete with instances of oppression; and if it be true that history is but philosophy teaching us by example, then we should reflect very seriously over the melancholy fact that no pure democracy, great or small, ever outlived the ravages of time or long survived the uncontrolled and conflicting passions of those composing it.

Mr. President, I can not close without again acknowledging that there is much precedent in our political history, possibly much occasion, for this proposed labor movement in politics. Of the right of every man to participate, either in an organized way or as an individual, in the campaigns of the country there is no question.

Of the right of these organizations to select the candidates whom they will support, there is no question. I am not criticizing that. I refer to these organized movements, backed by tremendous funds, and designed for the punishment of men whose crime is that they have sought to obey the dictates of their conscience, who have conducted their duties here to the best of their ability, and with due regard for the people as a whole. I know that sometimes the avenues of political action have been closed, and that whenever that occurs the passions, the prejudices, and the desires of those denied the enjoyment of their political rights must find a vent in some other direction; and just here let me repeat, as I have heretofore said, that the exclusion of duly elected representatives to the legislative bodies of this country because of their political beliefs is worse than indefensible; it is contrary to the policy and the genius of this country. If an organization can not select its representatives by complying with the requirements of the law governing everyone, and applicable to all, without encountering the penalty of exclusion in the event of success, then such an organization has no recourse but to resort to extra-constitutional measures to secure the recognition of its purposes and the accomplishment of its objects however lawful they may be.

I am not familiar with the details of the political opinions of certain representatives of the State of New York who yesterday, for the second time, were denied their seats. If they are socialists, of course I reject their doctrine. If their political beliefs embody a change in this form of government, I will go as far as any man in opposition to such indefensible ambitions. But if there be such in the United States constituting the majorities in legislative districts anywhere they have the right with Democrats and Republicans to nominate their tickets, register their voters, cast their ballots at the polls, and receive certificates of election in the event of success. This is a country of majorities; and if there be such majorities reflecting, as I think, upon their intelligence or their patriotism, they are majorities nevertheless, and their verdicts lawfully registered are entitled to the respect of all men.

Our Republican brethren are a majority here. They regard Democratic doctrines and Democratic principles as inimical to the welfare of America as we know theirs to be. Because they so regard our beliefs and our methods they may with equal propriety exclude us from our seats here, our views, our objects, our political principles being, in their judgment, inimical to the country. Where will you draw the line?

Precedents, Mr. President, and especially pernicious ones, always perplex and disturb the law. They are equally vicious in the political world. No! Let us in this country meet every question, however dangerous, by discussing and dissecting it, by determining its integrity or the lack of it, and by submitting its analysis through arguments to the court of last appeal—the great body of the American electorate.

I grant you that I have no right to preach treason, revolution, bloodshed, or crime anywhere. I grant you that if I have violated the laws of my country by lifting my hand against its institutions, by advocating riot, insurrection, and murder by others, or in other fashion, my personal qualifications should be carefully investigated before being permitted to enjoy public office. That is one thing, but to exclude arbitrarily because, forsooth, I represent parties and combinations believed by others to be sinister and menacing, is to establish a policy which must inevitably lead to riot and revolution. I want nothing of that sort.

The sooner we get back to the principles and policies under whose benign influence this country progressed and the happiness of its people was assured, the sooner we heed the great truth that increased production, thrift, and economy are the fruitful parents of prosperity, and that we can not reacquire that standard of industrial progress which we enjoyed a few years ago, the better it will be for this generation and the generations that are to come.

Mr. STERLING. In the first place, Mr. President, I want to express my sympathy with very much that has been said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. No one would more jealously guard Federal employees from any influence that would weaken or destroy their allegiance to the Government which they serve than I myself.

But, Mr. President, Federal employees, like other employees belonging to trade-unions, for example, are workers. It may be that their work is in an office and at a desk. It may be in the Ordnance Department or in the Navy Department, and where the labor is manual rather than mental.

As between workers of all kinds, whether they be in Federal or whether they be in private employ, there must be some bond of sympathy. We can not ignore that, and I think it is well that there should be some bond of interest and sympathy between workers of all kinds, whether known as Federal employees or workers outside of the Federal service.

I think it was natural in the first instance that those in the employ of the Federal Government should form unions. They formed them for the purpose of bettering their conditions—conditions relative to wages, conditions relative to working hours, and so forth. They saw that the American Federation of Labor had the same great object, namely, to improve the conditions of the members of the various labor unions throughout the country, and in order to accomplish what might be termed a common end and purpose, they saw no harm in affiliating themselves with the American Federation of Labor.

I do not sympathize by any means with everything the American Federation of Labor has done. I think sometimes, and especially under its present leadership, it has yielded to the demands of the radical element in labor where it should have been firm and taken a strong stand against it, and in support of law and of the Government. It may have been deemed expedient at the time to yield; but therein was the great mistake, which I think organized labor generally sees. There has been something of an awakening among the workers themselves in this regard, and there is now regret upon the part of a very large element of organized labor that the head of the Federation of Labor did, for a time at least, yield to the demands of the extremists and defend their action.

Mr. President, the Federal employees have kept themselves aloof from the Federation of Labor so far as participation in or the encouragement of any strike is concerned. If I read the record aright, the Federation of Labor itself, Mr. President, can not call a strike or order a strike. Its constitution will not permit it. It may indorse a strike, it may disapprove of a strike, and I think the record will show that the Federation of Labor itself has many times been a restraining influence, an influence against a strike, and especially an influence against any violence incident to or growing out of a strike.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. Has not the Senator noticed that of late years, under certain legislation affecting labor, strikes of all kinds and character seem to have been sustained by the American Federation of Labor, until it had finally become so oppressive to all branches of business, labor having proposed to starve and freeze the people into submission, and so forth, that finally the United States Government took a hand, and since that time there has been some slight notice of less activity in sustaining strikes? This is perhaps what the Senator alludes to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I would not say that they have always been sustained by it. I think many times they have been sustained by it.

Mr. WARREN. If there are exceptions, they prove the rule; there are so few of them.

Mr. STERLING. They may have been sustained when they ought not to have been sustained; I agree to that; but I think I have heard of many instances where they have discountenanced a strike and where, by their influence, they have prevented a strike.

But now, Mr. President, coming to the point of the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], and, briefly, I want to call attention to the constitution of the National Federation of Federal Employees, section 2 of which reads as follows:

> The methods for attaining these objects shall be by petition to Congress, by creating and fostering public sentiment favorable to proposed reforms, by cooperation with Government officials and employees, by legislation, and other lawful means.

Now comes this proviso:

> Provided, That under no circumstances shall this federation engage in or support strikes against the United States Government.

Mr. WARREN. There is nothing, however, to prevent them from associating themselves with and supporting strikes other than those against the United States Government.

Mr. STERLING. I will call attention to that a little later and to the statement of the president of the National Federation of Federal Employees.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, he will also find, by examining the papers before him, that everyone who belongs to that federation must pay his dues every month, and out of that a small portion goes to the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; but I will come to that, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. WARREN. In other words, while those two or three lines prevent them from striking against the Government, they do not prevent interferences from time to time. Let me say, if the Senator will allow me, that I do not know of anyone who has the slightest objection to any class of workers, all of whom are occupied in the same line or similar lines of work, federating with each other in a legitimate way and bringing their wants before the public and before legislators; but I do not like to see employees of the Government associated with an outside, or, you might say, a mother, federation or a parent federation the government of which and the rules and practices of which always support, no matter what happens, no matter what crime is committed, a member of that association, and which, so far as we know, have never crossed off the name of a man who belonged to that association, even though convicted of crime, and no matter what the crime may have been.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Wyoming that the Federation of Labor, or the officials, the very high officials, of the Federation of Labor have done some most reprehensible things. I sympathize entirely with what the Senator says in regard to the attitude toward those charged with and even convicted of crime. But, Mr. President, that has little to do with the particular question before the Senate, the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

I want to read from the constitution of Federal employees' union No. 2. I previously read from the constitution of the National Federation of Federal Employees. It is practically the same. Section 1 of article 1 provides that—

> The objects of this organization shall be attained by petition to Congress, by creating favorable public sentiment, by cooperation with public officials and employees, and by other lawful means: Provided, That under no circumstances shall this union engage in or support strikes against the United States Government.

As I said in the outset, Mr. President, there are some reasons why these people, thinking they might find some relief, might improve their wages and working conditions, were led to affiliate themselves with the Federation of Labor.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow an interruption?

Mr. STERLING. In a moment I will yield. I think, Mr. President, many of them now feel that they have been mistaken in that regard, and from conversations I have had with employees in the Federal service, and particularly with the postal employees, I am led to believe there is a process of education going on now in regard to the nondesirability of their union being affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. They are seriously considering whether such affiliation is of any benefit.

But the point I make is this, Mr. President, that if we should adopt this amendment to this bill now it would create resentment and a feeling of ill will toward the Government; there would be the disposition to believe that the Government had failed to treat them fairly and justly or consider the motives under which they entered these unions in the first place, and which later became affiliated with the Federation of Labor. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. First, Mr. President, as to those two or three lines in the various constitutions, that they will not strike against the Government, does the Senator consider that any American citizen makes a concession when he agrees that he is not going to undertake to run the Government—that he will not strike against the Government? Of course, it might be said of a man that he is not going to sin against the laws of his community or against the Government. Of course he will not, because the strong arm of the Government will prevent. That is a supposition to begin with. It must be known that, unless revolution shall occur which will throw us into the hands of unlawful unions or associations, of course men can not strike against the Government, because the Government authorities will not permit it. So I do not consider that there is any concession there.

On the other hand, if the Senator will allow me, I agree with him that there is a spirit manifest among the employees caused by several things. One is the attention which has been brought to the matter by the action of the Boston policemen and firemen.

Mr. STERLING. Caused by late developments.

Mr. WARREN. That and developments in this city have set them to thinking. I may say, personally, that not only one of these employees, but dozens, have appealed to me to say that they are tired of being badgered as they are by walking delegates, who tell them that they must come into the union or they will not receive any attention, they will never receive promotion in the various bureaus unless they belong to the union and pay their 50 cents every month, part of which goes to the American Federation of Labor.

On the other hand, there is another effect it has on employees, according to my information. The employee who believes that in joining this union he has joined an organization which is going to protect him, instead of attending to his duties and seeking promotion by efficiency of service, seeks it through the federation, and the consequence is you will find them in dozens, grouped together, talking about the federation and whether the president or vice president of the union is going to do this or that.

Furthermore, when matters come up like the bonus, you could read every morning and every night in the newspapers what the federation president was going to do, and what he would say about it, and so forth. The president knew the committees would take care of it. But the idea is to make all employees believe that they must belong to that union and pay their dues and obey the orders, in order to first obtain and then hold and then be promoted in their positions, notwithstanding the falsity of such premises.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, a word or two further, and to the point.

I have here a statement entitled "Our relations with the American Federation of Labor," put out by Federal employees' union No. 2, with hearquarters here in Washington.

It is in the form of a questionnaire, and I find this question, which partly answers some of the statements which have been made here. It reads:

Can dues paid by the National Federation of Federal Employees to the American Federation of Labor be used in support of strikes?

(1) Not 1 cent of the dues paid by the National Federation of Federal Employees to the American Federation of Labor is or can be used for the support of strikes.

(2) The National Federation of Federal Employees pays to the American Federation of Labor 1 cent per member per month upon the full paid-up membership, as required by the constitution of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. POMERENE. What is the document from which the Senator is reading?

Mr. STERLING. The document is entitled "The Federal Employees' Union. Our Relations with the American Federation of Labor," put out by Federal Employees' Union No. 2, with headquarters here in Washintgon.

The sum so paid is used by the American Federation of Labor for defraying its ordinary expenses of maintaining its central organization.

I want to quote from a letter from the head of the National Federal Employees, Mr. Steward. Reference has been made to him in this discussion. He had read in the RECORD the speech of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], and he makes some comments on that speech. I am not going to read the entire letter, but portions of it. He says:

There is no possible way in which the American Federation of Labor can call Federal employees, or any other human beings, out on strike. The American Federation of Labor can not call a strike. It can merely indorse or approve a strike which has been called by the union of the trade concerned. The only power that can call a strike of Government employees is Government employees themselves, and they have voluntarily pledged themselves not to do so, and have so stated in their constitution.

That is the constitution from which I read a little while ago.

Senator MYERS is quoted as saying that "some of the union locals have a nonstrike provision, but I understand there is a growing tendency to eliminate this." This is another misstatement. The nonstrike clause was written into the national constitution when the National Federation of the 60 separate locals then existing was formed, and although the constitution has been amended and revised at each national convention since, elimination of the nonstrike clause has never been so much as mentioned.

Not only is this the fact as to the national constitution but the local constitutions must be submitted to the national office for approval before adoption, and every one of them has contained the nonstrike clause, with no suggestion of a desire to eliminate it.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. I entered the Chamber while the Senator was reading that letter. I do not suppose anyone will contend that it is within the power of the Federal employees' union to eliminate by proper action the nonstrike clause in their charter; I do not suppose anyone will contend that it is irrevocable; but I know that in some of the meetings and conventions of the employees' unions there has been discussion about the advisability of eliminating the nonstrike provision, and that at least one Federal employees' union has taken a vote on eliminating it. It did not carry, but the majority against elimination was not very great.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I can not think that there is any danger whatever of a single local union of Federal employees eliminating the antistrike provision from their constitution. It may have been broached, it may have been discussed, but it is never carried in any local union nor do I believe it ever will.

I read further from this letter. I will say to the Senator from Montana that this is a letter from Luther B. Steward, national president of the Federal employees' union. I read:

Senator MYERS's misstatements on the subject of strike funds are, if possible, more incorrect than the rest of his assertions. He says "the Federal employees affiliated with the American Federation of Labor paid their quota of strike benefit dues to the coal strikers." Neither the National Federation of Federal Employees nor any of its locals paid one cent to the support of the coal strike, nor did the coal miners or the American Federation of Labor so much as ask them to do so. But to go beyond this attempted particularization of Senator MYERS'S, let me say that not one cent of the dues paid by the National Federation of Federal Employees to the American Federation of Labor is, or can be, used for the support of strikes. The per capita tax of 1 cent per member per month paid by the National Federation of Federal Employees to the American Federation of Labor is used by the latter to defray its ordinary expenses for maintenance of its central organization.

The foregoing statements have been printed and circulated by our organization in the form of the circular herewith inclosed.

From that I read a moment ago.

I am handing you also herewith a copy of the constitution of the National Federation of Federal Employees and of the membership obligation, which you will note is printed on the application for membership. There is no "secret work" in our organization.

In conclusion, permit me to say, in behalf of our members in reply to Senator MYERS'S allusions to "men and women fed and clothed by the Government," as self-respecting citizens and wage earners, we object to that characterization. The time when workers could be held to receive their means of livelihood as bounty from their employer, be that employer man or government, disappeared with the days of slavery. The National Federation of Federal Employees exists to serve this Government by giving to Government employees, through the cooperation which comes from their own sense of the brotherhood and equal rights of man, the highest ideals of efficient public service and social justice.

Mr. President, I do not think this bill is any place for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana. If this proposition is to be considered by Congress, let it be in some independent bill which we will have the courage to discuss and insist on enacting on its merits alone. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I only heard part of the letter of Mr. Steward read by the Senator from South Dakota, having entered the Chamber during the course of the reading. Of course, whether or not any dues were actually paid by the Federal employees' unions to support strikers during the coal strike, the steel strike, or other recent strikes I can not say with positive knowledge and authority; but I have received some credible information to the contrary of that which the Senator from South Dakota has just read to the Senate. There are other phases of this matter about which there are contradictions.

It has been stated that it is impossible for a member of the Federal employees' union to resign from the union. My statement, heretofore made, to the effect that it is impossible has been contradicted; but I have a letter, a part of which has heretofore been put in the RECORD, from an official of one of the Federal employees' unions to certain members who wanted to withdraw, stating that it is impossible to withdraw and that resignations are not accepted. If that is not true, this official had no business writing the statement. If the statement that members can not resign is true, then the contrary reports are incorrect.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am not in favor of the pending bill and will vote against it. Ordinarily one who is opposed to a piece of legislation would vote for obnoxious amendments so that they might load the bill down with such amendments, making the legislation more objectionable, but it seems to me that if this legislation is going to pass it ought at least be fair to the employees.

I do not think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] would be just to the employees that might come under the provisions of the bill. I am not opposed to unions nor organizations. I believe that it has been necessary in a very large measure for the Government employees to organize if they were going to be adequately taken care of by Congress—and why not? Every other business in the country is organized. Commercial organizations in every city of the Union are organized into a still larger organization known as the United States Chamber of Commerce to look after the business interests of the country. The merchants of the country are organized so that the interests of the merchants might be looked after and their conditions bettered. The cattlemen, the farmers, and the lumbermen, and every other interest in the country is organized.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that the amendment which I have offered does not in any wise prevent the formation among Federal employees of their own associations and unions composed entirely of their own membership. It does not prevent them from meeting together and organizing in any way whatever so as to advance their mutual interests.

Mr. HARRISON. I have read the proposed amendment, and I will get to that proposition presently. Every interest in the country is organized for their betterment, protection, and development. They have organized not only to obtain larger profits but to extend their various businesses in the country and to place them on a sounder basis.

The time was when rural carriers in America were paid $300 a year. The increase of those salaries was very slow. Finally they organized and brought pressure on Congress; that is, they presented their case to Congress, their grievances, so to speak, and their salaries have been constantly increased. In my humble opinion, if the rural carriers had not organized and presented their claims to Congress they would to-day be getting much less than they are now receiving.

The clerks of the post offices of the country received very little salary; they are receiving to-day, in my opinion, an inadequate salary; but they organized and presented their claims to Congress; Congress looked into those claims and has increased their salaries.

In these days of high cost of living I believe it is the salaried man, the man who is working upon a fixed wage, who has the hardest fight to make "ends meet." A man with a wife and children, earning $100 or $125 or $150 a month, can not live under present conditions. Tell me that these men might not organize in order to present their just claims to Congress! It is placing them in an unfair condition not to permit it.

The Senator from Montana says he does not object to that, but he objects to any employees of the Federal Government belonging to any organization that might be affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. That is what he means. His amendment does not state the American Federation of Labor, but that is the proposition at which he is hitting.

Mr. MYERS. I have so stated in my speeches.

Mr. HARRISON. I have not said that the Senator had not so stated in his speeches. I say that his amendment does not state that.

Mr. MYERS. The amendment is intended to apply not only to the American Federation of Labor but to any other outside higher organization of labor.

Mr. HARRISON. I hold no brief for the American Federation of Labor; they have done some things, no doubt, that were wrong; but I believe that in the main their purposes are good; that they are trying to protect and better the condition of the laboring people of the country. If the laboring elements of the country—and when I speak of them I mean farmers, artisans, laborers—were not organized, God knows what would become of them. So I shall not enter into a condemnation of the American Federation of Labor. It will perform a very splendid service so long as it operates along sane and just lines and chooses safe and wise leaders. I am, therefore, opposed to the proposition that simply because an employee of the Federal Government belongs to a union or an association or an organization that is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor he should be excluded, if this legislation should pass, from the benefits of the legislation.

Some of these organizations which have been founded by the Government employees have been carrying, for instance, an insurance feature. There are men in the employ of the Government who belong to a particular union or association or organization who have been paying insurance dues for, perhaps, almost a generation. After they have done that for years and years, after they have sacrificed themselves and been compelled to practice the most rigid economy because of their contributions to meet insurance premiums, to provide now that they shall be deprived of benefits under the pending bill when they are to be retired simply because they belong to a union that may have been affiliated with the American Federation of Labor is to impose a great wrong upon them.

There is no justice in the proposition to penalize men in the employ of the Government who have been paying insurance premiums for years and years and who have now, perhaps, reached the age where they might come under the provisions of the pending bill and be retired, by depriving them of that benefit because they belong to an organization which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

It has been shown by the Senator in charge of the bill that all of these associations and unions are merely organized to increase the salaries or to better the conditions of their membership; it is expressly stated that they do not believe in the strike and that they will not strike against their Government. Of course, if the employees of the Government should organize and attempt to strike against the Government, the strong arm of the Government should come in and deprive such people of the opportunity of working for it; but that is not the condition; that is not the situation. Not an instance is cited where these employees because of their affiliation have attempted to strike and deprive the Government of their services, but the bugaboo is held out, because, perhaps, of some prejudice against the American Federation of Labor.

I am opposed to the amendment. It will work an injustice upon a class of employees who, at least, should be treated equally as fairly and as justly as other employees of the Government in the event the pending legislation is enacted.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am very anxious for an early disposition of the pending bill and I had not intended to speak on it at all. In reference to the pending amendment, however, I desire to say that it does seem to me there ought to be a stop to the baiting of organized labor as such and especially as proposed by this amendment. If the Congress of the United States believes that Federal employees should not affiliate themselves with the American Federation of Labor, there is a way by which Congress can forbid their doing so, and do it directly. I do not myself believe that it should be done, but, at any rate, it ought not to be done in such indirect fashion as is proposed by the amendment.

When, Mr. President, has the American Federation of Labor become an outlaw? It is just such attacks as this that increase the unrest in the country and give to extreme radicals the argument they so much desire, that Congress selects organized labor, selects those who toil, as marks for injustice, but when it comes to legislation granting special privileges to capital they point to the fact very often that the very Representatives in Congress who are always attacking organized labor never raise their voices against special privilege to organized capital.

I say the amendment is an unfair way to deal with this question. So long as it is lawful for organizations of Federal employees to affiliate with organized labor they ought not to be deprived of the benefits of the retirement bill because they may do that which is entirely lawful for them to do. If the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] desires to prevent Federal employees through their organizations from affiliating with the American Federation of Labor, let him bring the matter directly before the Senate. Congress has power to deal with it directly. It ought not to deal with it in any such fashion as is here proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. The Senator from Montana has suggested the absence of a quorum. Is the roll to be called on a yea-and-nay vote or to ascertain the presence of a quorum?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll in order to develop the presence of a quorum.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Spencer
Capper	Kendrick	Nugent	Sterling
Comer	Knox	Page	Sutherland
Cummins	Lenroot	Phelan	Swanson
Curtis	Lodge	Phipps	Thomas
Fernald	McKellar	Pomerene	Trammell
France	McNary	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Gay	Moses	Sheppard	Warren
Gore	Myers	Smith, Md.	Watson
Harrison	New	Smoot

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. OVERMAN and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina answered to their names when called.

Mr. KEYES, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. CULBERSON, and Mr. NELSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the presence of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. GLASS, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. MCCUMBER entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. Upon that amendment the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to say that I have a good deal of sympathy with this amendment; but I do not feel that the matter should become involved in the pending legislation. Whatever is done so far as a retirement system is concerned, I do not think we should involve in it any other matter. It seems to me that it would be more in consonance with sound legislation if the proposition involved in the Myers amendment should be determined upon its own merits alone.

I have not been very apprehensive that the Government employees, or any considerable number of them, would seriously think of striking against their Government. I realize that there are some of them that would, but I am very happy in the belief that that is a negligible number; and I have not any hesitancy in saying that when a man is favored by being invited to serve his country, whether in military life or in civil life, he ought to appeal to reason to accomplish his ends. The instrument of the strike ought never to be used against a government, and the man who uses the strike against the Government for the purpose of enforcing a demand falls little short of treason.

This Government is intended to serve all the people, and I believe that as far as human government is capable of serving all of the people it does. I have often criticized acts of government, and I shall do it in the future, if I live; but the Constitution has prescribed methods by which to correct irregularities or abuses. It has authorized the change of the Constitution when the people want it changed in harmony with the methods provided in the instrument itself. If the laws are unsatisfactory, Congress can be petitioned to change them; and if the Congress is unwilling to change them as they ought to be changed we are all grateful for the fact that Congressmen and Senators can be retired, and they ought to be retired when they do not do that which the majority of the people want done. The right to strike by employees of the Government, when once recognized, means that they can strike during a time of war as well as during a time of peace, and think what it means! It means the crippling of the Government. It means tying its hands, whether in war or in peace. It means that men under certain leadership are not content to appeal to the Congress, but they will usurp the functions of the Congress or the administrative branch of the Government in order to enforce their demands.

Mr. President, if I were to assert the right of any individual or any set of individuals not connected with the Government to make demands upon the Government, and, if the Government did not see fit to grant them, that they could resort to other than constitutional or legal means to bring them about, those who now claim the right on behalf of the Government employees to strike would deny the right to anybody else. There can not be any question about that; and I am satisfied that the Government employees themselves, when rightly led by loyal men, will never embarrass their Government by striking.

I have on several occasions commended the courageous and patriotic conduct of the great governor of Massachusetts for the way in which he dealt with the policemen of Boston, and I shall never hesitate to commend him for his course so long as I live. It was an arrant piece of presumption for anyone outside of the State of Massachusetts to tell the governor of Massachusetts that "I, an outsider, will come in and intervene between you and the policemen of Boston in order to bring about peace." The people of Massachusetts resented it, and I commend them for what they did. I hope there may be 48 governors in 48 States made up of the same kind of material in all the years yet to come.

Mr. President, I have said thus much in order that I may make perfectly clear my position on that subject. I do not want any doubt about it, and I will meet the issue if it is ever necessary to meet it.

But, Mr. President, that is a question which, it seems to me, we should decide upon its own merits, and not have it involved with legislation of this kind. I trust that the substitute measure which I have presented, or some compromise of it, may be adopted. I feel that the pending measure is drawn along wrong lines. But if we decide in favor of a retirement scheme, some pension system, and I think we need it, let it stand or fall on its own merits.

More than that, let me say this: I think that now the power is lodged in the President and in the executive heads of the departments to discharge every man in those departments from the service if he refuses to function, and particularly if he does it as a result of a conspiracy for the purpose of embarrassing the Government. I do not think I am wrong about that, and that is another reason why it is perhaps not necessary for us to deal with the subject matter of the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], for whose great courage, ability, and integrity I have the highest admiration.

Mr. President, we are going a great way, it seems to me, in this legislation. I recognize the necessity for a retirement bill. I became convinced of that years ago after I had thoroughly gone into the conditions as they exist in these departments. After having studied this question, as I have during the past number of years, I have been somewhat surprised, if not amused, at some of the statements which are made by alleged experts who were called to tell us what this bill was going to cost, and who so camouflaged their figures that it takes an expert to find out what they mean.

It occurred to me that we are going pretty far in legislation when we attempt to retire men at 60 years of age and 62 years and 65 years. I want to take care of those who, by reason of years, or by reason of long and arduous service, have become disabled. But if 60 is the measure of ability to serve, then probably two-fifths of the United States Senators ought to be retired to private life. We have four judges of the great Supreme Court of the United States now past 70. They could retire. All of them are able men, and as American citizens we have a just pride in the great work they are doing. It may be that once in a while they render a decision, out of the abundance of their legal knowledge and information, which we do not approve; but that does not justify the wholesale criticism that we sometimes hear of this great court. We would all regret to see the four great jurists to whom I have referred retire from that great bench. Yet those men are to-day working not 8 hours a day but 10 and 12 often, and my belief is that for the most part they are better able to render their great service now than when they went on the bench. Yet we talk about retiring men at 60 years of age. I do not know what I would think of myself if I were asking to be relieved of toil at 60 years of age. I hope I may never see the day, so far as I myself am concerned, when I can not toil and am not willing to toil.

Sixty years! Let us remember when we are considering this subject that most of these men and women who are now 60 years of age are probably doing better service than they ever did in their lives before, and most of them will continue to do good service for 10 years longer. Yet we want to retire them. If they become disabled and have seen long years in the service, then I think we ought to take care of them. But the man who wants to retire at 60 years of age, if he is in good health, ought never to have been permitted to connect himself with the Government. He is not made of the right stuff.

I remember when I had the honor to be the chairman of this committee that I was waited upon by a gentleman who said that he was interested in a couple of ladies who were in the departments, and they wanted to know if I would object to reducing the retirement age to 55. I am glad I did not know who those women were, and I did not ask their names, because if I had known who they were I would have been sorely tempted to do what I could to separate them from the service. It is a great thing to serve the Government of the United States, and the obligations are not all on one side. I do not know that the Government drafted any of these people into the service; certainly not many of them. They took the jobs because they thought they were the most promising jobs they could get, because they had an ambition to serve the Government, because they could not get anything better to do. And now that they have their positions, when there are many other men and women throughout the country who would be most happy to have them, it seems to me that they ought not to ask to be retired at 60 or at 62 or at 65. Three score years and ten is the allotted length of man's life, and my observation has been that with reasonable employment, under good conditions, any man or woman is better off working than in idleness. The idle rich are most pitiable objects to me, but the idle poor are even in a worse condition, because the idle rich, with their surplus money, can buy their amusements, their diversions, but the idle poor can not.

So it seems to me that these men and women, if they are consulting their own good fortune—and I am speaking only of those who are now capable, physically and mentally—it would be better to have them employed than otherwise; and I will go as far as any of my fellow men to relieve the crippled, the sickly, the distressed, whether in the employ of the Government or out of it.

Mr. President, some days ago I gave a statement of what it would cost the Government to carry out the provisions of this bill if it is passed as now pending, with these age limits of 60, 62, and 65. I do not want to be personal in this, but I think that if the Senate of the United States was about to retire the distinguished chairman of this committee because he happens to be past 65, he would resent it; and I think I echo the judgment of every Senator who has had the pleasure of coming in contact with the distinguished chairman of the committee when I say that he is able to do better work to-day than he did the first day he came into the Senate, and if we were going to suggest to him that he retire because, forsooth, by reason of his advancing years he was no longer capable of serving, what would he think?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Ohio that the bill is so drawn that I might serve my Government, were I a Federal employee, 10 years longer.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not think the bill was drawn as it is because his type of a man wanted to serve for a longer or a shorter term.

Does anybody really believe that a man 60 or 62 or 65 years old ought, as a matter of compulsion, to be required to retire if he is in good health? Ought he to be given the option to retire if he is in good health and can be of service to himself and to his family as well as to the Government?

As I said, the man who wants to retire at 60 or 62 or 65 years of age, if he is in good health, ought to have retired from the service before he entered it.

Let us see what this would cost with these figures as they are, assuming that there is an assessment of 2½ per cent. The first year it would cost the Government $4,585,000. It would run to the peak in 35 years, and it would cost the Government $34,513,000, and then it would decline to the seventy-third year, when it would reach $28,205,000 per year. The total cost for 60 years to the Government would be $1,500,160,000. The total cost for 77 years would be $1,980,216,000.

I here want to make a correction. When I discussed this subject before I made the statement, as the RECORD will show, that these figures included not only the cost to the Government but the amount which would be contributed by the employee. I was in error as to that. The figures which I gave were the cost to the Government alone.

The average for the 77 years would be $27,015,792.20 annually to the Government to retire men at 60 years, 62 years, and 65 years of age.

No, Mr. President, in days like these when we have to sustain great burdens of taxation, when there is this feeling of unrest lest these burdens shall be unduly increased, let us not cripple our man power or our woman power by taking away from the productive branch of our people these able-bodied men and women at these years. It is a mistake to do it, and it will be regretted if we undertake it.

I think that is all I care to say on the subject at the present time. I felt that frankness required me to state exactly what my position was with regard to the pending amendment, and I think those who read will be able to understand me.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, whatever disagreement there may be with reference to the amount that will be paid by the Government, I think all will agree that whatever sum is paid will have to be paid by some of the people of the country who are a part of the Government. I think it will have to be conceded that one class of people must pay, whatever the sum of money may be, to another class. Then, the question immediately arises whether from the standpoint of justice we ought to tax one class of people to pay a pension to another class in civil employment.

It so happens that under our present system the labor is performed by the average Government clerk from about 9 o'clock in the morning to half past 4 in the afternoon, allowing, I think, half an hour for lunch. Those are the people to whom it is proposed to give a life pension after they have completed their service with the Government.

I turn then from that class of our citizens to a class constituting about one-third of the present population of the United States, those living in the rural districts. Being somewhat acquainted with the latter class, I know that their services generally range from about 7 o'clock in the morning until 8 o'clock in the evening. I find then that I am asked to tax that third of the population who work from 7 o'clock in the morning until 8 o'clock in the evening to pay a life pension to the other class who work from 9 o'clock in the morning until half-past 4 in the afternoon. I do not know how it strikes other Senators, but it appeals to me as being a little unjust to the man who puts in the long hours of labor.

I then look at the next question which appeals to me. Prior to the war the average earning of a Government clerk was almost double the average earning of clerks in other employments in the country. I take the one-third of our population who live in rural districts and then I will add to it the clerks in all the civil employments, in the stores and other places throughout the United States, who generally work from 8 o'clock in the morning until about 6, 7, or 8 in the evening. You ask those people again, whose average earning capacity with equal ability was a trifle more than one-half of what these employees of the Government received, that they shall go down into their pockets and pay a life pension to the other class that is doing less and that is earning the most. I can not work myself up to a condition where I can commit that injustice against the great majority of the working people of the United States.

Therefore, Mr. President, I shall not vote for the pending bill. I am opposed to class legislation, and I am bitterly opposed to making a man who works 12 or 14 hours a day and often 16 hours a day, with an earning capacity of 50 per cent less than that of the man who works from 9 o'clock until half-past 4, go into his pocket to pay a pension to the man who does less work for greater remuneration.

I know the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] says that the Government will benefit by it, because the Government will get better service. It has been properly stated by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] that any department may discharge any person when that person becomes unfit to perform his duty. That is exactly what we have to do in civil life. That is what every employee throughout the country has to submit to, and he does not get any pension. Then why, let me ask the Senator from Ohio, who has made such a splendid argument against allowing a pension to any class, should we vote to pension a special class of the American people?

So long as there exist in my State, a purely agricultural State, people who are working from 7 o'clock in the morning until 8 o'clock in the evening to make a living, and whose remuneration I know is not one-quarter that which the Government clerks receive, I shall never vote that they shall pay the bill to give a life pension to this particular class that we want to make Government favorites of.

Mr. President, I have briefly stated why I can not vote for the bill. Senators can put it through. It comes up every year. They can vote for it and create this class legislation. It is only the first wedge. It will be followed by an old-age pension bill, and with justice, because the vast majority of the American people will be restive under a principle that selects a particular class and pensions them for a service that they have performed which is not different from what every good citizen performs in doing his own work honestly and fairly. They will never submit without a battle to a continuance of this policy unless they are included in it. Then you will be voting to pension every person in the United States who has reached the age of 65 years; the efforts which human beings make everywhere to provide for their old age, to care for themselves and those dependent upon them, will be greatly lessened, and the country will suffer as the result. There may be but one vote against this measure, and if there is but one vote against it that vote will be mine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. Upon this question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, before the roll is called may we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to insert after section 14, on page 17 of the printed bill, a new section, to be known as and numbered section 15, and to read as follows:

SEC. 15. That none of the provisions of this act shall apply to and none of its benefits shall be received or enjoyed by any person who is a member of any association, society, organization, or union of Government employees which is affiliated with, subject to, or a member or component part of or acknowledges the authority of any higher or superior body or institution of organized labor; and, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Pensions shall make and enforce rules for the enforcement of this section and governing the method and character of proof required in order that employees may receive the benefits of this act.

Amend further by renumbering subsequent sections in accordance herewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 3, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in the midst of the bounding impulse of life on every side of us we come before Thee aspiring for life, the life eternal, the life that is hid with God in Christ. We pray that we may enter into a closer and diviner fellowship with Thee, that we may through the spirit of this time, embodying it in our hopes and aspirations, have a consciousness of the power of God that rests upon us. Guide us in the discharge of the duties of this day. Help us to fill up the measure of our responsibility. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, April 1, 1920, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.
